The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is not a quorum voting.

Mr. MITCHELL. In that case I am ready to vote.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator can not vote after the result is announced.

Mr. BLAIR. I hope there will be no question raised as to a quorum.

Mr. PLATT. Let the roll be called again. I have no doubt a quorum will appear on the next vote.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask unanimous consent that the vote be retaken without a formal call of the roll.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That can not be done; the rule forbids it.

Mr. HOAR. The Senate has required a very large number of Senators to be absent on committee service. It is known that Senators are not from their seats without excuse. I hope, therefore, the facility the Senator from Tennessee proposes will be granted.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask unanimous consent that the vote be taken over without any formal roll-call.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is objection made to the proposition to retake the vote; the Senator from Vermont objected.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I withdraw the objection. If the Chair can get along with the rule, I will say nothing.

Mr. HARRIS. Then a motion to adjourn or the calling of the roll is the only thing in order.

Several SENATORS. The objection is withdrawn.

Mr. HARRIS. If the objection is withdrawn, I ask unanimous consent that the vote be retaken.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The Chair will put the question again on the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire.

The Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BAYARD (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN]. If he were here, I should vote "nay."

Mr. LOGAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. RANSOM]. Were he here, I should vote "yea."

Mr. ROLLINS (when Mr. MAHONE's name was called). The Senator from Virginia [Mr. MAHONE] is paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY].

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 17, nays 31; as follows:

YEAS—17.

Allison,	Harrison,	Miller of Cal.,	Van Wyck,
Blair,	Hill,	Miller of N. Y.,	Windom.
Dawes,	Hoar,	Mitchell,
Frye,	Lapham,	Plumb,
Hale,	McDill,	Rollins,

NAYS—31.

Barrow,	Davis of Ill.,	Hawley,	Platt,
Beck,	Davis of W. Va.,	Ingalls,	Pugh,
Brown,	Edmunds,	Jackson,	Sawyer,
Call,	Garland,	Jonas,	Sewell,
Cameron of Wis.,	George,	McMillan,	Vest,
Cockrell,	Groome,	Maxey,	Voorhees,
Coke,	Hampton,	Morgan,	Walker.
Conger,	Harris,	Pendleton,

ABSENT—28.

Aldrich,	Farley,	Kellogg,	Saulsbury,
Anthony,	Ferry,	Lamar,	Saunders,
Bayard,	Gorman,	Logan,	Sherman,
Butler,	Grover,	McPherson,	Slater,
Camden,	Johnston,	Mahone,	Tabor,
Cameron of Pa.,	Jones of Florida,	Morrill,	Vance,
Fair,	Jones of Nevada,	Ransom,	Williams,

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT].

Mr. MITCHELL. I desire to offer an amendment to come in after the word "month" in the seventeenth line of the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills:

A bill (S. 889) to provide for the erection of a public building in Jefferson City, in the State of Missouri; and

A bill (S. 1785) for the relief of David Mordecai and J. Randolph Mordecai, composing the commercial firm of Mordecai & Co., of Baltimore, Maryland.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 3335) for the relief of Mary A. Lee; and

A bill (H. R. 7626) authorizing the reappraisement of the steam transport-boat Planter, captured by Robert Smalls, and for a distribution of proceeds thereof.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled joint resolution (H. Res. 358) to provide for the publication of the memorial addresses delivered in Congress upon the life and character of Hon. John W. Shackelford, of North Carolina; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

CORTE DE MADERA DEL PRESIDIO.

Mr. PLUMB. I ask to be indulged for a moment. I have been absent all day and should be absent now, but this is a matter that ought to be attended to at once. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands be authorized and directed, during the Forty-eighth Congress and in vacation, to make the investigation committed to it under date of the 26th instant concerning a certain grant of land in the State of California, and for the purpose of such investigation shall have power to send for persons and papers and to employ a stenographer, who shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.

I ask for its immediate consideration.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What do the words "Forty-eighth Congress" mean there?

Mr. PLUMB. I adopted the language of another resolution. The Forty-eighth Congress commences on the 4th day of March, I understand. This only extends the committee during the vacation.

Mr. HOAR. Do you mean the persons now composing the Public Lands Committee?

Mr. PLUMB. For the purposes of this investigation.

Mr. HOAR. Are they persons who will be members of the Senate after the 4th of March?

Mr. PLUMB. All but two.

Mr. HARRIS. What is the question before the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas asks consent to offer a resolution.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Kansas will not be sworn in until next December; and can he act?

Mr. PLUMB. There will a quorum without me whose terms do not expire.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let the Committee on Public Lands have leave to sit during the vacation.

Mr. PLUMB. The Senate has already committed the subject-matter of this resolution to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. HOAR. It seems to me that the proper way, the parliamentary way, to get at that, and it is well to follow precedents and rules, is to have a special committee, with the understanding that those members of the Committee on Public Lands who hold over shall be appointed on that special committee.

Mr. PLUMB. But in this case the Senate has already directed the Committee on Public Lands to do this thing. I am only following the original direction.

Mr. HOAR. But that order expires with the session.

Mr. PLUMB. That is true, but in the mean time it is advisable for the purpose of arresting matters that are liable to go on that it should be known whether this investigation is to proceed or not.

Mr. HOAR. It seems to me the true way would be for the Senator to embody in his resolution the names of the committee. He can put in the same men who are on that committee and authorize them during vacation to make this inquiry.

Mr. PLUMB. I will let the matter lie over until to-morrow morning. If it can be taken up in the morning hour and disposed of then, it will probably answer the same purpose.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The practice has been to authorize committees, as the Senate is a continuing body, to sit in vacation. All committees fall at the end of the session unless there be such an order. It is true the committee will not be full, but if it has a quorum it can go on.

Mr. PLUMB. It will have six members.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will lie over.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 3335) for the relief of Mary A. Lee was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The bill (H. R. 7626) authorizing the reappraisement of the steam transport-boat Planter, captured by Robert Smalls, and for a distribution of proceeds thereof, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

RATES OF PENSIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 1410) to amend the pension laws by increasing the pension of soldiers and sailors who have lost an arm or a leg in the service.

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator from Kansas consents that his resolution shall go over until to-morrow. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business. I want a short executive session.

Mr. MITCHELL. I hope not. I hope the Senate will go on and finish this bill.

Mr. HARRIS. What I desire will take only a few minutes, and I very much desire an executive session.

Mr. MITCHELL. That can be done after we get through the bill.

Mr. HARRIS. You will probably not get through with the bill for the next few days.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. CALL. I ask the Senator from Tennessee to allow me to appeal for unanimous consent on a matter to which I do not think there will be any objection. I introduced a motion to reconsider an indefinite postponement of a bill.

Several SENATORS. Regular order!

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

Mr. HARRIS. I adhere to my motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Tennessee.

The question being put, a division was called for, and the ayes were 12.

Mr. HARRIS. While I think it is rather an ungracious thing to deny me the privilege of a few minutes of executive session, I will withdraw the demand for a division and let the question go, as I do not want to develop the want of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. MITCHELL] moves an amendment to the amendment. Will he state it?

Mr. MITCHELL. I propose, after the word "month," in line 17 of the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT], to insert:

> And all persons who in like manner shall have lost the sight of one eye shall receive a pension at the rate of $12 per month, and in cases in which the injury of the one eye manifestly affects injuriously the sight of the other eye or in which the other eye shall have been partially disabled in the service and line of duty as aforesaid, shall be entitled to an equitable increase in their pension not to exceed, when the loss of sight is less than total blindness, in the whole amount, $30 per month.

Mr. PLATT. I desire to ask the chairman of that committee whether that is the exact rate adopted by the House in a House bill which passed? I am not certain about that.

Mr. MITCHELL. I have that bill before me. I did not look at it. I put $30 there, as proposed in the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire, so as to make it conform to the highest rate proposed by the amendment now before the Senate. I will look and see. [Examining.] The House passed a bill on this subject also covering cases of deafness, on the 13th of January, and I find the rate there is $25 instead of $30.

Mr. PLATT. If the Senator will make the rate correspond with the House bill I shall not object.

Mr. MITCHELL. I will then modify the amendment by striking out $30 and inserting $25. The House passed this bill, and this is in the precise language, I think, of the House bill, with one exception, and that is covering the case of total blindness, which we fixed at $72. The provision which I have sent up is more guarded in that respect. This has been examined by the Commissioner of Pensions, and if anything is to be done on it it meets his approval. I think certainly we ought to do this, for there is manifest inequality and injustice in the existing law, which gives only $4 to a man who has lost an eye in the late war. The maximum of $25 contemplates a proper rating by surgical examination.

Mr. PLATT. I do not think that is seriously out of proportion to the other rates in the bill, and I shall not object to the amendment.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Before this amendment is voted on I should like to say a word. I desire to have it distinctly understood how far the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut applies, so that there shall be no misunderstanding of this matter. It applies only to two classes of cases, that where the pension now is $18 it is made $24; but where the pension is now $24 it is made $30. All other classes, which are cases more serious by far, like amputations at the shoulder and at the hip, are not raised in the least.

Mr. PLATT. I beg the Senator's pardon. Amputation at the shoulder will be raised to $30.

Mr. VAN WYCK. The pension for loss of both arms is now $25; that the amendment does not propose to raise on the most serious cases of amputation.

Mr. PLATT. I beg the Senator's pardon again. The loss of both hands is $72.

Mr. VAN WYCK. That the gentleman does not propose to raise. So there is a class of cases where the pension is now $31.25, and that is not proposed to be raised; and that class of cases where the pension is now $36, for a more serious disability, is not proposed to be raised by this amendment. The Senator has claimed and others have claimed that there was inequality and injustice in the pension rates as they exist to-day, and yet this very amendment proposes to draw a line and increase that injustice and that inequality. If this amendment sought to reach anything that was just, it should take all the cases of the loss of limb and increase them in the same ratio that it increases the two classes of cases.

That is all I desire to say to the Senate, that they may know how far the amendment reaches. The amendment will still more increase the dissatisfaction with the present rate, because it works a clear and manifest injustice.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. MITCHELL] to the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT].

Mr. PLATT. I said that I thought I would not object to that amendment; but as I understand it is to be followed by other amendments, and as I have gone in my proposed amendment as far as I can in my conscience and judgment go, I must object to this amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania to the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. MITCHELL. My purpose is only to offer another amendment covering the cases of deafness, and upon that also the House has acted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore put the question, and declared that the noes appeared to prevail.

Mr. MITCHELL. It appears to me the Senate does not understand this matter, or has not given it sufficient consideration. The inequality and injustice under the existing law to this class of pensioners is great. We have before us gentlemen who suffer that disparity. To say that a person who lost the sight of one eye in the Army shall only receive $4 per month when we grant such liberal allowance in other cases seems to me to be so unreasonable and unjust that the Senate ought to be gracious enough to allow what the House of Representatives here propose. If we are to do anything on the subject at all I shall be glad to see some just ratio preserved. For my own part I would be perfectly willing to agree to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Connecticut if we can perfect it, but as it stands I do not regard it as of any particular advantage at all. I doubt very much the policy of enacting that amendment into law. It will leave the whole question unsettled. If we can cover this plain case of disparity in rates in existing law it will be a step in the right direction, and I shall be glad to vote for it.

I call for a division on my amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania calls for a division on the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. MITCHELL. I think I should like to have the yeas and nays. There is a demand in this country for legislation on this subject. It is important. I hope the Senate will be disposed to consider it as it has considered other measures of importance.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. INGALLS. I shall vote against this amendment as I voted against that offered by the Senator from New Hampshire, and as I propose to vote against that offered by the Senator from Connecticut; not because they may not be just, not because the pension law does not require amendment, but because if we are to do anything it seems to me obvious that we must pass the bill as it came from the House or do nothing. I am very confident that in the condition of the public business, with the capacity for debate that has been exhibited during the two days this bill has been under consideration, if we send the bill back to the House with such amendments as have been offered here, the session will close without anything being done. But believing that the rate proposed in the House bill ought to be adopted, I shall prefer to leave the inequities and the partialities to be corrected at some subsequent session.

The Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ROLLINS (when Mr. HAMPTON's name was called). The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HAMPTON] is paired with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES].

Mr. ROLLINS (when Mr. MAHONE's name was called). The Senator from Virginia [Mr. MAHONE] is paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY].

Mr. PENDLETON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY]. I do not know how he would vote, and therefore I withhold my vote.

Mr. VEST (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB].

Mr. WALKER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. HILL].

Mr. MCMILLAN (when Mr. WINDOM's name was called). My colleague [Mr. WINDOM] is paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. DAVIS].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. VAN WYCK. In addition to what I said in regard to the pairs on the last vote, I desire to say that those pairs apply to the amendments and to the bill.

Mr. PLATT. There is no quorum, I believe.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has sent to the room of the Committee on Appropriations. Several Senators are there.

Mr. CALL. I announce the pair of my colleague [Mr. JONES, of Florida] with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON].

Mr. PLATT. I am very loath to let the vote be announced——

Mr. HARRIS. No debate is in order until the result is announced.

Mr. MITCHELL. I hear it said on several sides that we might as well adjourn. I do not know but that we may as well adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Debate is not in order until the vote is announced.

Mr. VOORHEES. Let it be announced.

The result was announced—yeas 15, nays 17; as follows:

YEAS—15.

Blair,	Hoar,	Miller of Cal.,	Sawyer,
Conger,	Lapham,	Miller of N. Y.,	Sewell,
Davis of Ill.,	McDill,	Mitchell,	Van Wyck.
Harrison,	McMillan,	Rollins,

Cameron of Pa.,	Hale,	Mahone,	Vest,
Cockrell,	Hampton,	Morrill,	Walker,
Davis of W. Va.,	Hawley,	Pendleton,	Williams,
Dawes,	Hill,	Plumb,	Windom.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is not a quorum voting.

Mr. PLATT. Can there be a motion to adjourn without a call of the roll?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes.

Mr. PLATT. I suggest to the Senator from Pennsylvania that he had better move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. MITCHELL. I am not willing myself to make that motion. I believe that unless this bill is disposed of to-night it can not be acted on during this session. I am informed that the sundry civil bill is likely to be brought in early to-morrow, and if it is I see no probability of reaching a conclusion on this bill.

Mr. HALE. The sundry civil bill will be reported to the Senate in a few minutes if the Senate remains in session. That will give it an opportunity to be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There are enough Senators with the Senators in the Appropriations Committee to make a quorum.

Mr. HARRIS. I am informed that the Committee on Appropriations desire this evening to report the sundry civil appropriation bill, and I hope there will be no adjournment until they have the opportunity to do so.

Mr. HALE. It is very desirable that it should be reported, and the chairman is coming with it now.

Mr. HARRIS. I will move, if I am recognized by the Chair, that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. ALLISON. Before that is done I ask leave to report the sundry civil bill.

Mr. HARRIS. Of course I withdraw the motion.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is there a quorum, Mr. President? If not, no such motion can be made.

Mr. HARRIS. If the roll is called now there will be a quorum found present.

Mr. ROLLINS. Let us have a call of the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Chair can count the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If Senators will sit down the Chair will count. [Counting]. Forty Senators are in the Chamber—a quorum.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. I report from the Committee on Appropriations the bill (H. R. 7595) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes, with various amendments. I desire to give notice that I shall ask the Senate to take up the bill to-morrow morning immediately after the close of the morning business.

RATES OF PENSION.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 1410) to amend the pension laws by increasing the pensions of soldiers and sailors who have lost an arm or a leg in the service.

Mr. VOORHEES. I wish to say a word before the order of business is disposed of. It is perfectly manifest that if we stop here on this bill relating to one-armed and one-legged soldiers and the sundry civil bill is taken up to-morrow morning, the pension bill will be defeated, and to that disposition of this meritorious measure I do not mean to be a willing party. I have thought that we should vote down the amendments offered to the House bill, and then pass it. It is true the amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire had many merits to commend it to our favor, and if the session was in a different stage of advancement I might have voted for it; but to amend this bill is to defeat it; to send it to the House is to insure no action. Consequently I have thus far voted against all amendments, intending to press the passage of the original bill as it came from the House.

I have no fear, no trepidation, and no alarm about the amount of money that will be spent. The whole press of the country has been lecturing us upon the fact that we have too much revenue, that we have too much money in the public Treasury, that we are inclined to waste it because it is so plenty; and we have been severely criticised because of some liberal legislation in regard to internal improvements. There has been a hue and a cry for a reduction of taxation. I am in favor of reducing taxation wherever it can be properly done. I am not, however, in favor of reducing taxation or diminishing the revenues at the expense of the few veterans who are hobbling through the world on crutches or who are marching down the lane of life with empty sleeves.

As I stated this afternoon, originally there were less than 15,000 of these maimed and mutilated people. Fourteen thousand now constitute the number of those who became entitled to artificial limbs and artificial assistance. By reason of the appalling destruction of life which the loss of a limb entails, there are not half the number alive now that there were when the war closed. I hope that I may be able to some extent to allay the fears of Senators on that subject. It will not impoverish this country to give $40 a month to the few who remain and whose chance of life is curtailed by reason of this calamity on an average fifteen years of their entire lifetime.

Now, Mr. President, I am perfectly willing that the Senator shall have an executive session; I am not willing, however, that that executive session shall be a cover for an adjournment. If we can come out of that executive session and transact this business, well and good. If, however, we are going into executive session there to adjourn, so that to-morrow morning the chairman of the committee on appropriations, the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON], can claim the floor to the exclusion of this legislation, then I am against it. There has been too much expectation of the legislation that we are now engaged in for it to have this impotent and lame conclusion. Too long already a meritorious and most suffering class of people have looked with hope to the Senate to do what the House has already done. They have looked to the bill No. 1410 as they had a right to do. I have said but little on this subject, but I see at this moment the danger of the loss of this measure on which the House spent so much time and attention. If it is to fail I do not intend that the fault shall lie at my door; and if it is expected to adjourn after going into executive session, I hope we shall not go into executive session.

While the Senator from Tennessee and myself do not agree upon this measure, yet I know his magnanimity and chivalric view of questions so well that I do not believe he would press his motion for an executive session if it was to cut off the further consideration of this subject. We approach the end of it, Mr. President; we are near the conclusion; we are voting upon the important amendments; but a little while will be necessary to vote upon the bill itself. If a majority of the Senate begrudge the men on crutches and with empty sleeves the pittance of $40 a month, let us say so; if on the other hand they are willing to pay them that for their flesh and blood and bones, let us say so and be done with it. But let us not slur it over by leaving it now when we approach the last and vital vote.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I only want to say that if those who have expressed here in speech the great desire they had to pass this bill would only have given the Senate during the day an opportunity to vote upon it, we should have spent less time in discussion, and we should have had the bill through by this time.

Mr. VOORHEES. I think that criticism is well and good, but it does not apply to me, for I have not occupied five minutes.

Mr. HARRISON. I was not making any personal application of it, but I think it will be discovered by the real friends of this bill that those who have desired its passage have been keeping their seats and asking that the vote may be taken.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. MITCHELL], which failed for want of a quorum. The yeas and nays were ordered, and will be called again.

The Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ANTHONY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN].

Mr. BAYARD (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN]. Were he here, I should vote "nay."

Mr. JACKSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE]. If he were here, I should vote "nay."

Mr. PENDLETON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY].

Mr. VOORHEES (when his name was called). I vote against this amendment for the reason I gave for voting against all, not on its merits.

Mr. MCMILLAN (when Mr. WINDOM'S name was called). I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. WINDOM] is paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. DAVIS].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. MCDILL. My colleague [Mr. ALLISON] is paired with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL]. If my colleague were here, he would vote "yea."

Mr. LOGAN. If there is no quorum I will vote. I am paired, however. I vote "yea."

Mr. KELLOGG. I am paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE].

Several SENATORS. Vote to make a quorum.

Mr. HARRIS. I object to all debate during a roll-call.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Every Senator must decide for himself what to do.

Mr. HARRIS. But the way to do it is to vote or not to vote.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator is debating. I object.

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator is not debating, but is objecting to debate, and intends to object to debate under the circumstances.

Mr. BAYARD. I understand that my pair with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] has been transferred to the Senator from California [Mr. FARLEY]. Therefore I am at liberty to vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. KELLOGG. I understand the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE], if here, would vote "nay." I vote "nay."

Mr. VOORHEES. I desire to state that the Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERRY] has a pair with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. FAIR]. If he were here, I wish to state generally that the Senator from Nevada [Mr. FAIR] would vote for the most liberal pensions to the suffering soldiers of the Union.

The result was announced—yeas 19, nays 21; as follows:

YEAS—19.

Blair,	Hill,	McMillan,	Rollins,
Conger,	Hoar,	Miller of Cal.,	Sawyer,
Davis of Ill.,	Lapham,	Miller of N. Y.,	Sewell,
Hale,	Logan,	Mitchell,	Van Wyck.
Harrison,	McDill,	Plumb,

NAYS—21.

Barrow,	Coke,	Jonas,	Vest,
Bayard,	Edmunds,	Kellogg,	Voorhees,
Beck,	Garland,	Maxey,	Walker.
Brown,	George,	Morgan,
Call,	Groome,	Platt,
Cameron of Wis.,	Harris,	Pugh,

ABSENT—36.

Aldrich,	Fair,	Jackson,	Ransom,
Allison,	Farley,	Johnston,	Saulsbury,
Anthony,	Ferry,	Jones of Florida,	Saunders,
Butler,	Frye,	Jones of Nevada,	Sherman,
Camden,	Gorman,	Lamar,	Slater,
Cameron of Pa.,	Grover,	McPherson,	Tabor,
Cockrell,	Hampton,	Mahone,	Vance,
Davis of W. Va.,	Hawley,	Morrill,	Williams,
Dawes,	Ingalls,	Pendleton,	Windom.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania has another amendment to offer, the Chair understands.

Mr. MITCHELL. I have a further amendment which I propose to insert at the same place.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be reported.

The ACTING SECRETARY. After the word "months," in line 17, it is proposed to insert:

And all those who, while in the military or naval service of the United States, in the line of duty, by injury received or disease contracted, shall have totally lost the hearing of both ears, shall be entitled to receive a pension of $25 per month; and for any loss of hearing less than total deafness they shall receive an equitable proportion thereof.

Mr. MITCHELL. I desire to say that those are the words contained in House bill No. 1247. That is the amount fixed in that bill.

Mr. VOORHEES. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Pennsylvania whether he desires to amend the House bill?

Mr. MITCHELL. I desire to amend the House bill very considerably. So far I have been unable to accomplish my object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator is moving to amend the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut so that if it passes it shall be in the form he proposes. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania to the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT].

Mr. PLATT. I desire to say one word in reply to the Senator from Indiana. I think this amendment should be adopted. I have no kind of doubt that it will pass the House if the bill shall be passed by the Senate with the amendment.

Mr. LOGAN. I want to say but one word, and that is that as between this amendment and the House bill, so far as I am concerned, I very much prefer the House bill. I hope the amendment will not be adopted and that the House bill will pass as it came to the Senate.

Mr. PLATT. I ask for the yeas and nays on my amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MITCHELL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. JOHNSTON]. If he were here, I should vote "yea."

Mr. PENDLETON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY].

Mr. PLUMB (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BROWN]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. SLATER (when his name was called). On this question I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON]; but as I understand that he would vote the same way I would, I vote "yea."

Mr. VEST (when his name was called). My colleague [Mr. COCKRELL] is paired with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON]. My colleague would vote "yea" if here.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. GEORGE. I desire to announce that the pair my colleague [Mr. LAMAR] had with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. MCDILL] has been transferred to the Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERRY].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERRY] is paired with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. FAIR].

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator from Nevada [Mr. FAIR] is now paired with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. MCDILL]. I make that announcement for the remainder of the session.

Mr. JACKSON. I am paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE]. I would vote "yea" if he were present. I have reserved the right to vote to make a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Then the Senator from Tennessee had better vote.

Mr. JACKSON. I vote "yea."

Mr. PLATT. I desire to say that my colleague [Mr. HAWLEY], who is paired with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. PENDLETON], would vote "yea" if present.

Mr. MCDILL. My colleague [Mr. ALLISON] is paired with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL]. If my colleague were here, I believe he would vote "nay."

Mr. MCMILLAN. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. WINDOM] is paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. DAVIS]. Both Senators are absent from the Chamber.

Mr. MITCHELL. I understand that there is not a quorum voting. In that case I vote "yea."

Mr. KELLOGG. If there is no quorum, as the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE] would vote "yea," I vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 31, nays 9; as follows:

YEAS—31.

Barrow,	Davis of Ill.,	Hoar,	Morgan,
Bayard,	Edmunds,	Jackson,	Platt,
Beck,	Garland,	Jonas,	Pugh,

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CALL. I move to add as an additional section to the bill the following:

SEC. —. That a pension of $12.50 per month is hereby granted to all the survivors of the soldiers of the Mexican and Indian wars up to and before the year 1856.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL].

Mr. HOAR. I hope the Senator will not insist on embarrassing this question with that which relates to a wholly different war. I am in favor of pensioning every surviving veteran of the Mexican war on precisely the same terms, or on better terms, than were allowed to veterans of the Revolution, at the same distance of time from the close of that war, or on the same terms, or better terms, than were allowed to veterans of the war of 1812, at the same distance of time from the close of that war, or on the same terms that are allowed to veterans of our late war; but I am not in favor of putting upon the pension-roll of this country surviving veterans of the Mexican war whose disabilities have not been removed, and who contemptuously refuse to have their disabilities removed. I have no desire to say anything which will excite angry debate or unpleasant recollections, but the Senate know very well what I refer to when I make this observation; and if it becomes necessary it is a subject which I shall discuss with great plainness.

This proposition would put upon the pension-roll persons who contemptuously refuse the amnesty of the Government. It would put upon the pension-roll also men who are rich, hale, strong, in active and robust middle life, when that never has been done by this Government in regard to the veterans of any other war. The veteran of the Revolution was obliged to prove, for nearly forty years after that war closed, his need, and to accompany his proof with a schedule of his real and personal property. I should not for one be disposed to make such a requisition in regard to any living surviving veteran. The veteran of the war of 1812 was not put upon the pension-roll without regard to his need until the youngest surviving veteran of that war had reached the age of 78 years and most of them had reached the age of over 84 years, so that age itself was a disability. The dependent father, the dependent mother, of the soldier of our late war for the Union is obliged to prove that dependence and need in order to obtain a pension; and the veteran himself, though twenty years have elapsed, does not receive a pension except in case of a disability. Why should the survivors of the Mexican war and of the Indian wars be singled out from every other class of soldiers and have a bounty extended to them which we have not extended to anybody else?

I wish to call attention to the fact that the Senate, as I believe, has been ready, this side of the Chamber has been ready (of course those soldiers are upon the pension-rolls under the general pension law), to extend to the veterans of the Mexican and Indian wars a liberal policy, which will enable all those who are in need and who are under no existing disability to receive the pension of the Government if they desire it.

I hope that the Senator from Florida will not undertake to press an amendment which goes further.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I do not propose to detain the Senate with any discussion on this question. For four years I have been endeavoring to get some little tardy justice done to the veterans of the Indian wars and to those of the war with Mexico. Bill after bill, resolution after resolution has been referred to the Committee on Pensions, but no report has ever been obtained, either favorable or unfavorable.

I apprehend that nobody can deny, upon the principles upon which this bill is proposed to be voted for, that the survivors of the Mexican war and the survivors of the Indian wars, that conquered the territory from the savages and acquired it from foreign countries, ought to be pensioned, especially those who are in destitution, those who are a disgrace to the country, because they are left to strive in absolute penury and want, as time after time, year after year, bill after bill, resolution of Legislature after Legislature are brought to Congress appealing for this small meed of justice to men who have served their country gallantly and well and who are in absolute need and destitution. I therefore think that there can be no question that as a matter of doing justice to soldiers of another war this is a proper amendment to be attached to this bill.

There never has been an occasion when I have not aided in granting reasonable pensions through the system of special bills, which is the appropriate and proper system of relief, because a man may have lost one leg or one arm or some other member of the body and still be a capable and an efficient man, able to take care of himself and to acquire a living. A remedy has always been afforded, and it is the proper way to afford relief by special bill in Congress for a special case. I have never refused and I have voted time and again upon special bills for the relief of pensioners whose cases were special, and who required a larger amount than the amount appropriated by the general bill. In my judgment that is the proper system. No man who has been a soldier and who has done his duty gallantly and well and is in a state of suffering, should be allowed to want for the adequate means of subsistence and comfortable support. The system of special bills is the only mode in which his particular case can be reached; it can not be done by a general bill.

As I said, it does not follow because a man has lost one arm or one leg that he is not a more capable and efficient man than those not so wounded. He may have lost none, and yet be the victim of the most severe and extreme suffering and incapacity.

In my opinion the bill does not meet the necessities of the soldiers. I for one have always voted and I am always willing to vote to the full extent of the capacity of this country to pay, and to pay liberally, every soldier who is in need that amount which is necessary for his comfortable support. That is the reason why this amendment should pass, pensioning the survivors, now but few in number, of the Mexican war and of the Indian wars. The Legislature, I believe, of every State at different times has passed resolutions recommending it.

If the Senator from Massachusetts can see in the present condition of the country, twenty years after the war of the rebellion, a necessity for putting upon the amendment some condition which shall attach to persons who have not applied for and received an amnesty let the amendment be proposed, and if it is the pleasure of a majority of the Senate that it shall be passed, let it be done. There is no reason why this amendment should not be passed. If he wishes to apply to it terms which shall limit it to the indigent soldiers, to those who are in absolute destitution, let such an amendment be proposed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL].

Mr. HOAR. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SLATER. I appeal to my friend from Florida to modify his amendment by striking out "$12.50," and inserting "$8," as the rate of pension per month. That is the minimum, and it will in that respect make the amendment conform to the present laws on that subject, and I think it would be more palatable to some.

Mr. CALL. I will accept the amendment suggested by the Senator from Oregon and so modify my amendment.

Mr. HOAR. The amendment can not now be modified, the yeas and nays having been ordered.

Mr. CALL. I accept the amendment and will make it $8 per month.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL].

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I regret that the Senator from Florida has felt himself bound to offer the amendment on this occasion, not that the amendment is not in itself just and proper, and not that the people of the United States do not owe it to their own character for justice and gratitude to adopt the amendment and to enact it into a law, but it is obvious that the Senate is not now in a temper to consider this important subject.

It is true that the veterans of the Mexican war have been a long time lingering here, petitioning the Congress of the United States for some recognition of their services. They perish one by one. A great many of them are living now in the last remnants of their lives in abject poverty. I know some of them myself who are in extreme necessity. The Congress of the United States refuses to allow them an opportunity even to prove that they are in a necessitous condition, and while doing that Congress is adding by this bill more than twice the amount of money which the Senator from Florida proposes to pay them by way of addition to men who are already receiving pensions and have been enjoying the bounty of this Government for years together.

This is a crying, shocking injustice. It is an outrage upon the respectability of the American character. It is an act of base ingratitude, and it is done by men who received and have in their possession a domain brought as a dower to the people of the United States greater than Cæsar ever brought to Rome.

No set of men have ever suffered in the cause of their country so heroically, so patriotically as the soldiers of the Mexican war, for the reason that they are the only class of men who have been called to invade a foreign country. All the other men who have fought and bled and suffered on this continent have done so in the defense of their own homes and firesides; they have done so in respect to a principle which animates every honorable man in the world. A man who will not fight for his own homestead and for his own family and his own fireside is not worthy of the respect of mankind; he is not worthy of their confidence or of their bounty. When he has done so I am willing that the country shall be liberal and generous toward him. When you carry your flag into a foreign country and it is followed by the brave men who volunteer in the service of your country and they come back bearing it in victory and triumph to their own Government, laying at the feet of power in the Government of the United States a domain the richness of which is incalculable beyond all calculation, then for us to turn to those old men when they are perishing one by one and tell them that we will not grant them $8 a month with which to buy their bread will only prove the ingratitude and the baseness of this generation.

When that subject is presented a Senator rises on this floor and makes a threat that he will make some very plain remarks about the political opinions of some of the men who fought when that Senator was a boy, perhaps a youth at college somewhere. For the purpose of preventing the Government of the United States from giving those men an opportunity to keep out of the poor-house the Senator says that he will have some plain remarks to make about something that they have done since that time. Let him make his remarks; let him wage his war against those men.

Mr. HOAR. To what Senator does the Senator from Alabama refer?

Mr. MORGAN. I refer to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOAR. He certainly is not stating correctly anything I said.

Mr. MORGAN. I comprehended the Senator's remarks; I am correctly stating them. We have no right to deny to those men this contribution to their necessities in their old age and in their infirmity; it makes no difference what their opinions may be, it makes no difference what they may have done against this country. If one of them had been consigned to the penitentiary and had served out his term he would have a right to claim the bounty of this Government for services which he rendered before the stigma of conviction fell upon him. If one of them was engaged in the rebellion and has since been pardoned by the general amnesty of the Government of the United States he is restored to all his rights and privileges as freely and as fully as the Senator from Massachusetts.

This complaint against one or two individuals in the United States is constantly paraded here for the purpose of gaining an opportunity to deny justice to thousands and tens of thousands, I am afraid there are, of the survivors of the Mexican war.

Mr. SLATER. About 8,000.

Mr. MORGAN. There are about 8,000 of them. While we are bestowing money under a bill which Senators variously estimate at from five million to fifty million dollars to men who have done nothing except to serve their country around their own firesides and protect and defend them against a domestic foe, while those men professed to be, and I have no doubt were acting in obedience to one of the highest instincts and impulses of every honorable spirit in the world, while we are rewarding them and doing it properly for the service they rendered, we are refusing to reward the men who carried our flag into a foreign country, and who came back to us loaded with an empire of wealth the like of which no country ever acquired before with so little expenditure of blood or of treasure.

Sir, the results of the Mexican war to the people of the United States in actual dollars and cents is greater than any conquest that can be named which has been achieved in a single war by the Anglo-Saxon people; and we, the inheritors of this vast wealth, with overflowing coffers, with a Treasury that we are trying to deplete by every measure that we know, how refuse the bread of life to the poor men who bore this banner in their youth to victory in a foreign land, and have returned only to experience the truth that this country is ungrateful to them.

I have now said all that I expect to say on this occasion about this bill. I expect the proposition again to be trampled under foot, again to be voted down, and it will be two years, yes, it will be five times two years, before the Senate of the United States will get its consent to give those men $8 a month; and while we are refusing that we will run back upon the pension-list and we will vote a sum of money that amounts to $100,000,000 a year to men who have got no higher claim to the gratitude of this country than that they fought for their own homesteads, their own families, and their own firesides.

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. President, I shall detain the Senate but one moment. I wish to read the whole case as stated by a veteran of the Mexican war himself, which presents the case of the veterans of that war better than I could possibly do. In writing to me on the subject he says:

> I am also an old "Mexican veteran," and while I am writing to you I would beg leave to call your attention to the fact that these old Mexican soldiers are becoming few in numbers, and a majority of the number are in very indigent circumstances, while the Treasury Department is calling upon the Congress of the United States to build vaults and storehouses in which to store the precious metals taken from that vast western empire added to our country by the valor and blood of these old Mexican veterans. We are all well along down the western slope of life, and a small pension would be a God-send to many a home and family dependent on one of these old fellows. They can no longer by their labor produce anything, and we think the time has come when our claims should be recognized.

That states the whole case.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to put a question to my friend from Tennessee, who I believe to be one of the most candid, fair men anywhere to be found.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield?

Mr. JACKSON. I am through.

Mr. HOAR. Why is it that it is asked to apply to the soldiers of the Mexican and Indian wars a policy which we deny to the soldier of the late war, which we denied to the soldier of the Revolution, and which we denied to the soldier of the war of 1812? The soldier who was 20 years old in 1846 at the close of the Mexcan war will now be 56 years old, just my own age. When this matter came up before there were three of the most hale and vigorous men in the Senate, veterans of that war (one of them has since gone to his honored grave), men of vigorous health and models of manly strength, and I suppose all of them men of wealth; but I know nothing about that. There was a man in my own State, the warden of the State prison, 48 years old, a giant in strength and enjoying a salary of $4,000 a year, and there were such cases all over the country. I do not know anybody who is not willing to take the pension law as it applied to the soldiers of the Revolution thirty-six years after the Revolution closed and apply that to the soldiers of the Mexican war if they desire it, and I would make it much more liberal than that myself.

Mr. VOORHEES. What was that?

Mr. HOAR. That was to give a pension to everybody who was in need, but it required an inventory of the property of the soldier. I do not think that ought to be required. I would not ask that strict rule. I would simply have some general statement by the man himself that he needed the pension. In the case of a soldier of the war of 1812 we did not put them all on the pension-roll, as I said just now, until the youngest survivor of the war of 1812 was 78 years old, and those who survived averaged over 84. In regard to the soldier of our late war, the dependent father or the dependent mother to get a pension must prove the need and prove the dependency.

It does not seem to me to be quite fair when we meet this general proposition by saying, "If you will not ask any new policy in regard to these men we will grant the relief," to simply say that some of them are veterans, that some of them are going down the hill, that some of them are poor and feeble. I do not think the honorable Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES], who is rising to address the Senate in a moment, would accept a pension from the Government at present with his manly strength of body and of mind; and I suppose I am not saying anything improper if I suppose he is old enough to be a survivor of that war; I do not remember what his age is. That is the point of this thing.

Mr. JACKSON. As the law now stands, the veterans of the war of 1812 are pensioned for having served fourteen days without having been engaged in a single battle.

Mr. HOAR. But that was not done until they got to be 80 years old.

Mr. JACKSON. I am aware that law was passed, I think in 1878, after a long lapse of time, but here has been a long lapse of time and distinguished service. It can not be better stated than in the letter which I read, the Government calling upon Congress to build vaults, to build storehouses in which to preserve the precious metals derived from that vast domain which the valor and courage of those soldiers added to the country. There is the whole case. I know there may be exceptions in this class of veterans that ought not properly to be included in a pension law, but the majority of those who were private soldiers are in indigent circumstances, and those old veterans are going down the lane in poverty.

Mr. BLAIR. I should like to ask the Senator if this amendment to the amendment would be objectionable:

> Provided, That such soldiers shall be in needy circumstances and shall take the oath of allegiance to the United States.

Mr. CALL. I accept it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment suggested by the Senator from New Hampshire will be in order as an amendment, but it can not be accepted as a modification of the amendment of the Senator from Florida, as the yeas and nays have been ordered upon that.

Mr. VOORHEES. Mr. President, there is one part of the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire that I accept, and that is that the beneficiaries of this provision shall take the oath of allegiance. I care nothing for that; but I would ask no man to proclaim his indigence. I would ask no man to certify to his destitution and poverty. That is mean charity.

Mr. BLAIR. I do not propose to debate that point. I do not admit——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield?

Mr. VOORHEES. I do not know that I need to yield. The Senator says he does not propose to debate that point, and I am gratified to know that he does not, for it is not susceptible of debate.

What I meant to say was that men who have rendered distinguished services that the whole world recognizes should not be brought to the block, as it were, to certify that they are poor and want their pauper's soup-bowl filled by Government charity.

Whether we have gone as far from the scenes of the Mexican war as we did from those of the Revolutionary war or the war of 1812 before we granted pensions is not the question. The soldiers of the Mexican war achieved such success in a material sense as should disarm the economy or the avarice, or whatever else you may call it, of members of Congress. If a statue of gold were erected at full life size to every surviving Mexican soldier it would not be one-quarter of 1 per cent. of what they have given this Government. Let me repeat it: If a statue of gold, life size, were erected by our Government to every surviving soldier who fought the battles in Mexico it would not cost one-quarter of 1 per cent. of that which they acquired for this Government. I state that simply materially considered, considered in point of dollars and cents; but when you estimate the glory which they gave this country throughout the world, the renown which they achieved, it can not be estimated even in statues of gold.

I was deeply impressed with the letter read by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. JACKSON] stating that while we are asking additional vaults and chambers to relieve those that are now plethoric with the precious metals acquired by the valor of those men, the remnant of whom we are speaking for, it is objected to, and there is a parsimonious and higgling spirit in regard to allowing them anything.

I once before on this floor took occasion to speak of this question as it really exists, and that is as a sectional question. New England had but little share in the Mexican war. We might as well tell the truth while we are going along. State after State in New England had no concern in it. The State of the Senator from Massachusetts had but little share in it except by purchased troops. Other States in New England had not one single soldier there.

I intend to advertise the country again of the fact that New England was opposed to that war and had no troops there. I will qualify that expression to this extent: when I say that New England had no troops there I do not mean literally that there was nobody there from New England, but I do mean that New England gave no support to the Mexican war. I mean further that I can take a map and outline the boundaries of this Government as it would have been if New England had had her policy. She fought Jefferson. Jefferson purchased Louisiana, with her outlying, vast, and vague boundaries, and New England wanted to impeach him. James K. Polk, another Democratic President, fought the war with Mexico and New England fought him.

The results of Jefferson's purchase are known and the results of the Mexican war are known.

If the policy of New England had prevailed, if the old Federal idea had obtained, this day and this hour I would hold up on the floor of the Senate the map of the United States bounded on the west by the Mississippi River. The Senator from Massachusetts well knows that fact. I challenge him to show a single instance where New England has ever advocated the advancement of the standard of this country beyond the Mississippi River. When I say that I say it with regard, so far as he is personally concerned, because I call to mind while saying it a most liberal, broad, and national letter of his last summer on the subject of the improvement of the Mississippi River. I do not include him in any criticism of the policy of the past, but I speak of the past as it is. If this hour the policy of the old Federal party was stamped upon the map of the United States it would be found as it is hung up in the office of the Commissioner of the Land Office, at the Department of the Interior. I have looked upon it, and I proclaim here that every step beyond, every step on the sunset side of the Father of Waters, is due to the spirit, policy, action, and legislation of the Democratic party, and in direct hostility and triumph over the policy of New England and the Federal party of that section.

I find every time that the question of paying these old veterans who exist in a few numbers in each county in the United States except New England, ten or fifteen in the various counties, poor, humble, waiting—whenever a question arises here to do something for them, however small, it is encountered by that section of the country which had neither sympathy, action, nor men in that movement.

I do not know that the amendment of the Senator from Florida is to obtain to-night. I expect not. It will be obstructed in some way. I did not intend to advocate a single amendment to the original bill 1410 that came here from the House, nor did I. I opposed every one of them. I voted against the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire, which I thought very well of. I opposed the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut, which is not entirely objectionable, but I wanted this bill that came from the House, pure and simple, to help one-legged and one-armed men to pass, and so I voted against amendments that were in themselves meritorious.

But now, inasmuch as the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut has been adopted, I shall vote for one more; I shall vote for this amendment offered by the Senator from Florida. I would not vote for it, much as I approve of it, if the bill had not already been amended; I would keep it pure and clean; but whenever the question of paying the survivors of the Mexican war comes before the Senate I shall adhere to what I have heretofore said, that I shall meet this question, always raised on the part of New England in the interest of economy, but I think in the interest of an ancient policy on their part, as I have met it here to-night.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, it certainly can not be the duty of any representative of a New England State at this period of the session and upon a bill like this to undertake to repel such an attack from such a quarter. The Senator from Indiana is as little acquainted with the history of the Mexican war or the history of the relation of New England to the purchase of Louisiana, or her position with regard to the administration of Thomas Jefferson, as a Hindoo baby on the banks of the Ganges.

I think the Democrats of the time of the Mexican war who are left will have indignation enough for the man who has permitted himself to say that the Massachusetts regiment in the Mexican war or the New Hampshire regiment commanded by Franklin Pierce in the same war were mercenaries. There was not a man of their number who was not a volunteer. The great statesman of Massachusetts, Daniel Webster, gave his son to the service of his country in that war. Has the Senator from Indiana never heard of George Lincoln, who died fighting, gallantly resisting with his single arm four Mexican soldiers? Has he never heard of May, through whose veins the best blood of Massachusetts coursed? Has he never heard of Caleb Cushing, or Isaac H. Wright, who still lives? I should like to see the countenances of the soldiers of the Mexican war of any New England State when they read the words of the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. VOORHEES. Mr. President, there is a wonderfully easy way for some people who can answer in no other way to assume a style and claim a superiority that requires them not to answer. I have met those kind of people before. The last thing in my purpose is to say an unpleasant word to the Senator from Massachusetts; but when he rises here and says in reply to what I have stated that it is not necessary at this late day for a representative from New England to reply to anything, that is an old style way of meeting facts, and deceives nobody and imposes on nobody. It is simply the reassertion—if the Senator will pardon me for saying it—of that political Pharisaism which sometimes imposes upon people, but does not impose upon me.

Whether the Senator from Massachusetts thinks it is necessary for him to reply or not is for him to determine. It is nothing to me whether he does reply or not; but when he announces with a flourish that at this late day it is not worth while for him to reply to a few kindly suggestions that I made upon the policy of New England it becomes necessary for me to recall again what I said.

The Senator, I think with some latitude of statement, informs the Senate that I know no more about the policy of New England in regard to the purchase of Louisiana than some newly born barbarian. That may be so. I am not here to assert my superior knowledge; I am not here even to criticise unkindly so sweeping a statement; but would it not have been better for that Senator, with his wide knowledge, his critical information—and I know that he has it—to have informed me whether I was in fact mistaken in the proposition that the Federal party proposed to impeach Thomas Jefferson for purchasing the Louisiana territory?

Mr. HOAR. The Senator was certainly mistaken.

Mr. VOORHEES. What do you say?

Mr. HOAR. The Senator I believe to be certainly mistaken in that.

Mr. VOORHEES. On the contrary I know that I am not mistaken.

Mr. HOAR. Perhaps not.

Mr. VOORHEES. I know that I am not.

Mr. HOAR. I understand——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. VOORHEES. Oh, yes.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator will pardon me, I understand that one man moved the impeachment of Mr. Jefferson, for which motion on the yeas and nays in the House there was no vote but the vote of the mover.

Mr. VOORHEES. Still the fact is that Jefferson's purchase of Louisiana was a measure to which New England was thoroughly hostile, and whether at that particular moment the proposition to impeach him received one or more votes it was a measure widely contemplated, as the Senator well knows. I am not quite so ignorant of the history of those times as he assumes. I do not know whether it is in good taste for one Senator to assume that he knows everything and another nothing, or not, consequently I shall not assume that I know all about that period; and yet I will state that the historical records bear me out in what I have said, that if the federal policy of New England had prevailed the Western map of our country now would terminate at the Mississippi River. That party was not and never has been in favor of the acquisition of one single inch of territory beyond what we had when the war of 1812 was closed.

So far as the appearance of gentlemen in New England is concerned when reading my statements, I have this to say: It is a well-known fact, and I challenge the Senator from Massachusetts to go to the Adjutant-General's Office of the United States Army; he will there find that the regiment accredited to Massachusetts, commanded by Caleb Cushing (I will not speak disrespectfully of him now dead, but for whom while living I had no exalted respect as a soldier or civilian), was recruited in the city of New York and in a measure paid for, not all of them but most of them, and 25 per cent. of them deserted after they got to Mexico. When I interrogated the Adjutant-General why that enormous disgrace was put upon that regiment, I learned that it was because they came from the purlieus and slums of New York. That was the Massachusetts regiment. There were some troops there from New Hampshire and there were some very excellent men from Connecticut. Thomas H. Seymour was from Connecticut and General Pierce was from New Hampshire.

Mr. ROLLINS. I suppose the Senator from Indiana does not mean to include New Hampshire when he assails New England.

Mr. VOORHEES. No, I do not.

Mr. ROLLINS. Because New Hampshire up to the years 1855 and 1856 was a good old Democratic State, and certainly the Senator from Indiana would not assail the people of that State for want of patriotism during the Mexican war. Certainly no Democrat would assail that State, for New Hampshire furnished the President of the United States soon after, who was one of the heroes of the Mexican war.

Mr. VOORHEES. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. Does the Senator from Indiana claim that the New England regiment did not behave as well at the battle of Buena Vista or any other as the regiment of his own State?

Mr. VOORHEES. I do not know of any regiment from New England that was at Buena Vista. Does the Senator?

Mr. HOAR. Did they not behave as well in the Mexican war?

Mr. VOORHEES. Will the Senator now pardon me?

Mr. HOAR. My question was whether at the battle of Buena Vista or any other the New England regiment did not behave as well as the regiment from Indiana?

Mr. VOORHEES. I will have to know first whether the Senator can name any New England regiment that was at Buena Vista.

Mr. HOAR. I am asking about the Indiana regiment.

Mr. VOORHEES. I ask the Senator again. He made the point whether I disputed that the New England regiment did not behave as well at Buena Vista or elsewhere as the Indiana regiment. I ask him to name a New England regiment that was at Buena Vista.

Mr. HOAR. There was a New England regiment at Buena Vista, unless I am much mistaken.

Mr. VOORHEES. Please name the New England regiment.

Mr. HOAR. I can not give the number of any regiment. I suppose the Senator can not.

Mr. VOORHEES. Oh, yes; I can give the numbers of a good many.

Mr. HOAR. My recollection is (perhaps I am mistaken; I will not undertake to be confident) that there was a regiment at Buena Vista which bore the name of the New England regiment and was so called, whose colonel perished at the head of his regiment. Will the Senator answer whether he claims that that regiment did not behave as well as the Indiana regiment at the battle of Buena Vista?

Mr. VOORHEES. I am trying to find out whether there was a New England regiment there. I will answer about the Indiana regiment to the Senator's satisfaction.

Mr. MAXEY. Will the Senator pardon me for an interruption?

Mr. VOORHEES. I would be glad to have it. Here is a gentleman who was there.

Mr. MAXEY. I was not at the battle of Buena Vista, but I know something about it. There was a very gallant officer from New England, to whom I presume the Senator from Massachusetts refers. He was not a member of a New England regiment. He was an officer of the United States Army, Captain Lincoln, who was killed there.

Mr. HOAR. I am not speaking of Captain Lincoln. I referred to him a little while ago. He was an officer of the regular Army.

Mr. MAXEY. He was killed there, but I have no recollection whatever of a gentleman from Massachusetts commanding a volunteer regiment there.

Mr. HOAR. Colonel Ransom is the person I speak of.

Mr. MAXEY. He was the commander of a brigade, a brigadier-general appointed by the governor, and was not in command of any Massachusetts regiment that I know of. I would say from memory only that if there was any Massachusetts regiment there I do not know of it. There was a battalion under Fletcher Webster, a son of Daniel Webster.

Mr. HOAR. Fletcher Webster was not in the Mexican war. Captain Edward Webster, a son of Daniel Webster, was killed at the battle of Buena Vista.

Mr. MAXEY. I simply miscalled the first name. I knew that there was a battalion under the command of Major Webster.

Mr. VOORHEES. The Senator from Massachusetts, with his long experience and his broad intercourse with the history of his State, can not name (I want to call attention to the fact) any troops from his State on that historic battlefield. So far as Indiana is concerned, I can name a regiment that the Senator wanted to throw an old sneer at, a regiment that bore the first brunt, that broke on the left wing of that army and received the shock of two-thirds of Santa Anna's army, a single regiment that had been pushed out beyond where it ought to have been placed, and after a firing in which it lost nearly one-third of its numbers it broke, and the Illinois troops broke, and ever afterward, ever since the battle of Buena Vista, when a member of Congress or anybody else wanted to relieve himself from the opprobrium of having taken no part whatever in the battle of Buena Vista, and having done no fighting and not being there at all, he commenced talking about a regiment from Indiana which, after being slaughtered, broke.

If that is any comfort to Senators whose constituents were not there, and who can not name a roll-call of the troops, let it be so. Troops of Indiana were there, and they staid until by all the rules and usages of warfare they were justified in leaving the untenable position which they held. If the Senator from Massachusetts is satisfied with the exhibition here to-night that he himself, one of the best historians of his State, could not name a soldier nor give the name of a man from his State who had been in that battle, until he was aided by the Senator from Texas, by retorting on the fact that one regiment out of three from Indiana was driven from their position on that bloody and terrible day, he may have what comfort he can take out of that matter.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. VOORHEES. Yes.

Mr. HOAR. I wish to say that the Senator seems to be as forgetful of the history of this debate as he seems to me to be forgetful of the history of his country in many respects. I named the New England men and the Massachusetts men who took part in that war, every person who has been named in this debate, without any suggestion from the Senator from Texas or anybody else.

Mr. VOORHEES. I think the RECORD will not bear the Senator out in that statement.

Mr. HOAR. I had stated the fact that Mr. Webster had given his son to the service of his country, who died in that war. I alluded to George Lincoln, to Burbank, to Franklin Pierce, of New Hampshire, to Ransom, of Vermont. The Senator from Texas spoke, and by a very natural slip of the tongue, of Major Fletcher Webster, and I called his attention to the fact that it was not Fletcher but Edward Webster.

Mr. MAXEY. I corrected it immediately, I will say. It was simply a mistake of the Christian name.

Mr. HOAR. Certainly; but I had referred to that officer before the Senator from Texas rose.

Mr. MAXEY. I did not hear it. I was not in the Chamber at the time.

Mr. VOORHEES. I think very likely if the Senator will hold the floor a little longer we shall have it proved that New England fought the Mexican war; and if so, I shall expect the New England Senators to take care of the veterans of that war. Still that would not be historically true.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I do not wish to prolong this discussion. It is undoubtedly true, which no man desires to forget, to conceal, or to palliate, that a very large portion of my own State—I will not speak for the States of Maine and New Hampshire, which I think were Democratic States at that time, so that the Senator's grouping together of the New England States is historically unfortunate—that the people of Massachusetts believed then and believe now that the Mexican war was a war undertaken by this country, a strong power against a weak power, when we were in the wrong, and that the motive of it was to extend the area of slavery and to obtain new slave territory; and for that reason they resisted it.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President, I am not inclined at this, as I have never been at any time, to indulge in anything which partakes of the nature of sectional bickering, and I could I think appeal to the Senator from Indiana himself for the vindication of New England against the unjust aspersions which he has cast upon her.

So far as my own State is concerned, it is true of her sons as it is true of the sons not only of New England but of Indiana and of the whole country, that their blood has mingled in the turf on every battle-field where American soldiers have fought for their country.

But, sir, I do not propose that this debate, bearing directly upon a very important bill, which concerns the interests of the soldiers of the entire land, shall be turned aside and shall be dwarfed and belittled by this unnatural bickering which has been brought into it. I rose as I thought, if I know my own motives, impelled by a just and generous sentiment toward the veterans, a majority of whom, it is true, reside in the South; but they are not an unknown nor are they an infinitesimal quantity among the citizens of my own State. One President of the United States won a reputation for gallantry upon the battlefields of Mexico, and all the way from Vera Cruz to the capture of the capital of that republic he was as conspicuous as any man in the discharge of his duty. I am anxious for one that the Mexican war soldier, in his old age and in his poverty and under circumstances which we have never considered in dealing with the soldiers of any other war, should be favorably considered. I would give him his $8 a month. I would give him more if he needed it. I would give him everything that his necessities required, whether it is $8 or $50 per month; but of the soldiers of the Revolution, of the soldiers of the war of 1812, of the soldiers of the Mexican war, so far as they have already shared in the generosity of that country which they have made so great, of the soldiers in the last war, not one is receiving a pension from the country unless it be for disability. Never to a single one of them has there been a proposition so generous as that which I suggested, which was to give to the Mexican soldier the necessary sustenance in his poverty and his age.

The Senator calls that unjust, and he sneers at it as a sort of nutmeg New England economy. He himself ought to be ashamed of what he said in reference to my own State and my own proposition in this debate. Sir, I would give to the Mexican soldier at the South and to the Mexican soldier at the North his sustenance if he needs help from his country. Although the question and the proposition of the Senator from Florida was precisely that proposition, I asked that it might be modified in such a way as to meet the scruples that any patriot must feel, that any Southern patriot must feel, no matter what his course might have been during the recent rebellion, that he should now when he comes to partake of the munificence of the Government if there is a question about his past loyalty settle that question by the oath of allegiance. Any man who loves his country, any man who has sacrificed what these Mexican veterans have in former time in her defense, will not hesitate to asseverate when he partakes of the bounty of the Government he has made so great that he is to-day its supporter.

It is a mere question of fact. It is necessary that some condition of this kind should be imposed, and it is the simplest possible. I think that the Senator from Florida and the other Senators who are by him in their readiness to accept this amendment exhibited a proper appreciation of the situation, and with that simple addendum to the amendment of the Senator from Florida I shall be very glad to vote for it, and so far from it being an incumbrance to this bill, which seems to be apprehended on this side of the Chamber, I say to you, Mr. President, that this addition to the bill would be not only an act of justice and generosity but it would be, as I believe, the very thing that would carry this to a happy conclusion not only in this Chamber but in the other, and insure for it the signature of the President of the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Chair understand the Senator from New Hampshire as offering the suggestion he made as an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Florida?

Mr. BLAIR. I did so, and I understood it was ruled out because the roll-call had commenced, but there has been a very lengthy debate going on since then and I do not understand why we can debate this business by the hour if I can not offer an amendment.

Mr. CALL. If it is in order, I will accept the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida can not accept the amendment or modify his own, the yeas and nays having been ordered on the amendment.

Mr. BLAIR. Then I move this as an amendment to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is in order as an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Florida. The question then is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida, which will be read.

The ACTING SECRETARY. It is proposed to add to the amendment the following:

Provided, Such soldier shall be in needy circumstances and shall take an oath of allegiance to the United States.

Mr. LOGAN. I am in favor of the passage of the bill providing for an increase of pensions applicable to the particular class to which it applies. As I said once before to-day, I prefer the House bill to the amendment, but the amendment has been adopted by the Senate, and I shall now vote for it, but I shall not vote for the amendment of the Senator from Florida for this reason, if no other: without giving any expression of opinion as to whether I would vote for it as a separate bill or not, I shall vote against it here because I do not deem it necessary.

To give my opinion upon this subject at this time, having been a Mexican soldier myself, may not be very proper for me to do; but my judgment is that if the amendment of the Senator from Florida is adopted that is the end of this bill. It will not pass the House with that amendment, and it ought not to pass with that amendment at this time, for the reason that the amendment has not properly been considered, and it makes no distinction whatever in reference to grades or anything else, but simply gives so much money to each soldier who served in the Mexican war. I do not think sufficient consideration has been given to it for it to be adopted at this late hour of the session, and I hope it will not be for that reason, that I believe it will be the end of this bill, that it will be such a weight upon it as will carry it down, and I do not want to see that done. I want to see the bill pass, and let the House agree to it and increase these pensions for a certain specified class.

A proposition of this kind, that is merely for one peculiar class of soldiers, crippled, with legs off, arms off, eyes out, or anything of that kind, it is very inappropriate to amend by adding a general bill legislating upon the subject of pensions as applicable to any war or any general class of soldiers without its being applicable to this particular class. I do not think it ought to be adopted, and for that reason I shall vote against it.

Mr. PLATT. I do not desire to discuss this question. I simply want to say that the bill to which this is proposed as an amendment is a bill which relates to the rates of pension to pensioners who are now entitled under the existing law; and without expressing any opinion upon the justice or merits of the pensioning of the survivors of the Mexican war, I shall vote against this amendment, as I would vote against any amendment to pension any other class of soldiers not already pensioned.

Mr. ROLLINS. Now, Mr. President, is it not possible for us to have a vote? ["Question!" "Question!"]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR] to the amendment of the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL].

Mr. BLAIR called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ANTHONY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN].

Mr. JACKSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE].

Mr. KELLOGG (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE].

Mr. LOGAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. RANSOM], unless my vote is required to make a quorum.

Mr. MITCHELL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. JOHNSTON]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. PLATT (when his name was called). I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. HAWLEY] is paired with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. PENDLETON]. I vote "nay."

Mr. SLATER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON]. I do not know how he would vote. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] is paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD]. The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] is paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE].

Mr. GEORGE. I am paired with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. CAMERON].

Mr. CALL. I wish to announce the pair of my colleague [Mr. JONES, of Florida] with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON].

Mr. BARROW. My colleague [Mr. BROWN] is paired with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB].

Mr. COCKRELL. I am paired with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON]. I do not see him in his seat. I understand the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ANTHONY] is paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN], who is absent. If there be no objection to transferring the pairs to the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN], the Senator from Rhode Island and myself, being present, will vote.

Mr. GROOME. That will be satisfactory to my colleague.

Mr. CALL. I announced the pair of my colleague [Mr. JONES, of Florida] with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON]. I understand that it has been transferred to the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL].

Mr. COCKRELL. It does not make any difference which one the Senator from Iowa is paired with.

Mr. ANTHONY. I understand the Senator from Missouri proposes to pair my pair with his pair so that we can both vote; and therefore I vote "yea."

Mr. JACKSON. I vote "yea."

Mr. KELLOGG. For the purpose of making a quorum I vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 8, nays 32; as follows:

YEAS—8.

Anthony,	Call,	Davis of Ill.,	Plumb,
Blair,	Conger,	Hoar,	Rollins.

NAYS—32.

Aldrich,	Harris,	McDill,	Platt,
Barrow,	Harrison,	McMillan,	Pugh,
Bayard,	Hill,	Maxey,	Sawyer,
Cockrell,	Ingalls,	Miller of Cal.,	Sewell,
Coke,	Jackson,	Miller of N. Y.,	Sherman,
Edmunds,	Jonas,	Mitchell,	Vest,
Garland,	Kellogg,	Morgan,	Voorhees,
Groome,	Lapham,	Morrill,	Walker.

ABSENT—36.

Allison,	Fair,	Hawley,	Ransom,
Beck,	Farley,	Johnston,	Saulsbury,
Brown,	Ferry,	Jones of Florida,	Saunders,
Butler,	Frye,	Jones of Nevada,	Slater,
Camden,	George,	Lamar,	Tabor,
Cameron of Pa.,	Gorman,	Logan,	Vance,
Cameron of Wis.,	Grover,	McPherson,	Van Wyck,
Davis of W. Va.,	Hale,	Mahone,	Williams,
Dawes,	Hampton,	Pendleton,	Windom.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the amendment of the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL], on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. JACKSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. LOGAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. RANSOM]. Were he here, I should vote "nay."

Mr. PLATT (when Mr. PENDLETON'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. HAWLEY] is paired with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. PENDLETON]. If he were here, I have no doubt my colleague would vote "nay."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. SLATER. On this question I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON]. I do not know how he would vote, but if he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. BECK. I am paired on all questions with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE]. I would vote "yea" if he were here.

Mr. GEORGE (after having voted in the affirmative). I voted inadvertently. I am paired with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. CAMERON]. I withdraw my vote. I would vote "yea" if he were here.

Mr. COCKRELL. To-day, while we were considering a bill in the Appropriations Committee, I was paired with the Senator from Iowa

[Mr. ALLISON], and left the room without saying anything further. I understand my colleague has paired him with the Senator from Florida [Mr. JONES]. That being so, I am of course unpaired, and I vote "yea."

Mr. LOGAN. I am authorized to vote to make a quorum. I vote "nay."

Mr. JACKSON. In order to make a quorum I vote "yea."

Mr. GEORGE. Will the Senator from Illinois allow me to transfer my pair with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. CAMERON] to his pair, so that I can vote to make a quorum?

Mr. LOGAN. Provided you vote the same way I will, I have no objection.

Mr. GEORGE. I vote "yea."

Mr. KELLOGG. The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE] with whom I am paired would vote "yea" if he were here. I shall vote for the purpose of making a quorum, but I do not vote if it is not necessary.

The result was announced—yeas 18, nays 22; as follows:

YEAS—18.

Barrow,	George,	Jonas,	Vest,
Call,	Gorman,	Maxey,	Voorhees,
Cockrell,	Groome,	Miller of Cal.,	Walker.
Coke,	Harris,	Morgan,
Garland,	Jackson,	Pugh,

NAYS—22.

Aldrich,	Harrison,	McDill,	Rollins,
Blair,	Hill,	McMillan,	Sawyer,
Conger,	Hoar,	Miller of N. Y.,	Sewell,
Davis of Ill.,	Ingalls,	Mitchell,	Sherman.
Dawes,	Lapham,	Platt,
Edmunds,	Logan,	Plumb,

ABSENT—36.

Allison,	Davis of W. Va.,	Johnston,	Ransom,
Anthony,	Fair,	Jones of Florida,	Saulsbury,
Bayard,	Farley,	Jones of Nevada,	Saunders,
Beck,	Ferry,	Kellogg,	Slater,
Brown,	Frye,	Lamar,	Tabor,
Butler,	Grover,	McPherson,	Vance,
Camden,	Hale,	Mahone,	Van Wyck,
Cameron of Pa.,	Hampton,	Morrill,	Williams,
Cameron of Wis.,	Hawley,	Pendleton,	Windom.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. GEORGE. I offer the following amendment:

SEC. —. That a pension of $8 a month be, and the same is hereby, granted to every surviving soldier of the United States who served for three months or longer in the last war between the United States and Mexico, and who was honorably discharged from said service: Provided, This section shall not apply to any such surviving soldier who has means of support without resorting to manual labor.

If the Senate is ready to vote, I will not say anything.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE].

Mr. HOAR. I move to amend that amendment by adding at the end of the proviso:

And who labors under the disabilities imposed by the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. EDMUNDS. May I appeal to my friend from Mississippi and to everybody else not to raise this Mexican question and this disability question on this matter of providing for people who we know are specially and destructively disabled? Let the two things stand by themselves and let us at the next session take up the Mexican bill and dispose of it one way or the other; but do not let us leave these people without legs and arms, &c., without a little additional provision for their comfort in our squabbles and discontents over this insoluble problem that we have discussed so long, insoluble in this way by way of particular amendments. I do appeal to my friend from Mississippi and to everybody else to just leave this simple bill about one class—not all classes of the soldiers of the late war but one particular class—who have to the eye been disabled so that it is not a question that there can be any fraud or deceit about. Let us provide for them and not hang up their hopes and their lives, their needs and necessities on these other disputed questions.

Mr. GEORGE. To the appeal of the Senator from Vermont I would respond very readily if I could. Nearly a year ago I had the honor of offering a resolution embracing the substance of the amendment I have just offered, directing the Committee on Pensions to report a bill allowing a pension to indigent soldiers of the Mexican war. That resolution was referred to the Committee on Pensions and there that resolution has slept to this day. The committee has taken no action. The Congress is about to expire, and now I want to appeal to the Senator from Vermont and to every other Senator upon that side of the Chamber to vote for the amendment which I have offered.

Mr. President, if you will but remember the date of the Mexican war you will call to mind that there can be but few of the survivors of that war who are under 60 years of age, and most of them are older than that. This amendment which I have had the honor to offer only proposes to extend aid to those who are compelled to labor with their hands for support. It embraces no property-holders and no professional men. It proposes a boon only to those being over 60 years of age who are compelled to resort to manual labor in order to procure the means of subsistence.

Now, Mr. President, to the survivors of an army which rendered such signal service to this country as the soldiers of the United States in the Mexican war, to the survivors, I say, of such an army, now standing almost upon the verge of the grave, destitute of property, destitute of friends who have property, at that period of life when men are incapable of pursuing manual labor with comfort or success, something is due from the American Congress; and ought we not when we take into consideration these facts to vote cheerfully for the small pittance proposed in the amendment I have offered? No man who has the means of supporting animal existence independent of his own labor gets any benefit; no man who has the means of supporting existence by the exercise of his talent as a professional man can get any benefit from the amendment. The benefit goes solely to those who in their old age and being without property are compelled to resort to hard labor for a subsistence.

I desire to say a word or two more on this subject. Many of these soldiers reside in the State which I have the honor in part to represent on this floor. I know them. I meet them occasionally. We have little conventions or meetings in which we exchange views about this question and about others. I see the men there who held up the flag of this country in that war; they come to those meetings bearing every evidence of poverty. They write to me, many of them, they appeal to me to press their claims so that they may have a few of the comforts of life in their declining years.

Mr. President, the soldiers of the Union Army in the last war deserve, I admit, the gratitude and bounty of the Government. I am willing so far as I am concerned, though I was on the other side, to vote them liberal pensions. But it has been objected to this that we ought not to associate the two together. I think we ought, for however much honor the Union soldier may have deserved for his services in the late civil war he can deserve no higher honor than the soldier who upheld our flag in the Mexican war. Most of these soldiers reside in the section of country from which I come. From causes not necessary for me now to relate, it is well known that the people of those States are not in that condition of affluence which enables them to dispense charity with a bounteous hand to those who need it, nor to the extent which the more favored section of the country can extend it. These men are poor; nine out of every ten of them are poor; they are needy. Their neighbors, charitable, kind, and generous as they may be, are most of them in that hard condition which prevents them extending a generous helping hand. So I appeal to the Senator from Vermont, as the bill has already been amended and as it must go back to the House, to allow this amendment to be passed, and thereby at this late day to extend to these veterans in poverty, as they are, some little of the bounty of the Government whose honor and interest they so well and so bravely sustained in a foreign land.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, the philosophy of my friend from Mississippi as to the nature of his amendment does not quite agree with mine. I do not know any reason why a professional man who is destitute and who served his country should be excluded from the benefit of his country's gratitude, while the man who is not a professional man should receive it. That is not the way to tempt professional people and mercantile people, and all the other body of people except day laborers, to uphold the flag of their country. The amendment itself, therefore, if it means what my friend thinks it does, proceeds upon a false theory, in my view. But no matter for that, I do not want to take up time about that.

The difference between the case we have in hand, the men whose legs and arms are gone, and the case the Senator from Mississippi states is this: In this case we know that these people are in their present condition in consequence of their service; the indigent survivors of the Mexican war who do not already have pensions for disability incurred in the line of duty are indigent, are sick, or in trouble, not because they were soldiers of the United States, but because like the rest of mankind they are subject to the ihfirmities of human nature and to the changes and chances of this mortal life. I do not mean to say that that is not a reason why our gratitude should be applied to them, but I say it marks a clear distinction that we ought to observe—unless we mean to destroy this bill for the benefit of those whose legs and arms are gone, which I can not impute to the Senator from Mississippi, a distinction that we ought to observe and not embarrass one thing that we all agree about I hope, by another that is not so clear.

Now when you come to the question of pensioning people who have served their country in war because they are now in need, what difference do years make? Why should not the soldier of the Union of 1861 to 1865 who is now indigent, and in trouble and distress, be just as much entitled to the gratitude of his country as the soldier of the Mexican war who is now indigent and in trouble and distress, I should like to know. I am unable to see that time has anything to do with that question. I should be glad to have somebody explain how it can have.

We did pension all the survivors of the Revolutionary war fifty or sixty years afterward because they, like a great many other things that happened at that time, as long periods of years went on, became mere monuments of national glory, a few people scattered here and there that the country was able and glad to decorate them with this honor, as well as to provide for them in their old age.

Mr. MAXEY. If the Senator from Vermont will permit me, I will state that my recollection is, though I speak entirely from memory, that about the year 1817, during the first administration of Mr. Monroe, a bill was passed granting pensions to the soldiers of the Revolutionary war who were needy.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That may be and it might have been passed, upon the principle that my friend from Mississippi proposes, in the year 1789, when the Constitution was adopted just as well, because if we owe anything in the way of duty or gratitude to the soldiers of the Republic who came out of the war as well as they went in—and I agree that we do as far as we are able to do it—we owe it not in respect of the lapse of time that has occurred after they came out of the war, but in respect of the necessity that they happen to be in; and therefore I repeat that in my opinion there is no distinction in principle between providing for the indigent soldiers of the war for the Union, if I may call it so—others call it the war between the States, the civil war, and so on—there is no distinction in principle that can be made between the Mexican soldiers and the soldiers of 1861–'65, if you put it on the ground of necessity. But I say in either case that the question that is before the Senate on this House bill as amended is an entirely different one from the one proposed by the Senator from Mississippi, and if I did not know his patriotic impulses I should suspect that the effect might be (as I am afraid it may be, though the purpose may be a legitimate and parliamentary purpose), to destroy this measure for the people who stand before our eyes, maimed for all their lives in the service of their country to have this little addition to their support, by getting up a question of this kind.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It seems to me, Mr. President, that everybody else in this country gets a pension except the soldiers of the Mexican war. We have been giving pensions until our pension-list now amounts to over $100,000,000 per annum, but I do not complain of it. I wish the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] had not gone out because I want to answer the question he asked as to what was the difference in principle upon which the soldiers of the Mexican war were to be pensioned and the soldiers of the late war not; why was it that a soldier was entitled to a pension any more than a civilian, than a professional man? The principle of the whole thing in our Republic is this: We have no large standing army; our policy is to rely upon our citizen soldiery when an emergency comes for the defense of the country; we keep up no hundred thousand or five hundred thousand soldiers as they do in the despotisms of Europe. We go upon the idea that we must be dependent upon our citizen soldiery rather than to be dependent on a great standing army. That is the principle on which the whole thing rests.

Our Government says to its citizens when war comes, "Enlist, volunteer, take the flag of your country and carry it in triumph, and when you have grown old and become infirm the country will see that you are kept out of the poor-house, that you are kept off from public charity." We find it cheaper to do this than it is to keep up a large standing army of 500,000 or 600,000 men, as governments with much fewer people than we have do. We have in this country to-day a standing army of less than 25,000 men, and there is not a kingdom in Europe of half our population that has not an army of twenty times that size. That is the difference.

Everybody else can be pensioned, black, white, and red men, all but the Mexican soldiers, the very men whose blood and toil have brought into this Union vast possessions covering a million square miles of territory squaring up our country from ocean to ocean, giving us 1,250 miles of Pacific seacoast, bringing to this country all the vast extent of territory from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean with all its wealth of gold and silver and other precious metals. All this has come from the toil of those old veterans of the Mexican war who are rapidly passing away.

Ah, Mr. President, if these men resided now in New England the Senator from Vermont would long ago have had them upon the pension-roll. It is because they come from a country that is opposed to the Republican party that these men have been neglected. Gentlemen's sympathies move out for all other soldiers. You have a bill before you to-day that in my judgment will add $60,000,000 the first year to the taxes of this country; there is no doubt in my mind about it; and yet Senators hesitate to put upon the pension-roll a few old men the sum total of whose pensions will not amount to a million and a half a year. Where is the consistency? Where is the reason? It is because these men happen to reside West and South and not in New England. The country believes that.

I have just come into the Senate Chamber and I do not understand exactly the condition of the question, except as I caught it from the two speeches made by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] and the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS], but I understand the proposition of the Senator from Mississippi is only to put upon the pension-roll those indigent soldiers who make oath themselves and substantiate it by other proof that they are unable to support themselves. Is that the proposition, I ask the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. GEORGE. The proposition is to put on the roll only those who have not the means of acquiring subsistence except by manual labor.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Have they got to swear to that?

Mr. GEORGE. I suppose some regulation will be made by the Pension Office to ascertain the fact.

Mr. WILLIAMS. As a Mexican soldier myself I scorn any such pension as that. Put them on the roll as you put the soldiers of the Revolution, put them on the roll as you put the soldiers of the war of 1812, and do not insult the Mexican soldier by making him swear that he is a pauper. No man likes to do that. Let him believe that this pension is an honor from his Government and that it is not a pittance of charity. Why, sir, we go to our friends and our kindred for charity; we go to our Government for justice.

I never can talk about this subject without being carried off. I feel that these men have been treated with the grossest injustice possible. Here we are paying to the Union soldiers of the Republic $100,000,000 a year; here is a bill before you proposing to increase that $50,000,000 more per year. I care not what the tables or estimates may have made it; no man can convince me that if the bill before the Senate becomes a law your pension-list will not be swelled to $50,000,000 more than it is to-day. How? The bill provides that every man who shall have lost a hand or lost a foot in the war shall have his pension increased to $40 a month, and that every other man who has received an injury equivalent thereto shall have his pension increased in the same ratio. Can anybody tell me that it is possible for a man to receive a gunshot wound in his body that so disables him as to entitle him to be put on the pension-roll at all, that he will not have incurred a disability equal to the loss of a hand or the loss of a foot? I have seen a man's hand taken off successfully and his foot taken off successfully and he be as stout as he was before; but shoot him through the hip, or through the shoulder, and he is disabled. What difficulty is there in getting a doctor to certify that a fellow who has varicose veins, who has chronic diarrhœa from bad food, who has a stiff elbow from a shot in his arm, or a stiff knee from a shot in his leg, has a disability equal to the loss of a hand or a foot? It is perfectly apparent.

We have nearly 300,000 men already on the pension-roll, and 200,000 more applying for pensions. How many of these men will be put under this equivalent-disability clause on the roll at a pension of $40 a month? Not less than 200,000. It is a wide door open to plundering the Treasury; and let me say to my Republican friends that there are two parties to this question; there are other people in this country besides the soldiers; there are the tax-payers as well as soldiers to be pensioned, and beware how you arouse and stir up these people against this system, which I think is just, equitable, and proper, lest you may stir them up to destroy the entire system. What would you destroy it for? Do you want to squander the public money? Do you want to induce the necessity of a higher tariff, higher taxes upon foreign imports, higher taxes upon internal products? Do you want to tax tobacco higher, to tax whisky higher? Do you want to put a higher tax upon foreign wools, upon iron, upon everything that people consume?

Oh, Mr. President, let me warn the Senate that there is a day of reckoning not far off when they will be called to an accountability for what they are doing. How does all this happen? Why in such a hurry when we have been asked to reduce taxation? Are you now for increasing it? Why is that? If you are so ready to increase it $50,000,000 or $100,000,000 a year for the young soldiers of the Republic, why can you not allow a few old fellows, tottering on to the grave, whose whole pension would not amount to over a million and a half a year, to have the benefit of it? I made an estimate a year or two ago when we discussed this question; I had no idea it was coming up to-night, and was absent only an hour from the Senate, when I came back; but then we were just in the midst of this question. If there ever was a class of men on this continent who deserve recognition at the hands of their Government it is these Mexican soldiers. Twenty-six sovereign State Legislatures have instructed their Senators to vote for putting them on the pension-roll. Where are the fifty-two members answering to those instructions? What will you say to the people when you go home? That you have refused to obey their instructions?

I want these men put upon the pension-roll; I want them put on fairly and squarely. I do not want them put upon that roll in a manner that will humiliate and degrade the soldier in his own estimation. I do not want him to take an oath that he is a pauper and a fit subject for the poor-house. Uphold his pride and manliness; cheer the old man's declining years as he goes tottering down to the grave with the idea at last that he is honored by his country, that this is a boon, a grace from his Government, and is not an act of charity. That is the last thing a man in this life wants—charity even from a friend or from his government. These men are proud and gallant men who caught the flag of their country in the hour of its peril thirty-seven years ago, and carried it in triumph through the burning plains of Mexico and placed it upon the halls of the Montezumas. It was the first foreign war this country ever had; it was the first war in which this country demonstrated its capacity for warlike operations. Before that war we had no reputation among the nations of Europe as a warlike people, but that demonstrated the fact that freedom made men brave and courage made them warlike, and the skill of our generals and the valor of our troops in that war stamped this nation as the foremost military nation upon the face of God's earth. The glory and the honor that war brought to this country is worth much. Ah, Mr. President, the glories that were achieved by the Mexican soldiers were not dimmed by one single drop of fraternal blood; all were won in the common cause of a common country; and as the few remaining old men yet among us move on toward the bourn, as they cross the silent river to the camp beyond it, let us cheer them on their way, for they are dropping out day by day, and their graves, like milestones, mark their march to the end of all things.

I had hoped that this Congress would ere this have granted a pension to these men as it did to the Revolutionary soldiers and the soldiers of 1812; and when the soldiers of the late war have grown as old as these men, then let us take them up and pension them too; but the other soldiers have the start by sixteen or twenty years, and I know myself that nine out of ten are indigent. I do not know in all my State of fifty men who are in independent circumstances who served in the Mexican war. We know that the men who go to war, the men who rush out at the tap of the drum or the sound of the bugle, and who seize their country's banner and march to the field of battle, are not the most thrifty fellows who make money at home. That class of men stay at home and hire substitutes, but the gallant, the brave-hearted, the magnanimous young fellow takes the banner of his country and marches to the field irrespective of consequences, and all of us know that these men are not frugal as a general thing, and most of them are necessarily poor.

However, I am sorry that this proposition is not in a more satisfactory shape to me. I feel that while there is great necessity for pensioning even the poor, it is an insult to them all to put it upon the ground that they are objects of charity and not because of merit. Recognize their services, and do not bestow charity. That is the point of the whole thing.

I feel perfectly assured that if a majority of these soldiers had belonged to New England, they would long since have been pensioned, for New England always takes care of her people of all sorts, her soldiers and her laboring people and her manufacturers and her capitalists. She is careful about them; she is kind; she goes upon the idea that charity begins at home and that a man who takes not care of his own household is worse than an infidel or any other demon on the face of the earth.

Now, let us put all these men on the pension-roll, as you ought to have done long ago. It has been done by this body three times. I saw it done on the floor of the Senate before I took my seat, by an almost unanimous vote, but it was reconsidered and voted down the next day.

What defense can you give to the country; what reply can you make to your Legislatures who have instructed you, Senators, for I know that twenty-six States have instructed you; what reply can you make to the demands that have come from these old soldiers now for more than ten years?

I feel in great difficulty about this proposition, because with due respect to my friend from Mississippi I think that his proposition will leave out a large class of men whose pride is too great to allow them to come up and swear that they are paupers. It is shameful to make these poor old men take that oath, for if there is anything that a man hates to do it is to take an oath that he is a pauper.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, the Senator from Kentucky, had he been present in the Senate and paid attention to what has transpired here within the last two hours, would have been saved from the necessity of delivering the very extraordinary speech he has just made, considering the circumstances under which he spoke.

In the first place, he would have known that the Senate, by a very decided majority, had voted down an amendment pensioning the Mexican soldiers, every one of them, those who are able to live without it and those who are not able to live without it. He would have found that out.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator will allow me to state that I had just come in and I did not know the Senate had voted down any proposition of that sort.

Mr. GEORGE. Of course.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand since my remarks that the Senator from Massachusetts has offered an amendment which I did not understand either, and I want to have a response to that when the Senator gets through.

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator's speech could not have been made if he had known the situation before the Senate.

I offered my amendment not as an original proposition, not as containing the measure of what I thought was due to the Mexican soldiers, but because, as the Senator from Kentucky would have learned if he had been present, the proposition to pension all having been voted down, it was stated by one or two Senators on the other side who voted against that general proposition that they would vote for a proposition of this sort.

The Senator from Kentucky says that when the Senate of the United States, by a decided majority, refuses to pension all the Mexican soldiers, it is an insult to those who are compelled after they have arrived at the age of 60 years to work for a living to offer them a little help in their old age. The Senator from Kentucky is very easily insulted. I have heard no such sentiment from the Mexican soldiers whom I represent. It is true they all demand that there shall be a general recognition of their services, but none except the Senator from Kentucky, so far as I know, will refuse to accord it to those who are unable to live without manual labor because we can not give aid also to the wealthy.

Again, Mr. President, the Senator says that the amendment requires the recipients of this bounty or of this pension to take a pauper's oath. There is nothing of that sort in the amendment, no requirement of the kind. I suppose that the ministers of the law, the pension agents, will formulate rules by which the condition of the soldier will be ascertained without exacting from him any degrading confession. If the Senator had heard the amendment read he could not have made the remarks which he made upon that question.

Again, if the Senator had been present when the Senator from Texas, who sits before me [Mr. MAXEY], interrupted the Senator from Vermont he would have learned another fact of which he is entirely ignorant, and that is that the soldiers of the Revolutionary war were insulted, according to his theory, in the same way by the statesmen of this country who lived and carried on our affairs during the administration of Mr. Monroe; for this amendment is almost literally copied from the first bill that was ever passed by the American Congress to pension the soldiers of the Revolutionary war, other than those who had received disabilities in the war. So the Senator's sensibilities bring him in contact not only with an humble individual like myself, but with the fathers of the Republic who were making provision for the men who had won our independence. Certainly if there were any men in the world who deserved not to be insulted they were the soldiers who in the seven long years of the Revolutionary war bore the brunt of battle, half-fed, half-clad, fighting against enormous odds, following Washington in the darkness and gloom, spending that horrible winter at Valley Forge, but they did not deem themselves insulted, nor did the statesmen who lived in that early era of our Government feel that they were insulting them, by giving to those who were unable to earn their subsistence except by manual labor a pension from the Treasury of the Government.

This is not a matter of sentiment; it is a business transaction. Here are these men, as the Senator from Kentucky says himself, nine out of every ten of them poor, compelled to labor for a living; here is a statement made by more than one Senator on the other side, who voted down the amendment to pension all, to vote for a proposition something like this; and shall we, after we have testified by our votes—the Senator did not, because he was not here—after we have given evidence by our votes of what we thought they deserved, a pension to all—shall we now, failing in that, turn to the poor laboring survivors of the Mexican war who have not the means of subsistence except by hard toil, and say, "We could have got this boon for you, but we would not insult you by giving it to you unless we included within the bounty the rich who did not need it?" That is the Senator's position.

Now, Mr. President, I want to do for these poor men the best that can be done for them. I do not propose to turn these poor laboring soldiers of the Mexican war from the doors of the Treasury of the United States because I am unwilling to give them their due unless at the same time I can give somebody else what I think is due him.

Mr. President, a word in reply to the Senator from Vermont. He seems to think that this is an unusual proceeding to give pensions to soldiers who had not been disabled in the Army in the service of the country; yet he was informed by the Senator from Texas that about the year 1817 the Congress of the United States had set a precedent for what we now ask you to do for the Mexican soldiers, and to give the bounty alone to those who are compelled to earn their living by manual labor. The Senator from Vermont seems to think there was just as much reason for pensioning the professional man and the man who is able to live without any exertion of any sort as to pension the laborer. That may be true in one sense, but still we have precedent for doing what we are doing, and we have the vote of the Senate declining by a very decided majority to pension all without reference to their condition in life who served in the Mexican war.

I hope, Mr. President, that the amendment which I have offered will prevail. It is not all I want. I have voted this night for more; I will do it again; but I see no chance to get any more. When but little is in sight, I will take whatever chance I may for it.

Mr. MAXEY. Mr. President, I have no intention of making a speech on this question. I have heretofore at former sessions of Congress placed upon record the views I have in respect to the main question of pensioning the soldiers of the Mexican war. Those reasons I do not care at this time to repeat; but simply as to the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi, I desire to say that I do not look upon it as the honorable Senator from Kentucky does. He was in the Mexican war, and he thinks it an insult to those men who are needy, who are not able to earn their living to call on the Government to help them, and that to take an oath in respect to their inability would be the pauper's oath and an insult to them. The Senator from Mississippi, whom I honor for having offered the amendment, was a member of the gallant Mississippi Rifles, and there was not a better regiment ever went to Mexico than that regiment, nor any one which did more gallant or efficient service for the flag of the Union than that regiment.

This does not propose to give a pension to any man who is capable of making his own living. The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIAMS] does not need anything; the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN], who was in that war, needs nothing; the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] needs no aid, nor do I. I know of no other four here, nor does this amendment make any provision for any of us, and so long as I am able to earn my living by the sweat of my face I want no aid from any government; but I do know that there are men all over the State which I have the honor in part to represent who thirty-seven years ago marched out under the flag of the Union, full of life, full of hope, full of promise, and I know that many of those men who thirty-seven years ago fought the battles of their country under the flag of the Union upon a foreign soil to the acquisition of the grandest empire ever added to any country, are to-day old and needy, and it is for them that the Senator from Mississippi enters his plea, and I join him and second him in entering that plea; not that I want anything; not that any Senator here who served in that war wants anything; but there is and there ought to be a fellow-feeling among soldiers who served in the same war and under the same flag. If they were true to the flag of their country there is a fellow-feeling; and I do feel for those men whom I see around me who were in that Mexican war and who to-day are needy. I do not want to see them go to the poor-house; I do not want them to become the objects of private charity; and because I do believe they have an equitable appeal to the charity of this Government, I say this amendment ought to pass, and it extends to that class and to that class only.

In my own State, unlike perhaps the condition represented by the Senator from Kentucky, there are many men who were in the Mexican war who to-day are in a comfortable condition; they have made themselves so by their own exertions; but there are others, honest and true men, now old, many of them decrepit, helpless, who need this little pittance of $8 a month, and if this Government is the generous and charitable government that it ought to be, it seems to me this aid ought to be extended.

But, says the Senator from Vermont, this ought not to interfere with those who lost an arm or a leg in the late war and are therefore rendered unfit to earn their living. Sir, these men by reason of age, decrepitude, and many of them by reason of exposure in the Mexican war have been brought to that condition of decrepitude where they are not able to earn their living. Therefore there is a parallel between the cases. Wherever these men may live, whether in the bleak snows of Maine or of New Hampshire or down in the sunny land where I reside, it makes no difference. I believe that the soldiers who fought under the flag of the Union in the late war, if the question were submitted to them, would say that these gallant old remnants in decrepitude of the Mexican war ought to be pensioned and would gladly pay their portion for doing it, and I say it, sir, upon the faith of the fact that to-day there are filed in the Senate and in the other House the positive instructions of some twenty-seven or twenty-eight States of this Union to pension not these poor decrepit men only, but the soldiers generally of the Mexican war, and for reasons best known to Senators that has not been done. I propose to obey that instruction because it is right, and whenever the opportunity is presented I propose to vote for a bill pensioning the soldiers of the Mexican war as they ought to be, for it is not a bounty granted to them; they have given to this Government an empire, a mere trifle of which would much more than compensate them with a larger pension than was ever granted to any soldier in the history of this country, not out of money that the Government had before the war, but out of that which was added to the Government by a fair construction.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, can not we have a vote now?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] to the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE].

Mr. VEST. Let it be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be read.

The ACTING SECRETARY. At the end of the proposed amendment it is moved to add:

> And who labors under the disabilities imposed by the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution of the United States.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HOAR. I will not call for the yeas and nays on that at this time; but I wish to be permitted to say that that amendment is preserving the language of a bill which was offered on the other side of the Chamber by some gentleman representing more particularly the desires of these soldiers two years ago. I was thinking it was the Senator from Texas, but he assures me I was mistaken.

Mr. MAXEY. No; I offered a different bill.

Mr. HOAR. That was a bill introduced and referred. It was pending here. The Senator from Kentucky made a long speech in its favor. That contained the exception of persons who were under disability.

Mr. GEORGE. I will state to the Senator from Massachusetts that there is not a single person in my knowledge who is under the disability that would be entitled to the benefits of the amendment.

Mr. HOAR. It can do no harm.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE].

The question being put, a division was called for.

Mr. HARRIS. It is just as well to have the yeas and nays at once, because a division will develop the want of a quorum as well as the yeas and nays. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. VOORHEES. Let the amendment be read.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. VOORHEES. I hope the amendment will be voted down.

The Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ANTHONY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN].

Mr. GEORGE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. CAMERON]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. JACKSON (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. KELLOGG (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE].

Mr. MILLER, of California (when his name was called). I am paired with my colleague [Mr. FARLEY].

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). On this question I am paired with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. SAUNDERS]. If he were here, I should vote "yea."

Mr. MCMILLAN (when Mr. WINDOM'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. WINDOM] is paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. DAVIS].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. JONAS. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. PENDLETON] is paired with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY].

Mr. LOGAN. I was paired, but I have transferred the pair to the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE], so that we can both vote to make a quorum.

Mr. GEORGE. I vote "yea."

Mr. BECK. I am paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE].

Mr. SLATER. On this question I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON].

Mr. CALL. I announce the pair of my colleague [Mr. JONES, of Florida] with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON].

Mr. ALLISON. I supposed I was paired with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL].

Mr. CALL. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] I think transferred the pair to my colleague.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well; then I withhold my vote.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I will vote to make a quorum, and I vote "yea" because my colleague [Mr. FARLEY] would vote "yea."

Mr. PLUMB. On this question I am paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BROWN].

The result was announced—yeas 16, nays 24; as follows:

YEAS—16.

Barrow,	Coke,	Harris,	Morgan,
Bayard,	Garland,	Jonas,	Pugh,
Call,	George,	Maxey,	Vest.
Cockrell,	Groome,	Miller of Cal.,	Walker.

NAYS—24.

Aldrich,	Harrison,	McDill,	Platt,
Blair,	Hill,	McMillan,	Rollins,
Conger,	Hoar,	Miller of N. Y.,	Sawyer,
Davis of Ill.,	Ingalls,	Mitchell,	Sewell,
Dawes,	Lapham,	Morrill,	Sherman,
Edmunds,	Logan,	Pendleton,	Voorhees.

ABSENT—36.

Allison,	Fair,	Jackson,	Ransom,
Anthony,	Farley,	Johnston,	Saulsbury,
Beck,	Ferry,	Jones of Florida,	Saunders,
Brown,	Frye,	Jones of Nevada,	Slater,
Butler,	Gorman,	Kellogg,	Tabor,
Camden,	Grover,	Lamar,	Vance,
Cameron of Pa.,	Hale,	McPherson,	Van Wyck,
Cameron of Wis.,	Hampton,	Mahone,	Williams,
Davis of W. Va.,	Hawley,	Plumb,	Windom.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HARRIS. I simply want to give notice that hereafter upon any question that is to be decided by the vote of the Senate, as the Senate is very thin and we have to draw up Senators and pairs have to be broken in order to make a quorum, I shall object to this course of proceeding. It is not a fair expression of the judgment of the Senate, and I shall object to this system of waiting and drumming up in order that we may show a quorum to decide not the judgment of the Senate but the judgment of the few that may be here, even though they be paired. I simply want to serve that notice, and whatever under the rules of the Senate I may have a right to do in the future, no matter what the question is, I give notice that I will do.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Will do what?

Mr. HARRIS. When the roll-call ends and Senators present have voted that see proper to vote, I shall insist that the vote be announced and the result declared.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is right.

Mr. HARRIS. And no drumming up to hunt up a quorum and breaking pairs to make a quorum that would not express the judgment of the Senate if the Senate were full, shall be allowed.

Mr. ROLLINS. Does the Senator from Tennessee object to sending out for Senators to committee-rooms?

Mr. HARRIS. I do not; but I object——

Mr. ROLLINS. What does the Senator mean by breaking pairs?

Mr. HARRIS. I do object to Senators breaking pairs and voting to make a quorum when they express not the judgment of the Senate but the judgment of the few who choose to be so unpaired.

Mr. ROLLINS. As to the matter of pairs I simply state that pairs have been quite as often broken on the other side of the Chamber as on this.

Mr. HARRIS. On that subject the Senator from New Hampshire is radically and wholly mistaken.

Mr. ROLLINS. The Senator from New Hampshire is not radically mistaken or wholly mistaken.

Mr. HARRIS. The RECORD will show it.

Mr. ROLLINS. The Senator from New Hampshire knows whereof he speaks.

Mr. ANTHONY. I take advantage of this vanishing quorum to move that the hour of meeting to-morrow be 11 o'clock.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Do not decide that yet; let us wait.

Mr. HARRISON. Let us have a vote on the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is not in order while this is pending.

Mr. ANTHONY. It is always in order.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was concurred in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Shall the amendment be engrossed and the bill be read a third time?

Mr. HARRISON and Mr. ROLLINS called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. When the roll-call is finished the Chair will announce the result. If any persons wish to vote they must vote before the roll-call is finished.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Before the result is announced, by the paper being handed to the Chair?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes, sir.

The Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BARROW (when his name was called.) On this vote I am paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES.] If he were here, I should vote "nay."

Mr. BARROW (when Mr. BROWN'S name was called). I believe that my colleague [Mr. BROWN] is paired with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB].

Mr. PLATT (when Mr. HAWLEY'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. HAWLEY] is paired with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. PENDLETON]. If he were present, my colleague would vote "yea."

Mr. JACKSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. KELLOGG (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE].

Mr. LOGAN (when his name was called). I have transferred my pair with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. RANSOM] to the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE], but I do not see him present. I presume he will be here. I vote "yea," and I can withdraw my vote if he does not appear.

Mr. MILLER, of California (when his name was called). I am paired with my colleague [Mr. FARLEY].

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. SAUNDERS]. If he were here, I should vote "nay."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. SLATER. I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON]. He would vote "yea" and I should vote "nay."

Mr. GEORGE. I have exchanged pairs with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN]. I vote "nay."

Mr. ALLISON. I am paired with the Senator from Florida [Mr. JONES]. If he were here, I should vote "yea." The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. SAUNDERS] was paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIAMS]. That pair is transferred by agreement to the Senator from Florida [Mr. JONES]. Therefore I vote "yea."

Mr. MCMILLAN. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. WINDOM] is paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. DAVIS]. My colleague would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 27, nays 14; as follows:

YEAS—27.

Aldrich,	Edmunds,	McDill,	Rollins,
Allison,	Harrison,	McMillan,	Sawyer,
Blair,	Hill,	Miller of Cal.,	Sewell,
Cockrell,	Hoar,	Miller of N. Y.,	Sherman,

Cameron of Wis.,	Hampton,	Mahone,	Van Wyck,
Davis of W. Va.,	Hawley,	Pendleton,	Windom.
Fair,	Jackson,	Plumb,

So it was ordered that the amendment be engrossed and the bill read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

Mr. COKE. I ask for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. VOORHEES. I regret that the bill as it came from the House has been amended, but as it has been amended I shall vote for it in the hope that the House will pass it as it first sent it, and I have confidence that it will do so. I did trust that we should have passed the House bill as it came here, but as it has not been done I shall vote for the bill as it now stands before us.

The Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GEORGE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN], having transferred my pair with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. CAMERON] to him.

Mr. BECK (when Mr. HALE'S name was called.) The Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] is absent and I am paired with him.

Mr. PLATT (when Mr. HAWLEY'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. HAWLEY] is paired with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. PENDLETON]. If he were here, my colleague would vote "yea."

Mr. JACKSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. KELLOGG (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE]. If he were here, I should vote "yea."

Mr. SLATER (when his name was called). On this question I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I again announce that my colleague [Mr. WINDOM] is paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. DAVIS].

Mr. MILLER, of California. I am paired with my colleague [Mr. FARLEY].

Mr. ROLLINS. The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HAMPTON] is paired with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES]. The Senator from Virginia [Mr. MAHONE] is paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY].

The result was announced—yeas 27, nays 14; as follows:

YEAS—27.

Aldrich,	Hale,	McDill,	Rollins,
Allison,	Harrison,	McMillan,	Sawyer,
Blair,	Hill,	Miller of N. Y.,	Sewell,
Cockrell,	Hoar,	Mitchell,	Sherman,
Conger,	Ingalls,	Morrill,	Vest,
Davis of Ill.,	Lapham,	Platt,	Voorhees.
Dawes,	Logan,	Plumb,

NAYS—14.

Barrow,	Coke,	Jonas,	Walker,
Bayard,	Garland,	Maxey,	Williams.
Beck,	George,	Morgan,
Call,	Harris,	Pugh,

ABSENT—35.

Anthony,	Farley,	Johnston,	Ransom,
Brown,	Ferry,	Jones of Florida,	Saulsbury,

Davis of W. Va.,	Hampton,	Mahone,	Van Wyck,
Edmunds,	Hawley,	Miller of Cal.,	Windom.
Fair,	Jackson,	Pendleton,

So the bill was passed.

Mr. PLATT. I move to amend the title by adding "and for other purposes."

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. VOORHEES. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. CONGER. I hope the Senator will withdraw that. It is very important to have an executive session.

Mr. VOORHEES. I withdraw the motion.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. Res. 365) in relation to the distribution of the volumes of the Official Records of the War of the Rebellion; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. MAXEY, it was Ordered*, That leave be granted to withdraw from the files of the Senate the papers of Charles C. Cresson, subject to the rules.

AMENDMENT TO A BILL.

Mr. HARRIS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 6737) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for prior years, and for those certified as due by the accounting officers of the Treasury in accordance with section 4 of the act of June 14, 1878, heretofore paid from permanent appropriations, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The joint resolution (H. Res. 365) in relation to the distribution of the volumes of the Official Records of the War of the Rebellion was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Printing.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CONGER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 21 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 10 o'clock and 26 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, February 28, 1883.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m. Prayer by Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

CONFEREES ON REVENUE BILL.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] desires to make a statement.

Mr. RANDALL. If I had followed my impulses on the moment of the announcement of the conferees on the part of the House on the differences between the two Houses as to tax and tariff legislation I would have then and there declined service, but I preferred to act after reflection and deliberation, and thus avoid the semblance of what might be thought hasty action. Seldom, if ever, during my service in this House have I avoided duty or responsibility, but in this instance I feel I can better serve the interests of my State by a relinquishment of the labor assigned to me. I leave behind me on the committee of conference a member representing my own State, and in fact my own city, who has devoted a lifetime to the subjects in controversy. Whatever report may come as a result of this action of the House, when it is presented I shall be more at liberty to pursue such course on its consideration as will enable me to best promote the great and many interests of the country.

I therefore, Mr. Speaker, ask that the House may relieve me from the service which you were kind enough to assign me to, and that you will select some one else in my stead.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] will be relieved from service on the conference committee. [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection.

The Chair will appoint to fill the vacancy thus created Mr. MORRISON, of Illinois.

Mr. MORRISON. I respectfully decline the service.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will appoint to fill the vacancy occasioned by the declination the gentleman from Virginia, Mr. TUCKER.

Mr. TUCKER. Mr. Speaker, as the third appointee I must respectfully decline.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will consider the question further.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, communicated to the House a duplicate engrossed copy of a bill heretofore sent to the House and lost, namely:

The bill (S. 565) for the relief of Silas Q. Howe, surviving partner of William T. Pate & Co.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. PAGE. I rise to a question of personal privilege.

Mr. Speaker, last night during the debate on the river and harbor bill in a colloquy between the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] and myself, that gentleman, as I am informed by him, misunderstanding what I said and attributing my remarks as being personal to himself, made a response which was personally offensive to me. I trust that after the gentleman from New York has had time to consider it he will make the necessary explanation to the House of the remarks which he made in the presence of the House last evening.

Mr. COX, of New York. That is not just exactly the way in which I intended to put it. [Laughter.]

I desire to say this: that on what seemed to me a provocation I used language in reply which I sincerely regret having used toward the gentleman from California. I have served with him here many years. We have had very near relations lately on our shipping committee. We all have our partialities; I have a partiality for him more than for most members on this side. But when the gentleman used expressions that were entirely personal, I retorted, as I inevitably do when attacked, and never otherwise. With the consent of the gentleman from California and myself all that personal matter was left out of the RECORD, very properly. I supposed that there would be no more of it. But my friend is going home to California and I would not have him take away one single feeling of resentment toward any man, much less myself. And therefore, in the presence of the House, if there is any feeling about it, I make the amplest apology. [Applause.]

ALASKA DELEGATE OR AGENT.

Mr. PAUL, from the Committee on Elections, reported a joint resolution (H. Res. 366) for the relief of M. D. Ball; which was read twice, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and ordered to be printed, together with the accompanying report.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. FORD. I ask leave to take from the Speaker's table Senate bill No. 281 and substitute it for House bill 7538, and ask for its present consideration.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman desire to take up the Senate bill?

Mr. FORD. Yes, sir.

Mr. HISCOCK. I call for the regular order.

Mr. BINGHAM. I desire to present a report.

Mr. HISCOCK. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order will be the call of committees under what is known as the Pound rule.

Mr. HISCOCK. I move to dispense with the Pound rule for to-day.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that can not be done.

Mr. HISCOCK. Not by a two-thirds vote?

The SPEAKER. The Pound rule does not interfere with appropriation bills.

Mr. HISCOCK. Then I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and I give notice that my intention is to proceed with the deficiency appropriation bill.

Mr. PAGE. I shall raise the question of consideration against the deficiency appropriation bill; and if the motion to consider that shall fail, I shall then move to go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union to further consider the river and harbor appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour for the call of committees, although it comes after the hour for the Pound rule, must be first dispensed with.

Mr. HISCOCK. Then I move to dispense with the morning hour for the call of committees.

The motion was agreed to (two-thirds voting in favor thereof).

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, stating that his purpose is to proceed with the consideration of the deficiency appropriation bill.

Mr. DUNNELL. I rise to express the hope that the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] and the gentleman from California [Mr. PAGE] will avoid the waste of time which will be consumed in wrangling over which bill shall be considered.

Mr. PAGE. Let the House decide that matter.

Mr. HISCOCK. I submit that question to a vote of the House.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon the motion of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. KENNA. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry, for the purpose of ascertaining the effect of the action of the House on this motion. Suppose the House should vote down the motion of the gentleman from New York——

Mr. HISCOCK. I object to debate; nobody can understand what is being said.

The SPEAKER. There is no debate. Progress will be made by hearing only one at a time.

Mr. KENNA. I desire to ascertain from the Chair what will be the effect of the action of the House in case it should vote down the motion of the gentleman from New York?

The SPEAKER. The way will then be open to another proper motion.

Mr. KENNA. To a motion to go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for a different purpose?

The SPEAKER. If it relates to appropriations.

Mr. KENNA. The Chair will see the difficulty which I desire to avoid. If the proposition to go into Committee of the Whole to consider the deficiency appropriation bill shall be voted down I desire to ascertain if it will then be in order for the gentleman from California [Mr. PAGE] to move to go into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering another appropriation bill?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it would.

Mr. PAGE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PAGE. When the Committee of the Whole rose last evening it had under consideration the river and harbor appropriation bill. Does not that bill take precedence when the House again goes into Committee of the Whole?

The SPEAKER. It is unfinished business.

Mr. PAGE. It is unfinished business?

The SPEAKER. In Committee of the Whole, however.

Mr. PAGE. Then I would like to make a further inquiry of the Chair. If the House shall decide to go into Committee of the Whole, would not the river and harbor appropriation bill be the first business in order in committee?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the general appropriation bill would take precedence, if the motion of the gentleman from New York shall be carried.

Mr. PAGE. Then I raise the question of consideration against that bill.

The SPEAKER. That will be determined by a vote of the House.

Mr. HISCOCK. Let the vote in the first instance be taken by tellers as a test vote.

Mr. KENNA. As I understand it, if the motion now made to go into Committee of the Whole, no matter for what purpose the gentleman from New York may indicate he desires to go there, should prevail it would then be a question for the committee to determine which business should be first considered.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not desire to decide what may properly come up in committee.

Mr. KENNA. I do not ask the Chair to decide any question which may arise in Committee of the Whole, but I do ask the Chair to decide whether it is a question for the House or for the committee to determine.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has already indicated that in his opinion the general appropriation bill would take precedence. But there is a question involved, from the fact that in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union there is pending unfinished business; which question the Chair does not want to decide.

Mr. KENNA. I would ask the Chair to state whether that is a question for the committee or for the House to decide.

The SPEAKER. The rule provides the mode of getting rid of this question. If objection is made in Committee of the Whole to the consideration of any bill, the committee must rise and then the House determines the question by a vote.

Mr. KENNA. All I want is to have a ruling on that point.

Mr. HISCOCK. Let the vote be taken by tellers, which will test it.

Mr. McLANE, of Maryland. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. McLANE, of Maryland. I did not want to make it, but I feel it my duty now to make it. My point of order is that no motion such as that made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] can be entertained. You can not in the House resolve to go into Committee of the Whole on a particular bill. When the House shall go into Committee of the Whole then the rules indicate the order of business.

Mr. SPRINGER. I wished to make that point of order myself.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the rule covers that point.

Mr. SPRINGER. I understood the Chair to entertain the motion that the House shall now go into Committee of the Whole, to consider the deficiency appropriation bill.

Mr. McLANE, of Maryland. I ask the Chair to decide my point of order, and I do not wish the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] to interpose. I have submitted a question of order to the Chair, that the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] can not properly make the motion he has made; he can only give notice of what his intention is in making the motion.

Mr. HISCOCK. That is all I have done.

Mr. McLANE, of Maryland. There is no objection to that.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not entertain the motion to go into Committee of the Whole on a particular bill. The Chair calls attention to paragraph 9 of Rule XVI, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

At any time after the expiration of the morning hour it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, for the purpose of considering bills raising revenue or general appropriation bills.

Mr. McLANE, of Maryland. As I understand, it is contended that the river and harbor bill is a general appropriation bill, and in Committee of the Whole we shall have to decide which of the appropriation bills shall be taken up.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not prepared to pass on that question.

Mr. SPRINGER. I give notice that there is another bill in Committee of the Whole not disposed of—the tariff bill—which takes precedence of both these other bills.

The SPEAKER. The Chair entertains the only motion submitted, which is that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. PAGE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Under the rule which has been read, may the chairman of the Committee of the Whole decide that the river and harbor bill is not a revenue or general appropriation bill, and decline to recognize it as entitled to consideration?

The SPEAKER. That point the present occupant of the chair will not undertake to answer. Does the gentleman from California demand tellers on the motion to go into Committee of the Whole?

Mr. PAGE. No, sir, unless gentlemen are willing that the vote be now taken by tellers as a test upon the question whether the river and harbor bill shall be taken up in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. KENNA. It will not operate as any test.

Mr. PAGE. Very well; if it will not operate as a test I do not ask tellers.

The SPEAKER (having put the question on the motion). The motion of the gentleman from New York is agreed to; and the House decides to resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. POUND] will take the chair.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. POUND in the chair.

Mr. PAGE. I move that the Committee of the Whole proceed to consider the unfinished business coming over from yesterday—the river and harbor appropriation bill.

Mr. HISCOCK. Upon that I raise the question of consideration, my object being that the deficiency appropriation bill be taken up.

Mr. SPRINGER. I rise to a question of order. I make the point that neither of these bills is in order. The rule determines what business is in order. It says that we shall consider bills in their order upon the Calendar. The unfinished business in order is the tariff bill, which was left in Committee of the Whole a week ago last Saturday on the supposition that we would resume its consideration on the succeeding Monday, but it has not been touched since.

Mr. FLOWER. Did not the President in his message urge legislation on the tariff? [Laughter.]

Mr. SPRINGER. Yes, sir; of course he did. I need not read his words again on that subject. He says this Congress must revise the tariff.

Mr. HISCOCK. The deficiency bill is a general appropriation bill, and I submit is entitled to consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will direct the Clerk to read clause 4 of Rule XXIII.

The Clerk read as follows:

In Committees of the Whole House, business on their calendars shall be taken up in regular order except bills for raising revenue, general appropriation bills, and bills for the improvement of rivers and harbors, which shall have precedence, and when objection is made to the consideration of any bill or proposition the committee shall thereupon rise and report such objection to the House, which shall decide, without debate, whether such bill or proposition shall be considered or laid aside for the present; whereupon the committee shall resume its sitting without further order of the House.

Mr. HISCOCK. Now, which bill does the Chair hold is first in order?

The CHAIRMAN. Under this clause of the rules the Chair decides that the river and harbor bill, being unfinished business, takes precedence of the deficiency appropriation bill.

Mr. HISCOCK. Then I raise the question of consideration, and object to the consideration of the river and harbor bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection being made to the consideration of this bill, the committee, in accordance with the rule, will rise, that the House may determine the question whether the bill shall be considered.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. POUND reported that in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union objection had been made to the consideration of the river and harbor bill, and the committee, in accordance with the rule, had risen, that the House might decide whether the bill should be considered.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Shall the Committee of the Whole proceed further with the consideration of the river and harbor appropriation bill?

Mr. PAGE. Let us have tellers on that question.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, tellers will be considered as ordered. The Chair hears none. The gentleman from New York, Mr. HISCOCK, and the gentleman from California, Mr. PAGE, will act as tellers.

Mr. PAGE. Will the Chair again state the question?

The SPEAKER. The question is, Shall the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union further proceed with the consideration of the river and harbor bill?

The question being taken, there were—ayes 92, noes 71.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I call for the yeas and nays.

On ordering the yeas and nays there were—ayes 23, noes 93; less than one-fifth voting in the affirmative.

Mr. CAMP. I call for tellers on ordering the yeas and nays.

Tellers were not ordered.

So the yeas and nays were not ordered.

The SPEAKER. The House decides that the Committee of the Whole shall proceed with the consideration of the river and harbor appropriation bill. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] will take the chair.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7631) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. McLANE] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. McLANE, of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, before I proceed I want, if possible, to reach an understanding with the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] who said he wanted time for the Mississippi River Committee. The gentleman from California [Mr. PAGE], the chairman of the Committee on Commerce, is disposed like myself to give all the time that committee demands. I wish simply to call the attention of the gentleman from Michigan to this fact, that the Committee on Commerce, which reported this bill, have not yet consumed one hour in support of the proposition. The chairman of the committee took his hour, out of which he yielded to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HORR] and then reserved fifteen minutes, which he now has. So in truth only three-quarters of an hour have been consumed by the Committee on Commerce for the bill. Then the gentleman from New York [Mr. RICHARDSON] took the floor against the bill and spoke for one hour. I followed the gentleman from New York, and there remains two and a half hours, and I propose to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROBINSON] I shall go on with what I have to say, yielding some time to the friends of the bill, and then the Committee on the Mississippi River can take the floor and have the time, the chairman of the Committee on Commerce disposing of the time in closing to the friends of the bill. Is that the agreement?

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I want to be recognized in my own right.

Mr. McLANE, of Maryland. That is dividing the time between the friends and the opponents of the bill about equally.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I desire to take the floor in my own right.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. No time seems to be given to those who are opposed to the bill.

Mr. ELLIS. How much time?

Mr. McLANE, of Maryland. About an hour and a half.

Mr. ELLIS. An hour and a half to be divided between those holding opposing views.

Mr. KENNA. I desire to have a definite understanding about this procedure. I understand the gentleman from Maryland to be entitled to one hour. I understand the chairman of the committee [Mr. PAGE] to have reserved only fifteen minutes.

Mr. McLANE, of Maryland. That is all.

Mr. KENNA. That leaves an hour and a half, and I do not understand that hour and a half to be yielded to those who represent any particular view of the committee.

Mr. McLANE, of Maryland. To the whole committee.

Mr. KENNA. And it is to have it to be divided as the committee pleases.

Mr. PAGE. This can be easily settled. Let the gentleman from Maryland proceed with his remarks and speak as long as he pleases, and then yield whatever he has left.

Mr. McLANE, of Maryland. I am going to do that, but I thought it wise to have an understanding with the chairman of the Committee on the Mississippi River.

Mr. GIBSON. I understood from the chairman of the committee he would yield one half hour to me.

Mr. PAGE. After the previous question.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Does the gentleman from Michigan oppose the bill? I do not see any time for those who are opposed to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland is entitled to the floor for fifty-five minutes.

Mr. McLANE, of Maryland. Very well; then I should like to go on.

Mr. GIBSON. I rise to a point of order. There is so much confusion we are unable to hear the gentleman from Maryland.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland is entitled to the floor and will proceed.

Mr. McLANE, of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, I am very sorry this river and harbor bill should always excite so much feeling in committee and make it well nigh impossible for any man to do either himself or the subject justice. I have myself no sympathy with this violence of passion which characterizes either the friends of or the opposition to this bill. I naturally feel as any decent man must at the display of vulgarity and ignorance which have marked this debate. When a man undertakes on this floor or elsewhere to abuse the English language by using improper terms, or by inventing terms which are not to be found in any respectable authority, and that language is applied either to the legislature as a body or to individuals, a man may naturally feel some regret and shame, although he may not have the slightest possible feeling, and though he may not make any personal application of it. So, also, when we learn from the other end of the Capitol that these river and harbor bills which have composed the ordinary and current legislation of the country since the first administration, always in the same form, always embracing such rivers and harbors as Congress in its discretion thought ought to be improved, when we learn they are a vicious branch of legislation calculated to corrupt, not only the legislature, but the executive branch of the Government itself, when we hear that from the other end of the Capitol, and look to see what there is that can be corrupted, and find the only executive branch that has to deal with the rivers and harbors is one of the most enlightened and honorable and faithful branches of the public service, when we find nobody has to do with the execution of river and harbor bills but the Engineer Corps of the Army, and when we find that corps without fear and without reproach, standing if you please as a sign of all that is most honorable in the executive government, a man is at liberty to feel some regret at this want of judgment and want of measure in the language of the Executive.

I understand very well that the Executive is called upon from time to time to make recommendations to Congress. He recommends to them such measures as he thinks wise and proper. But I also understand that when the Executive makes these recommendations he ought to restrain himself within the bounds of propriety, and that he ought not to criticise the legislation of the country in a way to place the legislators at a discredit. Now, I think it inexcusable in a high executive officer performing his constitutional duty to speak in terms of disrespect of the legislature that he is advising, that he is giving information to. And that in my judgment is an impropriety; but the impropriety becomes much more offensive when it is accompanied with a great display of ignorance as to the particular legislation he is criticising and discussing.

Now, Mr. Chairman, let me have the forbearing attention of my colleagues in this committee; because none of them, be they political friends or personal friends, have more respect for the Executive, who gives us the information, than I have. I believe him to be a most honorable, intelligent, and faithful officer, but like everybody else in the performance of public duty he can be—not being infallible, but far from it—he can be misled, and can therefore make fundamental mistakes of his own, or can be grossly misled by his executive advisers; and being misled, he may do very great injustice to others. Mr. Chairman, never in the course of my experience in public life have I known the Executive to be so grossly misled and mistaken as now; and through that mistake comes the injustice he has done to the legislative body. And more than that, his high example has worked an infinite deal of mischief. When the President of the United States tells you that we have appropriated $18,000,000 for the improvement of works upon rivers and harbors, many of which are unworthy the favor of the legislature of this Government, and that the amount you have appropriated can not be expended and that it is on hand, and that therefore because it is on hand and unexpended you should not appropriate any more, and that the manner in which you have appropriated it is vicious, every political declaimer and penny-a-liner in the country has very high authority for denouncing the legislature. And so honorable gentlemen upon this floor, who are not willing to give the necessary time for reading even the bill, much less for consulting the authorities upon which it has been based—I say many members who are not willing to even give time to read it feel quite at liberty to follow that high example and authority at the other end of the Avenue, denouncing the bill and the legislature.

Therefore it is a common occurrence in debate upon rivers and harbors to find members who never did read the bill denouncing it because we have appropriated more money than we can spend and that we have more than enough in the Treasury to-day to carry us through the year 1884. The men who have the authority of the President of the United States and the Secretary of War for that assertion can not be found fault with. I find no fault with the honorable gentleman who makes the statement from the official record that we have appropriated more money than can be spent and that we have now on hand enough to carry us through the year 1884, and therefore this Congress ought not to appropriate more. I find no fault with him, because he has that statement given to him by the Executive; but I appeal to him never to repeat that statement again, because he can not repeat it and speak the truth. We appropriated about $18,000,000 for the improvement of rivers and harbors for the year terminating July 1, 1883. Now, there is always on hand at the end of every fiscal year some four or five million dollars depending upon the amount appropriated and used in the current work, but already pledged for work already contracted for.

We appropriated about $18,000,000; we have now the official record from the War Department advising us how much of that money will be expended on the 1st of July, 1883, and we have further information from the War Department how much of it will be left at the end of the summer. Now, I want to say to this committee that of the eighteen millions appropriated, not referring to the balance turned over from the last year, and it is like the balance that comes over every year, but dealing with this specific sum in question of $18,000,000, you will have about five millions of it unexpended on the 1st of July, 1883; but you will have all of it contracted for and expended by the 1st of December, 1883, when you will not have a dollar of it; and if you mean to have the public works go on you must have money to carry them on. Now, let me make the application of that to a harbor with which I am most familiar. Let us make the application of it to the Baltimore Harbor, and I do not select it because I am more interested in it than any other harbor, nor because I have a Representative relation to it, but because I know personally the facts to which I wish to call attention. There was a sum of money, $450,000, appropriated for dredging that channel. The heaviest dredges in the world have been obtained to do that work. They are actually in the channel. The channel itself is about three hundred feet wide; the length of a ship coming up that channel is between three and four hundred feet. There is therefore at best very little room, and the dredges are in the channel.

From one cause or another three hundred and odd thousand dollars of the $450,000 is left unexpended on the 1st of July, 1883; but the whole $450,000 is contracted for and will be expended by the end of the summer of 1883.

Therefore if you appropriate no money for the next year your channel will be obstructed with your dredges, and a work that was intended to be finished in two years may take three or four years—an indefinite time, during all of which time your channel is impeded, and in its condition worse than when you commenced work. Better far, Mr. Chairman, never to have undertaken that work than to perform it in this unskillful and unscientific manner.

This House and the other branch of the Legislature are invited to appropriate no more money for that work because what you appropriated is to-day unexpended, when the fact is before your calendar year is terminated there will be not a dollar of it on hand.

What I say for that harbor applies to other harbors and other rivers. Now, that is the fact, and that is the fact acknowledged by the Secretary of War. How it was that the President of the United States was misled is not for us even to inquire. There can be no excuse for the Secretary of War that misled him. There can be no excuse for the executive officer, whoever he was, who took that information to the President and which the President communicated to Congress. Either his motive was sinister or his ignorance was inexcusable. Who was it? It would be in the interest of the Government to know. I have sought to know. No official record shows it. No record comes from the War Department that is not perfectly accurate. No exception can be taken to any report that ever emanated from the Secretary of War. I have seen them all, and know that no more honorable, no more intelligent gentleman is to be found in the Federal administration than the Secretary of War, and all the reports which he has sent to Congress are strictly accurate. And I am speaking from them to-day when I tell you that the whole amount of your appropriation of $18,000,000 will be expended during the year 1883, and that if your works are worthy of support you must appropriate money to carry them on.

Now, not only was the President misled, but I have no doubt his mortification is greater than mine. I confess that I am mortified that I should be arraigned in the discharge of my duty as a Representative by an Executive that tells me I have appropriated more money in the first session of this Congress than can be expended during the two years, because it was my business to know, and I did know that I appropriated not a dollar more than could be profitably expended.

Why, Mr. Chairman, we have the estimates of the Secretary of War himself communicating to us the estimates of his engineers, telling us we could expend profitably about $33,000,000 for rivers and harbors; and we appropriated half that amount only, and that half will have been expended during this calendar year. And the Secretary of War who made those estimates is the man upon whose report I base my statement to-day. Who it was that the President referred to when he said the Secretary of War informed him that there would be this balance passes my comprehension. I have not been able to ascertain how he could have had any such information from the Secretary of War, because when I voted for the river and harbor bill I had the report of the Secretary of War that he could expend profitably twice as much as I voted for and twice as much as Congress appropriated.

It is out of such exaggeration that comes this vulgarity of abuse, whether we hear it on this floor or whether we read it in the press. It is on this floor we hear about our river and harbor "steal." Now, if I had used that language, I should have sought in justice to myself to have found a justification. If I had found that I had been misled by the Executive, I would denounce the Executive, and not my colleagues on this floor; and if I had used that language, misinformed by the Executive, I would feel called upon now to make some amends to my colleagues whom I had traduced.

It is very little matter to us on this floor what the newspapers write about this bill, or about any bill; because they have fallen into a habit of very loose and extravagant style, and they call each other liars and thieves and vagabonds from day to day without reserve. There is no high journal in the country, there is no high metropolitan journal such as has been sometimes referred to here, that does not when it speaks of its neighbor and colleague in the press call him a liar and a thief and a vagabond as it pleases.

Mr. Greeley originated that style. He never when speaking of a brother editor hesitated to call him a liar when he differed from him, and his bad taste and bad habit has come down to our day, and you have only got now to read what they say of each other to anticipate what they say of us.

But though I am thus indifferent to this bad taste in newspapers I am not indifferent to-day when I meet it in a colleague on this floor, and I never will permit any man on this floor to denounce a vote of mine as unworthy of respect without challenging him to the proof; and, thank God, I feel a great confidence that I can brand him to-day if not as a calumniator, then as a man ignorant of the current legislation, and he ought to make an excuse to the House for his want of attention to the current work. How can any honorable gentleman who has never read this bill—and there are some who have not—talk about the amount of money in it or the character of the work?

Now, time is pressing on me so that I have not the opportunity to say to the opponents of this bill what I want to say.

I know no man on this floor who is opposed to all river and harbor improvements; not one. I know no man who has planted himself upon any such position. If I have sufficient acquaintance with the subject and with the debates of this House, every man who has made himself felt upon this floor in opposition to this bill has done it upon the merits of the bill itself. He has denounced the bill for the amounts appropriated, or for the value and character of the works.

Now, I beg his attention. I do not believe that there is in this bill, or that there was in the bill of last year, twenty items unworthy of being in that bill. And I do not believe that the aggregate amount of those twenty items exceeds $250,000 out of the $18,000,000 appropriated by the bill. So convinced am I of that, that although I give my concurrence to the bill now reported by the Committee on Commerce, and which appropriates $7,987,000, I greatly prefer the bill of last year as it passed the House.

The bill of last year, when modified as to the Mississippi River improvements so as to make the item for the Mississippi River appropriation correspond with the recommendation of the Mississippi River Committee, when that item was brought down to one and a half million dollars, and some thirty small items omitted, then the bill that would pass the House with that one and a half million dollars would amount to about $14,000,000. That is the bill which in my judgment this Congress ought to send to the President for his signature.

It will contain everything estimated for by the Secretary of War; it omits thirty-three items of last year's bill, and those thirty-three items are not in it because the works are completed, or because more than the small balances that remain can not be profitably expended. Altogether those thirty-three items amount to $284,000 only. There are therefore only $284,000 in the amount of last year's bill which is not embraced in a bill which I should like to move as a substitute for this bill, and which I certainly shall move so as to take the sense of the House upon it, if it is not the pleasure of the House to pass the bill reported by the Committee on Commerce.

I wish I could have a little more opportunity to confer with the gentlemen who are opposed to this bill, because, as I said before, none of them want to refuse all river and harbor improvements. And the appeal which I want to make to them is this: These items in this bill which have excited their opposition are meritorious items. I would appeal to them to shake off from themselves the sectional feeling that induces their opposition.

Now, we might as well look this question in the face, as we ought to look all questions in the face. For years and years these river and harbor bills were confined to the Atlantic seaboard and the Northern States, with small, insignificant sums for the Mississippi River. But now, as time has developed our Western country, as population has transferred itself from the eastern slope of the Alleghanies to the valley of the Mississippi, great changes have taken place, and the bill that used to contain four or five hundred thousand dollars for the Western rivers now contains from one to nine millions of dollars.

No proper river and harbor bill can ever be framed in this House with less than $5,000,000, I think $10,000,000, for the Mississippi River and all its tributaries. The bill of last year, you know, Mr. Chairman, appropriated nine millions and some hundreds of thousands of dollars for the Mississippi River and all its tributaries. It was that enormous appropriation of $10,000,000 for the Mississippi River Valley that shocked the northern and eastern sections of the country.

My friends from Massachusetts never felt any embarrassment about a river and harbor bill until they found the magnitude of these Western appropriations. And the patriotic and candid gentleman from Massachusetts in front of me [Mr. CRAPO] nods his head in assent. Ten million dollars to improve the Mississippi River? That has shocked the Eastern country, that has shocked the Northern country, and those districts which a few years ago were anxious to divide one or two million dollars and take their share for the lakes and the Atlantic coast now hesitate to take anything. Their harbors are now for the greater part finished; there is little work left to be done upon them; and rather than give $10,000,000 to that great valley those gentlemen representing these sections oppose the bill.

Other gentlemen on this floor have talked of railroads; have raised the hue and cry of railroads. In my judgment that is no nearer the truth than the cry of the opposition against jobs and "log-rolling."

Some of the great railroads of this country are conspicuous in support of river and harbor bills. I understand very well that when you take these $10,000,000 which I speak of for the Mississippi Valley you disturb the nerves of some of the great transportation lines running north and south, and some little those of the lines running east and west; mainly those running north and south.

But whether it be the north and south lines or the east and west lines, we representatives of the people ought to show supreme indifference to their opposition. It is not necessary to abuse them, it is not necessary to denounce them. It is in human nature if the improvement of these great water ways diminish their profits that they should be against those improvements.

But we who legislate for the people, who legislate to develop the interior of our country, ought not to be disturbed by their opposition. And that is all there is in this bill to excite opposition to-day, that this large sum of money is appropriated for Western rivers, and very naturally we have gone up to the headwaters of some of these Western rivers, and others of the Southern rivers, opening to the people of the interior easy ways of transportation and communication with the outside world.

The gentlemen who represent Mississippi, Alabama, and Georgia will appreciate what I say; the regions of those States which have no railroads but have magnificent streams embarrassed by logs and obstacles of one kind or another easily removed. They have been added to this bill, and the development of those States and the adjoining States of the Carolinas is something wonderful. These improvements were not formerly in river and harbor bills.

It is to them I appeal not to abandon this system because they are confronted with an angry and, as I said before, a vulgar and ignorant opposition. Let them not be deterred by the cry of a "river and harbor steal." Why, sir, who gets that money? Why, sir, so far as the representatives of the people are concerned, the most that can be said is that some man renders himself popular politically.

If that is the offense, give it its characterization. Do not expose yourselves to the imputation of calumniating honorable gentlemen who differ with you in opinion. "A river and harbor steal!" I tell you, Mr. Chairman, most of that talk comes from men ready to give themselves away either to a river and harbor or any other "steal." The malice that inspires it is accompanied with a covetous imagination which is "the father of the thought."

I do not want these allusions to take me from the merits of this question. I wish, before I close, to call attention, not only of gentlemen from all parts of the Mississippi Valley, but especially those gentlemen of this House who at the last session were inspired to oppose the Mississippi River improvement because perhaps it might save some man's house or farm or other property. Why, Mr. Chairman, this country, so fond of regarding itself as a great empire, this country of fifty million of people, that is so gracious to everybody who tells it of its wealth and magnitude and power—this country hesitates to-day to appropriate one-third of what France appropriates for her rivers and harbors—one-fourth of what England appropriates—less than half of what that little country, Holland, appropriates. She is not afraid of protecting the property and lives of her people. She understands perfectly well that when she improves a great alluvial valley like the Rhine River the navigation is not so important as the property and lives of her people. So far from hesitating about a dike or a levee here or there we ought to be delighted that our system of engineering in improving navigation makes property and life safe at the same time.

I have looked with amazement at gentlemen who would surround the appropriation for the Mississippi River and hedge it about with conditions that the river itself should not be improved if thereby property and life were preserved. With very great difficulty we passed through this House in the last Congress a bill containing the condition that levees should be built if in building them the navigation would be improved at the same time; but that it should appear clearly that the navigation was improved, or the levee should not be erected. So great was the embarrassment of the engineers in consequence of the language which the wisdom and the illiberality of this House put into that bill that they could not improve the river at all for fear of building a levee forbidden by the conditions of the law.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland has fifteen minutes remaining.

Mr. McLANE, of Maryland. I will go on with what I have to say; and I am only anticipating what will be, in my mind, an answer to that which is to come. Not only ought every river and harbor bill to contain a sufficient appropriation for the Mississippi River and its tributaries, but in improving that great river I believe the highest science in the country will clearly establish the propriety of the levee system. I am not afraid to say this in the presence of my honorable colleagues who have recently gone down that river on a steamboat. I have myself often gone down that river on a steamboat. In my youth I explored it as a United States engineer. I explored it expressly with a view to ascertain whether its navigation could be improved in the same manner that the rivers in Holland and Austria and Italy had been improved; and before I explored it I had an opportunity to explore the rivers of those countries. There I found rivers leveed to three times the height to which any man dreams the Mississippi River will ever be leveed. There you will find superb cities on the banks of rivers where the levees are as high as the tops of the houses. There you will find a rich and cultivated people who have had this done for them by their government.

But some gentlemen may say as to the people who are to receive some of the benefits of this Mississippi River improvement, this is not their Government. I deny it. This is their Government. This always was their Government; and it does not lie in the mouth of any man who forced them by fire and sword to have it remain their Government to deny to-day the fact that it is their Government. It is their Government, possessing all the powers that their original State governments possessed so far as commerce is concerned. No respectable statesman who ever lived in this country has questioned the fact that when the States formed this Union they surrendered to the Federal Government all commercial power—all power to improve rivers. A State is not allowed to-day to put a dredge-boat in a river if it obstructs navigation. A State is not allowed to-day to improve its own harbor if it obstructs navigation. It surrendered everything. It can not do it either by taxing tonnage or by its own local taxation. The point is, it can not obstruct the river. Gentlemen who represent Northern districts, Northern States—my honorable friend from Minnesota, and my other friend from Wisconsin who sits beyond him—know very well that the shallow rivers of Wisconsin have been declared to be waters of the United States within the admiralty jurisdiction of the United States, although nothing but a flat-boat had ever navigated them until the United States had improved them and removed the obstacles. That is the law of the land and the law of the most enlightened epoch of our history. That is the law which has come down from Marshall to Waite. Only the other day the Supreme Court, speaking through the mouth of David Davis, applied the doctrine laid down by Marshall to the Fox River in Wisconsin. In that case it was shown that before the United States improved the river nothing could navigate it but a flat-boat; and since the United States improved it it is navigated by steamers, and these steamers are subject to the admiralty jurisdiction of the United States.

Now let me ask some gentleman to show me a creek of Delaware or Maryland or Louisiana (where they have their creeks and bayous), to show me some creek more insignificant than that Fox River, which could only be navigated by flat-boats.

Mr. BRAGG. I would like to say to the gentleman that it is not navigated now by anything but log-rafts.

Mr. McLANE, of Maryland. The gentleman must not interrupt me, unless he wants to correct me.

Mr. BRAGG. I do. That river is not navigated now except by logs.

Mr. McLANE, of Maryland. The gentleman from Wisconsin abuses his privilege; he has not corrected me.

Mr. BRAGG. That depends upon whether the gentleman insists on the fact as he had stated it.

Mr. McLANE, of Maryland. I yielded for a correction, and the gentleman has not corrected me.

Mr. BRAGG. I say that river is not navigated now by anything except logs. It is utterly unnavigable.

Mr. McLANE, of Maryland. I state the fact that it is navigated by steamers——

Mr. BRAGG. Oh, no, sir.

Mr. McLANE, of Maryland. It is navigated by steamers, as it could not be before the United States improved it.

Mr. BRAGG. I will state to the gentleman that he is misinformed.

Mr. McLANE, of Maryland. No, I am not misinformed. I have the decision of the United States Supreme Court to justify what I state. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG] is no better authority than those who testify to this fact. The witnesses in that case were the most honorable men in this State.

Mr. BRAGG. Will the gentleman permit me a moment?

Mr. McLANE, of Maryland. I have only a moment.

Mr. BRAGG. Before the improvement of the Wisconsin River there was more steamboat service on it than there purports to be now. There is now, in fact, no regular steamboat service on it. It is a stream running through white sand where the channel changes every season.

Mr. McLANE, of Maryland. The testimony taken in the Montello case, a case well known, where the opinion of the court was given by Judge David Davis, the testimony in that case tells us distinctly before the United States improved the river it was not navigable for steamers. It was only navigable for flat-boats. That is the testimony. And then the court go on, and they add, although after improvement it was open to steamboat navigation, it was nevertheless within the admiralty jurisdiction of the United States before it was improved. But I refer to the Fox River and not the Wisconsin River, and I did not understand the correction of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG].

Now I am addressing myself to the opponents of this bill. I want the men who find fault with these insignificant creeks to review their opinions. I want to appeal to the men who have up to this time been willing to vote for the Mississippi River. I doubt the sincerity of men much who say they are willing to vote for the Mississippi and will not at the same time vote for the Hudson River—there is a stream within one State—or Duck Creek, on the Delaware Bay.

I tell you, Mr. Chairman, there is a spirit of illiberality manifested in opposition to this bill which is discreditable to the intelligence and information of this House. When a man talks to me about a little stream that is not navigable, who has never sounded its depths, who has never looked to know what the term navigable means; because when we speak on this floor we use terms in their legal signification, and when a man talks about a navigable stream in a river and harbor bill, it is not his caprice which determines whether it is navigable or not—no matter how learned he is, and still less when he is altogether ignorant—no matter how learned, it is not his caprice, because the law of the land defines whatever is navigable, and whatever is navigable is open to improvement. And then the point I make following that, you ought to be delighted to improve the small streams if they are within your power to improve. Here, Mr. Chairman, if I had to choose to-day between the Mississippi River, even great and imperial as it is in its proportion, and sacrifice in its behalf all the headwaters of the interior navigation of the country where live those rustic and rural people who have no means of communication with the world, I would let the Mississippi wait and first improve those rivers and creeks in North Alabama, North Mississippi, North Georgia, North Carolina, and South Carolina, and Florida, as well.

I will not say I would not vote for a bill that did not improve them, because I will take what I can get. But I mean to say as a statesman—if I may make the application of that term to myself—I mean to say as a statesman I think it is the duty of this Government, as the imperial power, to improve them first.

Remember, Mr. Chairman, I have made the point this is an exclusive power in this Federal Government. I made the point we have all the power of a State before the Union was formed, and the power the State had before the Union was formed was all the power the Crown of England has to-day, to improve its rivers and harbors. A friend within my hearing says I ought not to have forgotten West Virginia. [Laughter.] No man who reads that bill will ever forget West Virginia. [Laughter and applause.] She is like Kentucky—she is as well provided for as it is possible to provide for her. I do not speak of this little bill, but I speak of the bill of last year and the bill I would like to pass to-day.

The feeling I have on this question has been excited, I confess, by the sectional character of the opposition. I live along in this middle latitude, and never in my life, not even in war, never in my life have I lost my interest in what the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ROBESON] would call "Federal instinct," although he makes a very unfortunate application of it to me when he gives it a political sense, for I only cherish it in view of the general welfare of the whole country. I can not hope to aspire to all the virtues and all the merits of my ancestors, but I may be spared any responsibility for political opinions that are not my own. I have been associated with the Democracy of the country in important relations all my life, from the days of Jackson to the present time, and though I have had my vicissitudes, yet I have had my triumphs also; and I never want any better political future than I have enjoyed in the past. I only want to see this Democratic party maintaining its integrity and its honor and usefulness to the country in the future as it has in the past. I do not believe it is entitled to govern the country unless it commands its respect.

I do not believe that any political party is entitled to govern this country that does not command the respect of the country. And I do not believe a narrow, mean, illiberal exercise of the power of this country ever did or ever will command its respect. That is my line of opposition to friends on this side and to friends on that who would deny these appropriations. I believe them to be not only right, but necessary, and it is a source of great regret to me that this arrest has taken place in the Mississippi River improvement.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. We have now consumed the greater part of the time of the discussion upon this bill in speeches in favor of the bill. When the chairman of the Committee on Commerce moved to limit debate last night to two hours and a half the preceding time had been taken up by the friends of the bill. My question is, what time, if any, is to be given to the members of this House who desire to oppose the bill, and who have a right to be heard upon it?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can only state that that is not a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. There has not been a speech against the bill. The gentleman from Maryland promised me five minutes, but he did not live up to the promise.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan is recognized.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I would thank the Chair to admonish me when I have consumed fifteen minutes of the time allotted to me, as I do not desire to occupy more time than that, in justice to the other members of the special committee.

Of course this brief time will not enable me to enter into a discussion to any considerable extent of the character of the improvements now going on on the Mississippi River. A special committee was appointed by this House in August last charged with the duty, first, of examining into the proposed works in progress on the Mississippi River; secondly, as to the feasibility of the outlet system; and, thirdly, the jetty system and the extent to which it had aided the navigation of that river. Your committee discharged that duty as best they were able, and recommend in their report:

First. That the efficacy of the plan determined upon by the Mississippi River Commission for the channel improvement of the river is not sufficiently established to warrant its general application without further trial; and that such works should be restricted to Plum Point and Lake Providence reaches and brought to a state of completion, and that a sufficient sum should be appropriated for the successful prosecution of the work at these two points; and that the plan of the commission should not be applied to or continued at any other place on the river until the works at these two points are completed and their desirability established.

Second. That the construction and repair of levees is not essential to the improvement of the navigation of the Mississippi River, and that Congress should make no appropriation therefor.

Third. That while the outlet system might relieve the river of its flood-waters, yet your committee are not prepared to recommend it to the favorable consideration of Congress as a method for improving navigation.

Fourth. That the system of jetties established at the mouth of the river facilitates navigation and answers the purpose for which they were constructed.

In all these conclusions the committee are not unanimous and minority views have been submitted. I desire to submit some considerations touching the first proposition, that the plan determined upon by the Mississippi River Commission for improving the river should be restricted to two points on the Mississippi River; that is, to Plum Point and Lake Providence reaches, and the work at these two points brought to a state of completion and their efficacy decided before work is undertaken at any other point. I think I may say I speak for the entire committee, the gentlemen composing the special committee, when I say that it is the view of the committee that such a step is desirable. The plan already determined upon for the improvement of the Mississippi River I need not now take time to comment upon. I can simply say it is indicated in this map which I hold in my hand, the object being to improve the low-water navigation of the Mississippi River by dike work at the heads of the islands or bars so as to throw the river into a narrower channel within a space of 3,000 feet, as recommended by the commission. Now, the committee have no doubt, and I have none myself, that if that work can be successfully accomplished and the river at low water brought within a boundary of 3,000 feet, it will improve navigation. I think there is no question about that. The only question for the committee and the only question with the House it seems to me is, can that be successfully accomplished? I desire to call the attention of this committee to the fact that it is a very difficult undertaking. In the first place, in order to narrow the channel it is necessary to protect the caving banks, and those are, I will not undertake to say how many miles in extent; but in order to bring the channel within the space of 3,000 feet as contemplated it is necessary in the first place that they shall be protected from the encroachment of the water. It is attempted to protect them by mattresses of willows, laying them upon the caving banks and fastening them with stone, the upper portion being protected by revetments. This plan, as I have said, if it can succeed would prevent the caving of the banks, and will aid in narrowing the channel.

Mr. FLOWER. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. Most certainly.

Mr. FLOWER. I wish to ask the gentleman from Michigan if the committee took into consideration the advisability of preserving the forests on the headwaters of the Mississippi River, and on the Saint Louis River, a tributary of the Mississippi River, and also of the tree culture along the banks of the Upper Missouri, in order to prevent the rush by the high waters coming down in the spring and expending its force upon the levees of the Mississippi River?

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. No, sir; the committee did not look into that at all.

Mr. WASHBURN. They are doing that by the construction of reservoirs which hold the waters back.

Mr. FLOWER. I suppose that is intended to obtain water to drive logs with.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. That was not before the committee, and was not considered at all.

Now, let me say the cost of doing this work was estimated in the first place at $23,000,000. The cost of bank protection on the channel work of the entire Mississippi River below Cairo was estimated at $23,000,000. General Comstock, the president of the commission, before your committee said that he would have to revise the estimate, and placed the cost at $66,000,000. He said that would be the cost of doing the work.

The bill before the committee—and in that particular the committee are in accord with the Committee on Commerce—restricts the work to these two places, for the reason that the committee believe that this work is experimental. True, the commission believe that it has passed beyond the stage of experiment, and that it will be perfectly safe to enter upon the work from Cairo to Red River, anywhere where the banks are caving, and to use any amount of money, and that it would be successful; and your committee do not believe that this work should be undertaken until its efficacy is established at these two points; and these two points are selected because they are the most dangerous points in the river, and where navigation is the most difficult.

Mr. KASSON. What is the depth of water at these two points?

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. It varies. The river spreads over a great space, and in some places there is only a channel through which the vessels or boats can go.

These works have been tried at other places, and have not always proved successful. Major Suter testified upon this question as to the use of this plan at other places as follows:

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. I understood you to say that the key to your improvement is the holding of the caving banks?

Answer. Yes, sir.

Q. If that fails your work fails?

A. Unquestionably.

Q. There is no question about that?

A. No, sir; no question whatever about that.

Q. Why?

A. Well, sir, we are agreed as to the means to be employed to get deep water for low-water navigation; we have got to have concentration and contraction. We can not possibly have contraction unless we have something to contract against. It means that we must cut off a certain portion of the present river bed, and that necessarily throws the whole river either against one side or the other, and the bank on that side must be held.

Q. And if you can not hold the banks the whole thing will be a failure?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. That depends upon the strength, the efficacy, and the durability of your works?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You say that work of a similar character was tried in 1877?

A. Yes, sir; the instance I mentioned was on the Missouri River, at Saint Joseph.

Q. Was that on a caving bank?

A. Yes, sir; that was on a caving bank; a very rapidly caving bank.

Q. Were the works that you put in at Saint Joseph the same as the works that you put in at Plum Point?

A. The same general character of work, although the details are different. It was not nearly as perfect work as we do at the present day.

Q. You put down mattresses?

A. Yes, sir. The mattresses used at Saint Joseph were made of fascines; that is, bundles of willows, willow saplings tied up in bundles and fastened together.

Q. How thick?

A. About ten inches.

Q. How much of that work was put in at Saint Joseph?

A. I do not remember. I think that particular year we put in about half a mile, perhaps. We only had a little money to spend and could not go very far, and I do not think there was more than half a mile put in at that time.

Q. You say that such work has been lost in the river?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. How much?

A. I would not undertake to say that. It extends over several years, and every year we lost pieces here and there.

Q. Did you lose any there in 1877?

A. No, sir.

Q. In 1878?

A. No, sir; in 1879 was the first loss.

Q. How much bank-work did you lose that year?

A. Several miles. The pieces of work done along the river rarely exceeded a mile in length.

Q. Now, if you will tell me the number of miles of bank-work lost in 1879, and the reasons for the same, I shall be obliged to you.

A. The total amount did not exceed two miles. That is, there was about one mile lost opposite Omaha, and a similar amount at Nebraska City.

Q. There was a mile lost opposite Omaha?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Which bank?

A. The left bank of the river.

Q. What kind of a bank was that?

A. It was nearly pure sand.

Q. It was a caving bank?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Does it overflow?

A. It does in great floods. In fact, at Omaha it overflows every year to a certain extent, a foot or two feet, perhaps.

Q. Was this a protection by a mattress?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. How wide was the mattress?

A. The mattress was about forty feet in width.

Q. How high was the bank above the water?

A. The bank was about fifteen feet high above low water.

Q. When was that work begun?

A. It was put in in the previous fall, in 1878.

Q. Was it completed?

A. No; it was not completed. When I speak of completion I mean the whole bank that was caving was not protected, because we had not money enough to do it. The work as far as it went was completed.

Q. When did it go out?

A. In the spring following.

Q. Did the entire work go out?

A. Well, it was so seriously damaged that we had to rebuild it.

Q. Where did it go to; did it go down the stream?

A. Yes, sir; it went down the stream. Some of the matresses were caught, I believe, at Memphis. That work was built upon the theory of the pilots.

Q. What was the cost of that work?

A. The cost of it was about $2.25 a foot.

Q. Did that work go out at once in a single day or night?

A. No, sir; it was of course progressive, but it went pretty rapidly.

Q. Were you present at the time?

A. No, sir.

Q. What information have you about it?

A. I have the information of my assistant, who was on the ground at the time.

Q. Did he explain to you how it went out?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. The river cut in from above, as I understand you?

A. Which are you referring to now?

Q. I am talking of the one opposite to Omaha.

A. In that case the damage was principally from above, from the upper part of the bank. The water cut in on top of the revetment.

Q. The water then overflowed this work?

A. No, sir; it did not overflow.

Q. How could it cut in, then?

A. The flood which came in brought down the ice from the upper portion of the river, great masses of ice, and very heavy ice at that, and when they struck the upper bank, which had been but lightly protected, it cut right through the light protection, which was all that had been thought necessary above low water. We had merely put a thatching of brush on the bank, and the fields of ice cut through this. Then the water, flowing along the upper edge of the mattress, as the river was still rising, cut in behind them and they were finally all carried away.

Q. In other words, the mattress was cut in behind by the flood?

A. That was the ultimate result; yes, sir.

Q. Now you have completed the explanation of the manner in which that went out?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Suppose the current should cut in at the head of that?

A. It would undoubtedly go out the same way that the other did.

Q. Well, you have not done so?

A. No, sir.

Q. What was the value of the work that went out?

A. It cost about $2.50 a foot.

Q. That would make it about $15,000?

A. In that neighborhood somewhere.

Q. That was independent of any plant?

A. Yes, sir; that is just the net cost of the work itself.

Q. Have you lost any at other places on the river?

A. There has been some lost at other places.

Q. Where?

A. There was a piece of work lost at Nebraska City during the great flood of 1881.

Q. Of the same kind?

A. No; that had been lost, as I told you before, in 1879.

Q. It was renewed then?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You say there had been work lost at Nebraska City in 1879?

A. There was about a mile lost in 1879.

Q. Was that of the same kind and character of work?

A. Yes, sir.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. What caused that to go out?

A. That was caused by underscour.

Q. That lifted the mattress out—took it out?

A. No, sir; it went down into a hole. The water washed the ground away underneath and the mattress went right down.

Q. Did it all go out together?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did the work cost?

A. That was cheaper; that only cost $1 a foot; there was a loss of some five or six thousand dollars there.

Q. Do you know where that went to?

A. No, sir; that was heavy wood that would not float; and I think it staid there.

Q. You built another work there?

A. We were working at it while the other was going out.

Q. When was it completed?

A. The same season—in 1879.

Q. Where is that?

A. That is gone too. That went out in 1881.

Q. How much?

A. The same amount—about a mile.

Q. It does that, then, sometimes?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then the second work, completed in 1879, that went out in the flood of 1881?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. The whole thing?

A. The whole thing.

Q. How did that go out? Just explain it.

A. Well, sir, during that flood the whole country was overflowed. The work was eight feet under water. The work lay at the foot of a long bend twelve or fifteen miles around. The river began cutting a mile and a half or more above where the works terminated. This cut went on widening as it came down stream. When it reached our works it was a quarter of a mile or more wide, and as that slice came down it took the work out.

Q. Did it take it out and carry it down the stream?

A. Well, I do not know about that. When it disappeared I lost all interest in it.

Q. You do not know what became of it?

A. I presume it is buried somewhere in the bottom of the river.

Q. I think you stated what the cost in the first place was?

A. Yes, sir; that was about $5,000.

Q. And have you put in any other?

A. No, sir.

Q. You concluded to quit with that?

A. We concluded to wait until we had money enough to extend the works a little farther.

Q. Did you lose mattresses at any other places?

A. Another place was at Leavenworth.

Q. When was that built?

A. That was built in 1878.

Q. How much?

A. Two miles.

Q. When did it come out?

A. Eighteen hundred and eighty-one.

Q. The whole of it?

A. No; not all of it; I think about one mile and a half.

Q. Did that go out?

A. That was scoured underneath. I had some more work in the same place. I said two miles; I had three miles in place, and about half of it was lost. The balance was built on sounder principles, and that staid.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. How much did that work cost?

A. About $2.30 or $2.50 a foot.

Q. And a mile and a half of that went down?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You spoke of some works being lost at Memphis; what was the extent of the works lost there?

A. I would not be able to state positively. I said there had been some damage done.

Q. How was that done?

A. The steamboats land against the work, and as they came in at low water they would punch their bows through the mattresses.

Q. Then it would not do for steamboats to land where this work is built?

A. That could have been prevented by covering the work with stone.

Q. Well, has there any damage been done at Vicksburgh?

A. Yes, sir; in the way I have described. The work was isolated.

Q. Who built that?

A. Major Benyaurd had it in charge.

Q. Do you know how much was lost there?
A. I do not.
Q. And you do not know personally how it was lost?
A. I have always understood that the work was isolated, and that it was attacked from above and below and lost in high water.

I have not the time to go over the entire testimony. This plan has been tried at several different places. While at some places it has been successful and has answered the purposes for which it was constructed, yet in other places it has failed.

But to bring this question of the stability of these works directly to the attention of the committee, as my time has nearly expired, let me say that the very work at Plum Point has been disturbed during the present month. As will be remembered, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROBINSON] called upon the Secretary of War, through a resolution of the House, to advise the House as to the loss of works at Plum Point. In reply, the officer in charge, Captain Knight, says:

[Telegram.]

CAIRO, ILL., February 26.

CHIEF OF ENGINEERS, Washington, D. C.:

I estimate 1,475 feet of dike and 1,400 feet of foot mattress for bank protection carried away. Total value, $8,000. Of this about 600 feet of dike had been completed; but, having been carried higher than later work, and piling being weaker, it could not sustain shock of heavy flow of drift. The rest of dike was lost by reason of scour having set in before foot-mat could be sunk, and of mattress because it had not been sunk before high water rendered its sinking impossible. In my opinion the method followed has not been shown defective by this damage.

KNIGHT, Engineer.

Now, I think the committee act very wisely in restricting the work to these two points.

Mr. WILLITS. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. Yes, sir.

Mr. WILLITS. I see the item for improving the Mississippi River includes the harbors of New Orleans, Natchez, Memphis, and the deflection of the waters of the Red and Mississippi Rivers from the Atchafalaya River.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. We did not have that in charge at all.

Now, in relation—and I am sorry my time has so nearly expired—in relation to the advisability of applying this work to two points—

General Wright, Chief of the Engineer Corps, testified before your committee as follows: "It has always been my view that only one reach of the river should be attacked first, say the Plum Point reach. That was the worst reach in the river. It always seemed well to me that Congress should appropriate money enough to make a fair test upon that reach, and to wait until the results there were sufficiently known before attempting anything beyond." In reply to a question if time sufficient had elapsed to test the Plum Point reach General Wright answered: "No, sir; the works are not sufficiently advanced; I was not in favor of expending money on any other portion of the river below Cairo until those works were completed and the results fully known. If they were satisfactory, as I believed they would be, then appropriations might be made at the will of Congress for any number of bad places. Work could be carried on at half a dozen places as well as at one; but it did not seem to me wise to commence at all the places at the same time. We would learn a good deal from our works as they progressed at one point that would cheapen work very much, looking toward economy in all future works."

General Comstock stated to your committee upon this point: "In my opinion, the best way would be to take one of these reaches of forty or fifty miles in length and have Congress appropriate liberally for work upon that particular reach, so that we might do it thoroughly and on an extensive scale; and by that means we would be able to determine whether the work is going to be stable, and whether it is wise to stop or go on."

Mr. DUNN. Will the gentleman from Michigan now allow me to ask him a question with reference to the mattress work from which he passed just a moment ago. I visited Captain Knight when he was conducting those works, before the gentleman's committee reached there, and he informed me he had no doubt at all about the permanence of those works if they are made thick enough; but the effort of the engineers was to find a minimum cost at which the mattress work could be done.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. What is your question? I have but a minute left.

Mr. DUNN. Did not your committee find that the work being done was on the basis of ascertaining the minimum cost at which the mattress work could be made effective, and to that extent it was somewhat experimental?

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. Let me say that the commission testified, I think without exception, that the work is not experimental.

Mr. DUNN. Experimental only in respect to the thickness of the mattresses.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I have but a minute left of my time. I say that there is no difference of opinion among the members of the commission. This work has passed beyond the stage of experiment; and whether that be true or not, yet your committee recommend, in accordance with the views of General Wright and of the president of the commission, that it is wise to restrict this work to a single point, and not to appropriate money with a lavish hand for work along the whole course of this river, and then perhaps in the future have the work which has been done entirely destroyed.

I say that so far as I am individually concerned, if work had not been undertaken at both Plum Point reach and Lake Providence reach I should strongly incline to the opinion that it should be restricted to one reach alone, in accordance with the views of General Wright and of General Comstock. But because work has been entered upon at both of those reaches, and nearly one million dollars has been expended for plant to carry on the work, and a large amount of material is on hand, to abandon the work at either one of those places might endanger it there and destroy it; so that as a matter of economy I think it wiser, and the committee so recommend, that work be continued at both of those points.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. My friend from California [Mr. PAGE] intimated that he would yield to me a portion of his time.

Mr. WHITE. I desire to inquire how much has the mattress work at these two places been washed out?

Mr. THOMAS. The report of the Secretary of War states that.

Mr. WHITE. I mean since that report was made.

Mr. THOMAS. That is the latest.

Mr. KASSON. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be permitted to proceed, not to extend the time for general debate.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. The gentleman from California said he would yield to me five minutes of his time.

Mr. KASSON. My proposition is that the time of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] be extended, but not to extend the time for general debate.

Mr. PAGE. I will yield five minutes of my time to the gentleman.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I am greatly obliged to the gentleman from California. I was saying that if work had not been undertaken at both of these points, I should think it wise to restrict the work to one only of those reaches.

Mr. BUCKNER. What is the distance embraced in those points?

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. In one it is thirty miles, in the other twenty-five miles. So much has been expended for the plant, and so much work has been done at both of these reaches, that I think it wise to go on with the work at both points. They present different conditions, and under the circumstances your special committee recommend that work be continued at both of these points, and that work at no other point be undertaken until the works here have been brought to completion at those two points and their efficacy tested by being subject to repeated floods, to see whether they will accomplish the end they were designed to accomplish.

Now, I may be permitted to speak briefly of the cost of building the works at these two points. General Comstock, the president of the commission, says there has been expended at Plum Point already $1,250,000, and he estimates that it will require from $2,000,000 to $3,836,000 to complete the improvement at that reach alone.

He further states in reference to the work at Lake Providence reach that the amount appropriated to that point and allotted out of the present appropriation is $1,100,000, and that it will require $1,600,000 more to complete the work at that point.

For one I am exceedingly gratified that the Committee on Commerce in this bill have restricted the work to these two reaches. When we reach that portion of the bill I shall offer an amendment restricting the commission from doing channel work, which consists of bank protection and dike-building, at any other point; and let Congress appropriate a sufficient sum of money, I care not how liberal the appropriation may be, to test the efficiency of the work at those two points.

I desire to say in conclusion simply this, what I need scarcely say, that I am a friend of the Mississippi River improvement. It is a national work and should be under national care.

That man is not a friend of the improvement of that stream who is ready and anxious to take this plan or any plan and apply it to the whole Mississippi River, expending upon it untold millions, the $66,000,000 which is estimated, before he is certain that the plan will accomplish what is desired.

He is a friend of the improvement of that river who is willing to try an experiment at a single point and bring it to a state of perfection at that point, and demonstrate its ability to do what is desired. If you enter upon the other system and apply this plan to the whole river, and if by some accident the work should be destroyed and swept down to the Gulf, it will delay the improvement of the Mississippi River for a generation.

Mr. KASSON. And create new obstacles down there.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. It will delay the improvement of the Mississippi River for a generation; there is no question about that, and the nation will abandon all effort at improvement. But if you apply it to one or two points, as proposed by this bill, and bring it to a state of perfection, and test its ability to narrow the channel and improve the navigation, then I trust this great Government will appropriate with a liberal hand to improve the Mississippi River from Cairo to the Gulf.

I now yield fifteen minutes of the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROBINSON].

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. MCLANE], in the course of his remarks, stated that Massachusetts did not find occasion to oppose river and harbor bills until items were included for the great Western rivers. I only speak for myself, not for the rest of the delegation; but I want to tell him that so far as I am concerned I have been from the outset, and am now, in favor of every proper and reasonable expenditure for the improvement of the Mississippi River. The other rivers are not now under discussion. The position I have taken in debate since I have been in Congress is open for the inspection of everybody, and my declarations are sufficiently clear and pronounced to be beyond question.

The committee of which I happen to be a member, specially directed to consider the improvements of the Mississippi River during the last recess of Congress, have had their views presented somewhat by their chairman. It is impossible for me to extend them at length upon the general question. Suffice it to say that the committee are unanimous in the conclusion that the expenditures for the improvement of the river should be confined to two reaches called Plum Point and Lake Providence, not including at all the question of the harbors. We say, "Go on and attempt to improve under the plan proposed the two reaches, one of them thirty-eight miles in length, the other twenty-five; and those shall be the tests, after the floods have risen against those structures, to determine for the country whether the improvement shall go on throughout the length of the entire river. With that proposition I believe this House is in accord. I am glad to see that the Committee on Commerce has so restricted the appropriations in this bill; and it is only necessary, as I believe, to make the language of the clause a little more specific so that the appropriations provided in this bill shall be confined strictly to those reaches.

I shall use the remaining portion of my time in speaking upon the application of levees to channel improvements. I do not question at all that levees are a proper expedient for the protection and reclamation of lands. Mr. Chairman, I do not stop to discuss the constitutional question whether under the authority of the Constitution Congress may expend money for the protection and reclamation of lands. I waive any discussion of that question, because if I appreciate the sentiment of the House I believe it will not appropriate money for this purpose. At any rate I have not time to discuss that feature of the proposition. I wish to say that the committee, with the exception I believe of two members, agreed that the levees should not be constructed as a part of the scheme of channel improvement, especially at this time when it is proposed that only the two reaches shall be put under treatment. I think it does not need a demonstration to show that when we proceed to work only upon one space of 38 miles and another space of 25 miles we shall not go forward applying the levee system to the remainder of the 1,200 miles of the Mississippi River from Cairo to the Gulf. Why build levees outside of those two reaches, if you are working for channel improvement under the plan now agreed upon?

Therefore I say we should take the precaution that this commission shall not expend another dollar for the building or repair of levees. Why? Because, although in the first act giving $1,000,000 it was provided in substance that no money should be applied to the building of levees except as a means of improving the channel for the purpose of navigation, and although the commission did not go on to spend out of that appropriation anything for levees, yet, when in the last bill we gave them $4,123,000, what did they do? They went forward and spent or allotted out of that appropriation $1,010,000 to repair levees. Recollect, Mr. Chairman, that they are only working for channel improvement upon Lake Providence Reach, twenty-five miles long, and Plum Point Reach, thirty-eight miles long. You would expect that they would be building levees against those two reaches. Not at all. Where did they go to work to build levees? Down below the mouth of Red River; at that point they applied $110,000 for the repair of levees.

Now, why? Not a living man will tell anybody there is any difficulty in navigation of the Mississippi below the Red River. It is right at all stages of the river. The commission say so unanimously, and not a steamboat man, not a river man, not a resident ever said to us that it was anything but good navigation at all seasons of the year from the mouth of the Red River to the Gulf of Mexico. That being so, I question very much the propriety of the commission going on to spend $110,000 at a point where there is no difficulty in the channel navigation.

More than that, what did they do and how did they do it? They at once, at the beginning, when they wanted to spend that million and ten thousand dollars for levees, proceeded to meet the State authorities. They called a convention and they sent their delegate, and they met at the city of Memphis and proceeded to allot money to the State of Louisiana and to the State of Mississippi and to the State of Arkansas and to all of the States except Missouri out of this money to repair levees within those States. How did they do it? By a kind of partnership. They said to those gentlemen representing those States: How much money can you put in to repair levees? It was stated, and they proceeded to supply some more out of the United States Treasury to make up the sum necessary. They found out what was necessary. When we asked the engineer of the State board of Louisiana what he was trying to do in building levees, he said, "Undoubtedly to protect lands; that is what we are trying to do."

And so you have this condition of things: The State of Louisiana, for instance, appropriating money into one common pool to build levees for the protection of lands, and the commission of the United States putting some more into the same pool and paying out of the same contribution. One is said to be for the protection of the lands; the other is for channel improvement. That is the argument.

There is a railroad that crosses Bonnet Carré Crevasse, where there has been an opening since 1874. No trouble there with the navigation; none at all. Oh, yes; they say a steamer went in there once, and they tell you of that one steamer; but the men of the river say for ordinary purposes, the common purposes of navigation, it is well enough. At high water the river flows out through that crevasse; at low water it does not. What did they do? The commission applied $15,000 of that money to assist the railroad company to build the bank across that opening, and that bank was the protection of the railroad company's track—the Mississippi Valley Railroad—I have not the whole name before me, but it is something like that. Fifteen thousand dollars was applied, because the railroad company notified them they would apply the rest of it themselves to build that levee.

I believe that is not right. Look at the map which is before you. There is a map showing the overflowed portion of the Mississippi Valley during the last flood, the colored portion. What do the commission propose to do? To make channel works 3,000 feet apart within the bed of the river, below the natural banks, of course. When it is low water, or when the river is not more than bank-full, it is supposed those contracting works will restrain the water way so the river will pass in that space of 3,000 feet. The levees, we all understand, are on the banks, perhaps half a mile or a mile away. The river is broad in many places. If the water overflows the bank there is no difficulty about the navigation of the river, but there is difficulty about the lands. So the commission had this theory; notice it: They say we propose to make these new banks by the contracting works. Then the question is, what will you do with the levees? They are to have an ideal river, says Major Suter, an ideal Mississippi River 3,000 feet wide. Then what is he going to do with his levees? He told us he proposed to bring his levees up to the bank of that ideal river and build new levees on that newly constructed bank, on that new edge. Recollect, when that foundation is gone the superstructure will come down with the foundation. But suppose it stands. In the last flood the country was overflowed seventy-three miles wide in one place. On the testimony the water was all the way from three to twenty-five feet deep in that space of seventy-three miles. Yet the Commission propose experimentally to draw up that water seventy-three miles wide into a leveed space of 3,000 feet, and hold it there. The common sense of all uneducated men leads one very much to doubt the feasibility of such a plan, and the competence of the distinguished gentlemen to deal with such a problem.

Mr. KING. It has been done once and can be done again.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. What I have to say is if they are working to that plan, and that is what they say, this Congress ought to understand it before it appropriates money for any such scheme as that.

Gentlemen say they have done it before. That is, I suppose, they have built levees before and have restrained the water; but if the gentlemen living along that line of States have built them, for what did they build them? For the protection of the lands, is the unanimous testimony, and nothing else.

Oh, they say, you will have the works at Plum Point and at Lake Providence Reach, three hundred miles, we will say, above the mouth of the Red River. But they propose to go below the mouth of the Red River and build levees so that when the waters come down there, in a channel perfectly good at all stages of water, it will behave well under that restraint. That is the theory. Not that it needs to scour the bed of the river; no, because the bed is sufficiently low at all times for the purposes of navigation. But on the explanation of their theory it is proposed to bring the water within the restraints of good behavior throughout the State of Louisiana. Not that there is any difficulty with the navigation. No; nor are they open to the insinuation. They say that it is done to protect the land; and yet it needs only that it be very seriously questioned whether the great dominating influence of that section, and I say it without hostility, I say it without reflecting upon them, it is very proper that they should be interested in the question, but whether the great dominating influence of that section is not after all but an effort in favor of their lands under the guise of channel improvement. And it is distinctly stated by prominent gentlemen who testified before our committee in the city of New Orleans that it was right for the Government of the United States under the protective theory to build these levees to protect the lands for the benefit of the sugar-planters in the State of Louisiana. That was the claim, that was the testimony. That testimony is before the House; it is in this volume which is open to the inspection of anybody.

Mr. GIBSON. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. Certainly, if I have time to answer it.

Mr. GIBSON. Does not the gentleman from Massachusetts think that he is doing the scientific commission and the officers of the Army, the engineer officers who are performing the work to which he now refers, a great injustice when he says that the work they recommend is for the protection of the alluvial lands along the banks of the river and not for the benefit of its navigation?

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. I did not say it. I did not say that the Army engineers were building them for that purpose. But I stated, and I believe, that the influence of that portion of the Mississippi Valley which is on the lower part of the river is for these improvements principally because they will protect their alluvial lands. The gentlemen above on the river are interested in the channel improvements, and for everything that will give them a good channel from Saint Louis to the Gulf of Mexico. I am with them heartily, for I think that is exactly what ought to be done. I am for the improvement of the channel of the river wherever its improvement is necessary. And when I come to vote upon the question I shall vote just in that direction every time, and that is the extent to which we ought to go unless this Congress proposes to go on and take upon itself the whole burden of protecting the lands in the alluvial valley of the Mississippi River.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. GIBSON. The gentleman from Massachusetts is mistaken as to the question of the protection of these alluvial lands. It is the improvement of the river which is of prime importance——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. ROBINSON. If I had a little more time I would be glad to hear the question of the gentleman and reply to him.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I now yield fifteen minutes of the time to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. THOMAS].

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Chairman, as has been stated by the chairman of the committee [Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan] as well as by another member of the select committee, upon most of the questions submitted to it for its investigation the committee are agreed. That the work of the Mississippi River Commission has been done according to the terms and provisions of the law is shown by the committee in their report. That the Mississippi River Commission exceeded its authority under the law in any part or parcel of their work is not established by the voice of one respectable witness that came before the committee.

I have not the provisions of the law before me, but I recall the fact that that commission was to devise means, if possible, to prevent disastrous overflows, and if the history of the past shows that levees have restrained the waters of the river and prevented disastrous overflows, then the commission in the expenditure of the money alluded to have kept strictly within the letter of the law. And I desire to put myself on record here and now in favor of the plan of the Mississippi River Commission, and that, too, including levees to prevent disastrous overflows.

Why, Mr. Chairman, stop and think for a moment. The morning mist is water distributed and in that form is wholly harmless. Concentrated, however, that same mist is the mighty ocean, which is absolutely irresistible. The floods falling upon a field in the form of gentle rain, as has been said by one of the most accomplished writers on hydraulics in this country, will not disturb the most delicate vegetable mold, whereas if the same water is concentrated in one channel it will tear down the firm hills. Sir, few realize, even those who have been upon its waters, the power and volume of the Mississippi River and the strength of its floods. There is more dynamic force, more power in that river to scour out its bottom when confined within proper limits than the aggregated force of all the artificial power in the world. Are you aware that that river when its waters are fully charged with sediment and its current is checked will deposit 5,000 or more cubic yards of sediment in one place during twenty-four hours?

The stream that can carry that load can, if properly confined and if its forces are conserved, bear its burden of silt on and out into the Gulf and out of the way of navigation. Why, sir, the bottom of the Mississippi River is simply hills and valleys. It may be very properly described, as the topographical map shows, as a succession of lakes or lagoons with hills intervening. These hills are sand-bars; the lagoons are stretches of deep water between. The Mississippi River has only as much water for purposes of navigation as is found over the highest sand-bar between its source and its mouth, and a boat can carry no greater load than is warranted by the depth of water upon the highest sand-bar. The sand-bars are to be found only where the forces of the river have been checked and where its load of silt has been thrown down by reason of obstruction.

The plan the Mississippi River Commission proposes is to confine the water of the river so as to force it over the crests of these bars and cut them down, and thus unite by a safe navigable channel these lagoons or long stretches of deep water. And inasmuch as great opposition to the improvement of the Mississippi River has been developed by the interstate artificial transportation lines, as well through themselves as their agents, as well through their advocates outside as inside of Congress, as well through newspapers as other influences, the committee, recognizing that this improvement of the Mississippi River was for the purpose of giving to the producers of the West the cheapest possible transportation for their produce, said: "Notwithstanding this howl and clamor, we are determined—since Congress has adopted it—to have this plan of improvement tested fairly and fully, but, lest it should prove a failure, we are willing to confine the work for the present to the two reaches of the river known as Plum Point and Providence."

But I ask, sir, that the Mississippi River Commission may be allowed to expend the paltry appropriation proposed by this bill, according to the plan adopted by it after a long, thorough, and earnest investigation, a plan which was indorsed by the Forty-sixth Congress after full investigation, and was reindorsed by this Congress at its last session.

And now, forsooth, eight members of Congress, floating down the Mississippi River through nights and days of fog and rain on a freight-boat loaded down with empty kerosene barrels, agricultural implements, and every imaginable sort of freight, steaming along and stopping only four times on the way, come here and in the face of all the experience of the best scientists in the world say, "You shall not spend the money for this purpose or that, for we have been down the Mississippi River and know more about it than the commission does." How absurd, when this commission is composed of the best hydraulic and dynamic engineers in the world, men who have reputations confined to no State, to no country, but that reach out wherever human intelligence and civilization are known.

In the face of all this we find the friends of freight-pooling companies of railroads proposing to limit this great national work, proposing to strangle it to death by this means or that. I object to being governed by their dictates.

But, says my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. ROBINSON], and I wish him to understand as well as the chairman that in the reference I make to friends of monopolies I do not refer to them, as he refers to a map and calls attention to the fact that the floods of 1882 spread over seventy miles wide of territory, and were from three to twenty-five feet deep, "How can you hold that water within a channel of 3,000 feet?" He forgot to tell you another thing, and that was that the flood—the crest of the flood wave being perfectly defined, but while the water was still within its natural banks—traveled from Cairo to the Gulf in exactly ten days. But after the river's force had been weakened by its waters being spread all over the country, when it had lost momentum by the obstruction of every intervening tree and hill, it took the second wave about one hundred days to travel the distance which the first had traveled in ten days.

Now, the commission propose—and their friends all stand by them—to confine this water so that it will run out in ten days, instead of in one hundred days, as is required when the river overflows its banks. If gentlemen think the people of this coutry are idiotic enough to suppose they could command that river to stand still as Joshua did the sun, till they piled it up into a column of water sixty feet high, they certainly reckon without their host, and show that they have no proper appreciation of the intelligence of the people of this country. The people realize that the river runs downward and onward to the sea, and waits not for the hand or the pleasure of man Why, sir, this river, as any one will see who looks at it, runs through the lowest part of the great Mississippi Valley. Why? Because water always seeks the lowest level.

And that fact is established by another fact; that is, that all of the lateral streams run into the Mississippi; and hence it is that the channel of the river is the lowest part of that valley. It builds its own banks; it is the creature of its own power. It carries on its shoulders and within its waters all the time all the silt that it can, and it builds its own banks from that silt. It builds them up to within three inches of the average flood-height.

Now, if we can put three inches more on top of its own banks, banks built by itself, then we will protect the country from the average floods. And if we can put a foot more on we will protect the country from extraordinary floods.

Gentlemen talk here of these levees as though we were going to build them as high as St. Peter's dome and as broad as the Capitol of the United States. Nothing of the kind is necessary. All that is required is to build them high enough and strong enough to meet the extraordinary floods. And when the river is concentrated, as I said a while ago, in its own channel, it will take up the silt from the bottom of the channel and remove these irregular points and obstructions, wash them off, thereby deepening the channel, and navigation will be thereby improved, disastrous floods will be prevented, commerce will be promoted, and the mails will be properly delivered as the law provides they should be.

But, say some of my friends, if we build levees all this alluvial country will be reclaimed and we can not stand that. Now, I am more liberal than they. I say that if we can by this plan deepen the channel of the river and thereby improve its navigation and increase the commerce of the country, and if as an incident to that work the alluvial lands are reclaimed, I am not going to find fault with it.

I shall not find fault if the 45,000 square miles of the most magnificent lands the world has ever seen are reclaimed and made a garden spot instead of being overflowed marshes and lagoons—made to furnish homes to hundreds, ay, thousands and millions of people, instead of homes for musquitoes, frogs, and alligators, as they do now.

This appears to me to be a great national work. We waited fifty years for some one to furnish a plan for the improvement of this river. This plan and that have been tried, but experience has shown that they are all worthless except this plan of the Mississippi River Commission, which has shown itself to be founded upon proper engineering principles and eternal truths.

The Mississippi River Commission, at the instance of Congress, came forward and furnished this plan, and so far as it has been developed and applied to the river it has shown the most magnificent results. At Horsetail bar, a short distance below Saint Louis, is has produced an improvement in depth of water, through the whole length of that shallow bar, of from six to fourteen feet. And at Minturn's Point, where there was a bar so large and high that a steamboat could not enter the harbor at Cape Girardeau, by the employment of a line of piling the bar has been swept away and there is now a good harbor.

The plan of the Mississippi River Commission and its works are no longer experimental, but are assured and established facts worthy of the confidence and support of Congress and the country.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. PAGE. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX].

Mr. COX, of New York. In the five minutes allotted I can not discuss any engineering problem. I can not solve any problem connected with the improvement of the Mississippi River.

I can only refer to the political question. It refers to the power of the General Government on this subject. It involves the dividing line between Federal and State authority. I hold to the very strictest construction of our Federal Charter. I would go back to the methods of our fathers, at least from the time these appropriations were asked for in 1827, down to the present time.

Gentlemen when they bring in these bills have some sort of miraculous skill of getting them in and through. We can not see what passes them. It is a mystery—a fairy, sportive mystery. If the gentlemen in charge of this bill have seen the opera of Iolanthe they must have noticed that there was a "fairy member of Parliament." He had the support of the enchantments of the unseen fairy world in all his legislative work—

> Every bill and every measure,
> Whatever suits his mind and pleasure,
> Though your fury it arouses,
> Shall be passed by both your Houses.

[Laughter.]

What is the cause of the passage of these kind of bills!

Mr. DUNN. Common sense.

Mr. COX, of New York. Mr. Robert T. Lincoln, Secretary of War, says:

> The aggregate amount of the appropriations of August 2, 1882, remaining unexpended on December 9, 1882, in the Treasury and in the hands of disbursing officers is about $16,500,000, a considerable portion of which is covered by existing contracts.
> Although not called for in the resolution, it is proper to state that the amount in Treasury December 9, 1882, belonging to appropriation acts for river and harbor works prior to act of August 2, 1882, was $2,330,510.58. This amount includes the amounts reported in List E herewith.
> The amount which will probably remain unexpended and uncontracted for July 1, 1883, of the appropriation of August 2, 1882, is $3,513,475, a large part of which can not be judiciously expended during the present fiscal year, owing to the impracticability, in some cases, of completing preliminary arrangements for work in time to secure its application within the period stated, and, in others, to the desirability of extending operations beyond the present fiscal year for economical considerations. The remaining portion of this balance is accounted for in Statements A, B, C, and D, herewith, and to which I beg again to refer.
> It is further estimated that the aggregate amount that will be on hand June 30, 1883, from all appropriations hitherto made by river and harbor acts is $6,375,299.75.

If this be so, what is the necessity of this bill? There is a sufficiency of means for all Federal commerce and national uses.

Mr. Chairman, I am proud to say that for over twenty-five years I have known the present Secretary of War, as boy and as man. I have known him as Secretary of War; and I am happy to say that he is in every regard a model executive officer. That is better than high descent or great ancestry. When, sir, he makes the report, from which I have quoted, showing the large surplus remaining out of the appropriations of last year, and when he shows the inutilities of such uses of our moneys, I prefer to take his recommendation made under judicious and engineering examination before I take the recommendation of men who have local interests to gratify and local pride to enforce them. This bill should be separated. The goats should be divided from the sheep.

I sent to the Committee on Rules a resolution, twice asking them to separate the larger streams, those which refer to Federal commerce, from the little streams and little harbors; so that we might have two bills, one good, the other bad; one very good like Jeremiah's figs, and the other probably very bad. That resolution was as follows:

> Resolved, That the seventh clause of Rule XI be amended by adding at the end of the paragraph the following:
> "Provided, That in reporting bills making appropriations for the improvement of rivers and harbors, said Committee on Commerce shall make said report in two separate bills; the first to include all appropriations for improvements upon the sea, lake, and Gulf coasts and the rivers navigable through two or more States or parts of States; the second to include rivers of local or State commerce only."

It has been impossible to get a response from the Committee on Rules for that resolution. Why? I do not know. The resolution is too good to pass.

Some time we may get a chance to vote on this appropriation for national objects, such as Galveston, Baltimore, New York, San Francisco, and for your rivers of national commerce, such as the Mississippi, Missouri, Ohio, and Hudson.

In conclusion I ask to have printed the veto message of President Polk in 1847 on this subject. It shows that by these inordinate taxes for rivers and harbors you tax people who have no rivers and harbors for the benefit of their fellow-citizens who are more advantageously situated. This is a crying sin and a mutual wrong. This system is as bad if not worse than the tariff. It is based on the same principle, of giving localities special advantages at the expense of localities that do not enjoy any such advantages.

I ask to have printed with my remarks President Polk's message on this subject and the vote of the House upon a resolution disapproving that message. It will be seen that in those early days every Democrat, including my friend from Maryland [Mr. MCLANE], voted indirectly to sustain the position of President Polk. Every Whig voted the other way.

TUESDAY, July 11, 1848.

Mr. White moved that the vote taken yesterday on agreeing to the resolutions introduced by Mr. Stephens be reconsidered, and that this said motion to reconsider be laid upon the table; which motion was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. Goggin the House proceeded to the orders of the day and resumed the consideration of the report from the Committee on Commerce, upon the memorial from the Chicago convention, relative to the improvement of rivers and harbors by the General Government; and, also, upon other memorials upon the same subject; the veto message of the President of the United States at the present session, upon a bill of the last Congress, providing for the improvement of rivers and harbors; and the bill relative to tonnage duties; the question being on agreeing to the second resolution accompanying said report; which was read, as follows:

"Resolved, That the interests of our national commerce, the common defense, and general welfare of the United States require a judicious exercise of the foregoing power."

And the question being put, will the House agree thereto?

It was decided in the affirmative—yeas 112, nays 53.

The third resolution was then read, as follows:

"Resolved, That the reasons assigned by the President in his veto message of December 15, 1847, for his refusal to approve and sign the bill passed March 3, 1847, making appropriations for the improvement of certain harbors and rivers, are deemed insufficient and unsatisfactory."

And the question being put, will the House agree thereto?

It was decided in the affirmative—yeas 91, nays 72.

The following is President Polk's veto message:

To the House of Representatives:

On the last day of the last session of Congress a bill, entitled "An act to provide for continuing certain works in the Territory of Wisconsin, and for other purposes," which had passed both Houses, was presented to me for my approval. I entertained insuperable objections to its becoming a law; but the short period of the session which remained afforded me no sufficient opportunity to prepare my objections, and communicate them, with the bill, to the House of Representatives, in which it originated. For this reason the bill was retained; and I deem it proper now to state my objections to it.

Although, from the title of the bill, it would seem that its main object was to make provision for continuing certain works already commenced in the Territory of Wisconsin, it appears, on examination of its provisions, that it contains only a single appropriation of $6,000 to be applied within that Territory, while it appropriates more than half a million of dollars for the improvement of numerous harbors and rivers lying within the limits and jurisdiction of several of the States of the Union.

At the preceding session of Congress it became my duty to return, with my objections, to the House in which it originated, a bill making similar appropriations, and involving like principles; and the views then expressed remain unchanged.

The circumstances under which this heavy expenditure of public money was proposed were of imposing weight in determining upon its expediency. Congress had recognized the existence of war with Mexico, and, to prosecute it to "a speedy and successful termination," had made appropriations exceeding our ordinary revenues. To meet the emergency, and provide for the expenses of the Government, a loan of $23,000,000 was authorized at the same session, which has since been negotiated. The practical effect of this bill, had it become a law, would have been to add the whole amount appropriated by it to the national debt. It would, in fact, have made necessary an additional loan to that amount, as effectually as if in terms it had required the Secretary of the Treasury to borrow the money therein appropriated. The main question in that aspect is, whether it is wise, while all the means and credit of the Government are needed to bring the existing war to an honorable close, to impair the one and endanger the other, by borrowing money to be expended in a system of internal improvements capable of an expansion sufficient to swallow up the revenues not only of our own country, but of the civilized world? It is to be apprehended that, by entering upon such a career at this moment, confidence, at home and abroad, in the wisdom and prudence of the Government, would be so far impaired as to make it difficult, without an immediate resort to heavy taxation, to maintain the public credit and to preserve the honor of the nation and the glory of our arms in prosecuting the existing war to a successful conclusion. Had this bill become a law, it is easy to foresee that largely increased demands upon the Treasury would have been made at each succeeding session of Congress, for the improvements of numerous other harbors, bays, inlets, and rivers, of equal importance with those embraced by its provisions. Many millions would probably have been added to the necessary amount of the war debt, the annual interest on which must also have been borrowed, and finally a permanent national debt been fastened on the country and entailed on posterity.

The policy of embarking the Federal Government in a general system of internal improvements had its origin but little more than twenty years ago. In a very few years, the applications to Congress for appropriations, in furtherance of such objects, exceeded $200,000,000. In this alarming crisis, President Jackson refused to approve and sign the Maysville Road bill, the Wabash River bill, and other bills of similar character. His interposition put a check upon the new policy of throwing the cost of local improvements upon the National Treasury, preserved the revenues of the nation for their legitimate objects, by which he was enabled to extinguish the then existing public debt, and to present to an admiring world the unprecedented spectacle, in modern times, of a nation free from debt, and advancing to greatness with unequaled strides, under a government which was content to act within its appropriate sphere in protecting the States and individuals in their own chosen career of improvement and of enterprise. Although the bill under consideration proposes no appropriation for a road or canal, it is not easy to perceive the difference in principle, or mischievous tendency, between appropriations for making roads and digging canals, and appropriations to deepen rivers and improve harbors. All are alike within the limits and jurisdiction of the States; and rivers and harbors, alone, open an abyss of expenditure sufficient to swallow up the wealth of the nation, and load it with a debt which may fetter its energies and tax its industry for ages to come.

The experience of several of the States, as well as that of the United States, during the period that Congress exercised the power of appropriating the public money for internal improvements, is full of eloquent warnings. It seems impossible, in the nature of the subject as connected with local representation, that the several objects presented for improvement shall be weighed according to their respective merits and appropriations confined to those whose importance would justify a tax on the whole community to effect their accomplishment.

In some of the States systems of internal improvements have been projected, consisting of roads and canals, many of which taken separately, were not of sufficient public importance to justify a tax on the entire population of the State to effect their construction; and yet, by a combination of local interests, operating on a majority of the Legislature, the whole have been authorized, and the States plunged into heavy debts. To an extent so ruinous has this system of legislation been carried, in some portions of the Union, that the people have found it necessary to their own safety and prosperity to forbid their Legislatures, by constitutional restrictions, to contract public debts for such purposes without their immediate consent.

If the abuse of power has been so fatal in the States where the systems of taxation are direct, and the representatives responsible, at short periods, to small masses of constituents, how much greater danger of abuse is to be apprehended in the General Government, whose revenues are raised by indirect taxation, and whose functionaries are responsible to the people in larger masses and for longer terms?

Regarding only objects of improvement of the nature of those improved in this bill, how inexhaustible we shall find them. Let the imagination run along our coast, from the River Saint Croix to the Rio Grande, and trace every river emptying into the Atlantic and Gulf of Mexico to its source; let it coast along our lakes, and ascend all their tributaries; let it pass to Oregon, and explore all its bays, inlets, and streams; and then let it raise the curtain of the future, and contemplate the extent of this Republic, and the objects of improvement it will embrace as it advances to its high destiny, and the mind will be startled at the immensity and danger of the power which the principle of this bill involves.

Already our confederacy consists of twenty-nine States. Other States may, at no distant period, be expected to be formed on the west of our present settlements. We own an extensive country in Oregon, stretching many hundreds of miles from east to west, and 7° of latitude from south to north. By the admission of Texas into the Union, we have recently added many hundreds of miles to our seacoast. In all this vast country, bordering on the Atlantic and Pacific, there are many thousands of bays, inlets, and rivers, equally entitled to appropriations for their improvement with the objects embraced in this bill.

We have seen, in our States, that the interests of individuals or neighborhoods, combining against the general interest, have involved their governments in debts and bankruptcy; and when the system prevailed in the General Government, and was checked by President Jackson, it had begun to be considered the highest merit in a member of Congress to be able to procure appropriations of public money to be expended within his district or State, whatever might be the object. We should be blind to the experience of the past if we did not see abundant evidences that, if this system of expenditure is to be indulged in, combinations of individual and local interests will be found strong enough to control legislation, absorb the revenues of the country, and plunge the Government into a hopeless indebtedness.

What is denominated a harbor by this system does not necessarily mean a bay, inlet, or arm of the sea, on the ocean or on our lake shores, on the margin of which may exist a commercial city or town, engaged in foreign or domestic trade, but is made to embrace waters where there is not only no such city or town, but no commerce of any kind. By it a bay or sheet of shoal water is called a harbor, and appropriations demanded from Congress to deepen it, with a view to draw commerce to it, or to enable individuals to build up a town or city on its margin, upon speculation, and for their own private advantage.

What is denominated a river, which may be improved, in the system, is equally undefined in its meaning. It may be the Mississippi or it may be the smallest and most obscure and unimportant stream, bearing the name of river, which is to be found in any State in the Union.

Such a system is subject, moreover, to be perverted to the accomplishment of the worst of political purposes. During the few years it was in full operation, and which immediately preceded the veto of President Jackson of the Maysville road bill, instances were numerous of public men seeking to gain popular favor by holding out to the people interested in particular localities the promise of large disbursements of public money. Numerous reconnaissances and surveys were made during that period for roads and canals through many parts of the Union, and the people in the vicinity of each were led to believe that their property would be enhanced in value, and they themselves be enriched, by the large expenditures which they were promised, by the advocates of the system, should be made from the Federal Treasury in their neighborhoods. Whole sections of the country were thus sought to be influenced, and the system was fast becoming one not only of profuse and wasteful expenditure, but a potent political engine.

If the power to improve a harbor be admitted, it is not easy to perceive how the power to deepen every inlet on the ocean or the lakes, and make harbors where there are none, can be denied. If the power to clear out or deepen the channel of rivers near their mouths be admitted, it is not easy to perceive how the power to improve them to their fountain-head, and make them navigable to their sources, can be denied. Where shall the exercise of the power, if it be assumed, stop? Has Congress the power, when an inlet is deep enough to admit a schooner, to deepen it still more, so that it will admit ships of heavy burden? And has it not the power, when an inlet will admit a boat, to make it deep enough to admit a schooner? May it improve rivers deep enough already to float ships and steamboats, and has it no power to improve those which are navigable only for flat-boats and barges? May the General Government exercise power and jurisdiction over the soil of a State consisting of rocks and sand-bars in the beds of its rivers, and may it not excavate a canal around its water-falls or across its lands for precisely the same object?

Giving to the subject the most serious and candid consideration of which my mind is capable, I can not perceive any intermediate grounds. The power to improve harbors and rivers for purposes of navigation, by deepening or clearing out, by dams and sluices, by locking or canaling, must be admitted without any other limitation than the discretion of Congress, or it must be denied altogether. If it be admitted, how broad and how susceptible of enormous abuses is the power thus vested in the General Government! There is not an inlet of the ocean or the lakes, not a river, creek, or streamlet within the States, which is not brought for this purpose within the power and jurisdiction of the General Government.

Speculation, disguised under the cloak of public good, will call on Congress to deepen shallow inlets, that it may build up new cities on their shores, or to make streams navigable which nature has closed by bars and rapids, that it may sell at a profit its lands upon their banks. To enrich neighborhoods, by spending within it the moneys of the nation, will be the aim and boast of those who prize their local interests above the good of the nation, and millions upon millions will be abstracted by tariffs and taxes from the earnings of the whole people to foster speculation and subserve the objects of private ambition.

Such a system could not be administered with any approach to equality among the several States and sections of the Union. There is no equality among them in the objects of expenditure, and, if the funds were distributed according to the merits of those objects, some would be enriched at the expense of their neighbors. But a greater practical evil would be found in the art and industry by which appropriations would be sought and obtained. The most artful and industrious would be the most successful; the true interests of the country would be lost sight of in an annual scramble for the contents of the Treasury, and the member of Congress who could procure the largest appropriations to be expended in his district would claim the reward of victory from his enriched constituents. The necessary consequence would be sectional discontents and heartburnings, increased taxation, and a national debt never to be extinguished.

In view of these portentous consequences, I can not but think that this course of legislation should be arrested, even were there nothing to forbid it in the fundamental laws of our Union. This conclusion is fortified by the fact that the Constitution itself indicates a process by which harbors and rivers within the States may be improved, a process not susceptible of the abuses necessarily to flow from the assumption of the power to improve them by the General Government, just in its operation and actually practiced upon without complaint or interruption during more than thirty years from the organization of the present Government.

The Constitution provides that "no State shall without the consent of Congress lay any duty of tonnage." With the "consent" of Congress such duties may be levied, collected, and expended by the States. We are not left in the dark as to the objects of this reservation of power to the States. The subject was fully considered by the convention that framed the Constitution. It appears, in Mr. Madison's report of the proceedings of that body that one object of the reservation was that the States should not be restrained from laying duties of tonnage for the purpose of clearing harbors. Other objects were named in the debates, and among them the support of seamen. Mr. Madison, treating on this subject in the Federalist, declares that "the restraint on the power of the States over imports and exports is enforced by all the arguments which prove the necessity of submitting the regulation of trade to the Federal councils. It is needless, therefore, to remark further on this head than that the manner in which the restraint is qualified seems well calculated at once to secure to the States a reasonable discretion in providing for the conveniency of their imports and exports, and to the United States a reasonable check against the abuse of this discretion."

The States may lay tonnage duties for clearing harbors, improving rivers, or for other purposes, but are restrained from abusing the power, because before such duties can take effect the "consent" of Congress must be obtained. Here is a safe provision for the improvement of harbors and rivers in the reserved powers of the States, and in the aid they may derive from duties of tonnage levied with the consent of Congress. Its safeguards are that both the State Legislatures and Congress have to concur in the act of raising the funds; that they are, in every instance, to be levied upon the commerce of those ports which are to profit by the proposed improvement; that no question of conflicting power or jurisdiction is involved; that the expenditure being in the hands of those who are to pay the money and be immediately benefited, will be more carefully managed and more productive of good than if the funds were drawn from the National Treasury and disbursed by the officers of the General Government; that such a system will carry with it no enlargement of Federal power and patronage, and leave the States to be the sole judges of their own wants and interests, with only a conservative negative in Congress upon any abuse of the power which the States may attempt.

Under this wise system the improvement of harbors and rivers was commenced, or rather continued, from the organization of the Government under the present Constitution. Many acts were passed by the several States levying duties of tonnage, and many were passed by Congress giving their consent to those acts. Such acts have been passed by Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, and Georgia, and have been sanctioned by the consent of Congress. Without enumerating them all, it may be instructive to refer to some of them as illustrative of the mode of improving harbors and rivers in the early periods of our Government, as to the constitutionality of which there can be no doubt.

In January, 1790, the State of Rhode Island passed a law levying a tonnage duty on vessels arriving in the port of Providence "for the purpose of clearing and deepening the channel of Providence River, and making the same more navigable."

On the 2d of February, 1798, the State of Massachusetts passed a law levying a tonnage duty on all vessels, whether employed in the foreign or coasting trade, which might enter in the Kennebunk River, for the improvement of the same, by "rendering the passage in and out of said river less difficult and dangerous."

On the 1st of April, 1805, the State of Pennsylvania passed a law levying a tonnage duty on vessels "to remove the obstructions to the navigation of the river Delaware below the city of Philadelphia."

On the 23d of January, 1804, the State of Virginia passed a law levying a tonnage duty on vessels "for improving the navigation of James River."

On the 22d of February, 1826, the State of Virginia passed a law levying a tonnage duty on vessels for "improving the navigation of James River from Warwick to Rockett's landing."

On the 8th of December, 1824, the State of Virginia passed a law levying a tonnage duty on vessels for "improving the navigation of Appomattox River from Pocahontas bridge to Broadway."

In November, 1821, the State of North Carolina passed a law levying a tonnage duty on vessels "for the purpose of opening an inlet at the lower end of Albemarle Sound, near a place called Nag's Head, and improving the navigation of said sound with its branches;" and in November, 1828, an amendatory law was passed.

On the 21st of December, 1804, the State of South Carolina passed a law levying a tonnage duty for the purpose of "building a marine hospital in the vicinity of Charleston;" and on the 17th of December, 1816, another law was passed by the Legislature of that State for the "maintenance of a marine hospital."

On the 10th of February, 1787, the State of Georgia passed a law levying a tonnage duty on all vessels entering into the port of Savannah for the purpose of "clearing" the Savannah River of "wrecks and other obstructions" to the navigation.

On the 12th of December, 1804, the State of Georgia passed a law levying a tonnage duty on vessels, "to be applied to the payment of fees of the harbor-master and health officer of the ports of Savannah and Saint Mary's."

In April, 1783, the State of Maryland passed a law laying a tonnage duty on vessels for the improvement of the "basin" and "harbor" of Baltimore and the "river Patapsco."

On the 26th of December, 1791, the State of Maryland passed a law levying a tonnage duty on vessels for the improvement of the "harbor and port of Baltimore."

On the 28th of December, 1793, the State of Maryland passed a law authorizing the appointment of a health officer for the port of Baltimore and laying a tonnage duty on vessels to defray the expenses.

Congress has passed many acts giving its "consent" to these and other State laws, the first of which is dated in 1790 and the last in 1843. By the latter act the "consent" of Congress was given to the law of the Legislature of the State of Maryland, laying a tonnage duty on vessels for the improvement of the harbor of Baltimore, and continuing it in force until the 1st day of June, 1850. I transmit herewith copies of such of the acts of the Legislatures of the States on the subject, and also the acts of Congress giving its "consent" thereto, as have been collated.

That the power was constitutionally and rightfully exercised in these cases does not admit of a doubt.

The injustice and inequality resulting from conceding the power to both governments is illustrated by several of the acts enumerated. Take that for the improvement of the harbor of Baltimore. That improvement is paid for exclusively by a tax on the commerce of that city; but if an appropriation be made from the national Treasury for the improvement of the harbor of Boston, it must be paid in part out of taxes levied on the commerce of Baltimore. The result is that the commerce of Baltimore pays the full cost of the harbor improvement designed for its own benefit; and in addition contributes to the cost of all other harbor and river improvements in the Union. The facts need but be stated to prove the inequality and injustice which can not but flow from the practice embodied in this bill. Either the subject should be left as it was during the first third of a century, or the practice of levying tonnage duties by the States should be abandoned altogether, and all harbor and river improvements made under the authority of the United States and by means of direct appropriations. In view not only of the constitutional difficulty, but as a question of policy, I am clearly of opinion that the whole subject should be left to the States, aided by such tonnage duties on vessels navigating their waters as their respective Legislatures may think proper to propose and Congress see fit to sanction. This "consent" of Congress would never be refused in any case where the duty proposed to be levied by the State was reasonable, and where the object of improvement was one of importance. The funds required for the improvement of harbors and rivers may be raised in this mode, as was done in the earlier periods of the Government, and thus avoid a resort to a strained construction of the Constitution not warranted by its letter. If direct appropriations be made of the money in the Federal Treasury for such purposes, the expenditures will be unequal and unjust. The money in the Federal Treasury is paid by a tax on the whole people of the United States; and if applied to the purposes of improving harbors and rivers it will be partially distributed and be expended for the advantage of particular States, sections, or localities at the expense of others.

By returning to the early and approved construction of the Constitution and to the practice under it this inequality and injustice will be avoided and at the same time all the really important improvements be made, and, as our experience has proved, be better made and at less cost than they would be by the agency of officers of the United States. The interests benefited by these improvements, too, would bear the cost of making them upon the same principle that the expenses of the post-office establishment have always been defrayed by those who derive benefits from it. The power of appropriating money from the Treasury for such improvements was not claimed or exercised for more than thirty years after the organization of the Government in 1789, when a more latitudinous construction was indicated, though it was not broadly asserted and exercised until 1825. Small appropriations were first made in 1820 and 1821 for surveys. An act was passed on the 3d of March, 1823, authorizing the President to "cause an examination and survey to be made of the obstructions between the harbor of Gloucester and the harbor of Squam, in the State of Massachusetts," and of "the entrance of the harbor of the port of Presque Isle, in Pennsylvania," with a view of their removal, and a small appropriation was made to pay the necessary expenses. This appears to have been the commencement of harbor improvements by Congress, thirty-four years after the Government went into operation under the present Constitution. On the 30th of April, 1824, an act was passed making an appropriation of $30,000 and directing "surveys and estimates to be made of the routes of such roads and canals" as the President "may deem of national importance in a commercial or military point of view or necessary for the transportation of the mails." This act evidently looked to the adoption of a general system of internal improvements, to embrace roads and canals as well as harbors and rivers. On the 26th May, 1824, an act was passed making appropriations for "deepening the channel leading into the harbor of Presque Isle, in the State of Pennsylvania," and to "repair Plymouth Beach, in the State of Massachusetts, and thereby prevent the harbor at that place from being destroyed."

President Monroe yielded his approval to these measures, though he entertained, and had, in a message to the House of Representatives on the 4th of May, 1822, expressed the opinion that the Constitution had not conferred upon Congress the power to adopt and execute a system of internal improvements." He placed his approval upon the ground, not that Congress possessed the power to "adopt and execute" such a system, by virtue of any or all of the enumerated grants of power in the Constitution, but upon the assumption that the power to make appropriations of the public money was limited and restrained only by the discretion of Congress. In coming to this conclusion, he avowed that, "in the more early stage of the Government," he had entertained a different opinion. He avowed that his first opinion had been, that, "as the National Government is a government of limited powers, it has no right to expend money except in the performance of acts authorized by the other specific grants, according to a strict construction of their powers;" and that the power to make appropriations gave to Congress no discretionary authority to apply the public money to any other purposes or objects except to "carry into effect the powers contained in the other grants." These sound views, which Mr. Monroe entertained "in the early stage of the Government," he gave up in 1822, and declared that—

"The right of appropriation is nothing more than a right to apply the public money to this or that purpose. It has no incidental power, nor does it draw after it any consequences of that kind. All that Congress could do under it in the case of internal improvements would be to appropriate the money necessary to make them. For any act requiring legislative sanction or support, the State authority must be relied on. The condemnation of the land, if the proprietors should refuse to sell it, the establishment of turnpikes and tolls, and the protection of the work when finished must be done by the State. To these purposes the powers of the General Government are believed to be utterly incompetent."

But it is impossible to conceive on what principle the power of appropriating public money, when in the Treasury, can be construed to extend to objects for which the Constitution does not authorize Congress to levy taxes or imposts to raise money. The power of appropriation is but the consequence of the power to raise money; and the true inquiry is, whether Congress has the right to levy taxes for the object over which power is claimed.

During the four succeeding years, embraced by the administration of President Adams, the power not only to appropriate money, but to apply it, under the direction and authority of the General Government, as well to the construction of roads as to the improvement of harbors and rivers, was fully asserted and exercised.

Among other acts assuming the power, was one passed on the 20th of May, 1826, entitled "An act for improving certain harbors and the navigation of certain rivers and creeks, and for authorizing surveys to be made of certain bays, sounds, and rivers therein mentioned." By that act large appropriations were made, which were to be "applied, under the direction of the President of the United States," to numerous improvements in ten of the States. This act, passed twenty-seven years after the organization of the present Government, contained the first appropriation ever made for the improvement of a navigable river, unless it be small appropriations for examinations and surveys in 1820. During the residue of that administration, many other appropriations of a similar character were made, embracing roads, rivers, harbors, and canals, and objects claiming the aid of Congress multiplied without number.

This was the first breach effected in the barrier which the universal opinion of the framers of the Constitution had for more than thirty years thrown in the way of the assumption of this power by Congress. The general mind of Congress and the country did not appreciate the distinction taken by President Monroe between the right to appropriate money for an object and the right to apply and expend it without the embarrassment and delay of applications to the State governments. Probably no instance occurred in which such an application was made, and the flood-gates being thus hoisted, the principle laid down by him was disregarded, and applications for aid from the Treasury, virtually to make harbors as well as improve them, clear out rivers, cut canals, and construct roads, poured into Congress in torrents, until arrested by the veto of President Jackson. His veto of the Maysville road bill was followed up by his refusal to sign the "Act making appropriations for building light-houses, light-boats, beacons, and monuments, placing buoys, improving harbors, and directing surveys;" "An act authorizing subscriptions for stock in the Louisville and Portland Canal Company;" "An act for the improvement of certain harbors and the navigation of certain rivers;" and, finally, "An act to improve the navigation of the Wabash River." In his objections to the act last named he says:

"The desire to embark the Federal Government in works of internal improvement prevailed, in the highest degree, during the first session of the First Congress that I had the honor to meet in my present situation. When the bill authorizing a subscription on the part of the United States for stock in the Maysville and Lexington Turnpike Company passed the two Houses, there had been reported by the Committees on Internal Improvements bills containing appropriations for such objects, exclusive of those for the Cumberland road, and for harbors and light-houses, to the amount of about $106,000,000. In this amount was included authority to the Secretary of the Treasury to subscribe for the stock of different companies to a great extent, and the residue was principally for the direct construction of roads by this Government. In addition to these projects which have been presented to the two Houses under the sanction and recommendation of their respective Committees on Internal Improvements, there were then still pending before the committees, and in memorials to Congress, presented but not referred, different projects for works of a similar character, the expense of which can not be estimated with certainty, but must have exceeded $100,000,000."

Thus, within the brief period of less than ten years after the commencement of internal improvements by the General Government, the sum asked for from the Treasury for various projects amounted to more than $200,000,000. President Jackson's powerful and disinterested appeals to this country appear to have put down forever the assumption of power to make roads and cut canals, and to have checked the prevalent disposition to bring all rivers in any degree navigable within the control of the General Government. But an immense field for expending the public money and increasing the power and patronage of this Government was left open in the concession of even a limited power of Congress to improve harbors and rivers—a field which millions will not fertilize to the satisfaction of those local and speculating interests by which these projects are in general gotten up. There can not be a just and equal distribution of public burdens and benefits under such a system, nor can the States be relieved from the danger of fatal encroachment, nor the United States from the equal danger of consolidation, otherwise than by an arrest of the system, and a return to the doctrines and practices which prevailed during the first thirty years of the Government.

How forcibly does the history of this subject illustrate the tendency of power to concentration in the hands of the General Government. The power to improve their own harbors and rivers was clearly reserved to the States, who were to be aided by tonnage duties levied and collected by themselves, with the consent of Congress. For thirty-four years improvements were carried on under that system, and so careful was Congress not to interfere, under any implied power, with the soil or jurisdiction of the States, that they did not even assume the power to erect light-houses or build piers without first purchasing the ground, with the consent of the States, and obtaining jurisdiction over it. At length, after the lapse of thirty-three years, an act is passed providing for the examination of certain obstructions at the mouth of one or two harbors almost unknown. It is followed by acts making small appropriations for the removal of those obstructions. The obstacles interposed by President Monroe, after conceding the power to appropriate, were soon swept away. Congress virtually assumed jurisdiction of the soil and waters of the States, without their consent, for the purposes of internal improvement; and the eyes of eager millions were turned from the State governments to Congress as the fountain whose golden streams were to deepen their harbors and rivers, level their mountains, and fill their valleys with canals. To what consequences this assumption of power is rapidly leading is shown by the veto messages of President Jackson; and to what end it is again tending is witnessed by the provisions of this bill and bills of similar character.

In the proceedings and debates of the general convention which formed the Constitution, and of the State conventions which adopted it, nothing is found to countenance the idea that the one intended to propose, or the others to concede, such a grant of power to the General Government as the building up and maintaining of a system of internal improvements within the States necessarily implies. Whatever the General Government may constitutionally create it may lawfully protect. If it may make a road upon the soil of the States, it may protect it from destruction or injury by penal laws. So of canals, rivers, and harbors. If it may put a dam in a river, it may protect that dam from removal or injury, in direct opposition to the laws, authorities, and people of the State in which it is situated. If it may deepen a harbor it may, by its own laws, protect its agents and contractors from being driven from their work, even by the laws and authorities of the State. The power to make a road or canal, or to dig up the bottom of a harbor or river, implies a right in the soil of the State, and a jurisdiction over it, for which it would be impossible to find any warrant.

The States were particularly jealous of conceding to the General Government any right of jurisdiction over their soil, and in the Constitution restricted the exclusive legislation of Congress to such places as might be "purchased with the consent of the States in which the same shall be, for the erection of forts, magazines, dock-yards, and other needful buildings." That the United States should be prohibited from purchasing lands within the States, without their consent, even for the most essential purposes of national defense, while left at liberty to purchase or seize them for roads, canals, and other improvements of immeasurably less importance, is not to be conceived.

A proposition was made in the convention to provide for the appointment of a "secretary of domestic affairs" and make it his duty, among other things, "to attend to the opening of roads and navigation, and the facilitating communications through the United States." It was referred to a committee, and that appears to have been the last of it. On a subsequent occasion a proposition was made to confer on Congress the power to "provide for the cutting of canals, when deemed necessary," which was rejected by the strong majority of eight States to three. Among the reasons given for the rejection of this proposition it was urged that "the expense in such cases will fall on the United States, and the benefits accrue to the places where the canals may be cut."

During the consideration of this proposition a motion was made to enlarge the proposed power for "cutting canals" into a power "to grant charters of incorporation, when the interest of the United States might require, and the legislative provisions of the individual States may be incompetent;" and the reason assigned by Mr. Madison for the proposed enlargement of the power was, that that it would "secure an easy communication between the States, which the free intercourse now to be opened seemed to call for. The political obstacles being removed, a removal of the natural ones, as far as possible, ought to follow."

The original proposition and all the amendments were rejected after deliberate discussion, not on the ground, as so much of that discussion as has been preserved indicates, that no direct grant was necessary, but because it was deemed inexpedient to grant it at all. When it is considered that some of the members of the convention, who afterward participated in the organization and administration of the Government, advocated and practiced upon a very liberal construction of the Constitution, grasping at many high powers as implied in its various provisions, not one of them, it is believed, at that day claimed the power to make roads and canals, or improve rivers and harbors, or appropriate money for that purpose. Among our early statesmen of the strict construction class the opinion was universal, when the subject was first broached, that Congress did not possess the power, although some of them thought it desirable.

President Jefferson, in his message to Congress in 1806, recommended an amendment of the Constitution, with a view to apply an anticipated surplus in the Treasury "to the great purposes of the public education, roads, rivers, canals, and such other objects of public improvement as it may be thought proper to add to the constitutional enumeration of the Federal powers;" and he adds: "I suppose an amendment to the Constitution, by consent of the States, necessary, because the objects now recommended are not among those enumerated in the Constitution, and to which it permits the public moneys to be applied." In 1825, he repeated, in his published letters, the opinion that no such power has been conferred upon Congress.

President Madison, in a message to the House of Representatives of the 3d of March, 1817, assigning his objections to a bill entitled "An act to set apart and pledge certain funds for internal improvements," declares that "the power to regulate commerce among the several States can not include a power to construct roads and canals, and to improve the navigation of water courses, in order to facilitate, promote, and secure such commerce, without a latitude of construction departing from the ordinary import of the terms, strengthened by the known inconveniences which doubtless led to the grant of this remedial power to Congress."

President Monroe, in a message to the House of Representatives of the 4th of May, 1822, containing his objections to a bill entitled "An act for the preservation and repair of the Cumberland road," declares:

"Commerce between independent powers or communities is universally regulated by duties and imposts. It was so regulated by the States before the adoption of this Constitution, equally in respect to each other and to foreign powers. The goods and vessels employed in the trade are the only subjects of regulation. It can act on none other. A power, then, to impose such duties and imposts in regard to foreign nations, and to prevent any on the trade between the States, was the only power granted.

"If we recur to the causes which produced the adoption of this Constitution, we shall find that injuries resulting from the regulation of trade by the States respectively, and the advantages anticipated from the transfer of the power to Congress, were among those which had the most weight. Instead of acting as a nation in regard to foreign powers, the States, individually, had commenced a system of restraint on each other, whereby the interests of foreign powers were promoted at their expense. If one State imposed high duties on the goods or vessels of a foreign power, to countervail the regulations of such power the next adjoining States imposed lighter duties, to invite those articles into their ports, that they might be transferred thence into the other States, securing the duties to themselves. This contracted policy in some of the States was soon counteracted by others. Restraints were immediately laid on such commerce by the suffering States; and thus had grown up a state of affairs disorderly and unnatural, the tendency of which was to destroy the Union itself, and with it all hope of realizing those blessings which we had anticipated from the glorious revolution which had been so recently achieved. From this deplorable dilemma, or, rather, certain ruin, we were happily rescued by the adoption of the Constitution.

"Among the first and most important effects of this great revolution was the complete abolition of this pernicious policy. The States were brought together by the Constitution, as to commerce, into one community, equally in regard to foreign nations and each other. The regulations that were adopted regarded us, in both respects, as one people. The duties and imposts that were laid on the vessels and merchandise of foreign nations were all uniform throughout the United States; and in the intercourse between the States themselves no duties of any kind were imposed other than between different ports and counties within the same State.

"This view is supported by a series of measures, all of a marked character, preceding the adoption of the Constitution. As early as the year 1781 Congress recommended it to the States to vest in the United States a power to levy a duty of 5 per cent. on all goods imported from foreign countries into the United States for the term of fifteen years. In 1783, this recommendation, with alterations as to the kind of duties, and an extension of this term to twenty-five years, was repeated, and most earnestly urged. In 1784, it was recommended to the States to authorize Congress to prohibit, under certain modifications, the importation of goods from foreign powers into the United States for fifteen years. In 1785, the consideration of the subject was resumed, and a proposition presented in a new form, with an address to the States, explaining fully the principles on which a grant of the power to regulate trade was deemed indispensable. In 1786, a meeting took place at Annapolis, of delegates from several of the States, on this subject, and on their report the convention was formed at Philadelphia, the ensuing year, from all the States, to whose deliberations we are indebted for the present Constitution.

"In none of these measures was the subject of internal improvement mentioned, or even glanced at. Those of 1784, '85, '86, and '87, leading step by step to the adoption of the Constitution, had in view only the obtaining of a power to enable Congress to regulate trade with foreign powers. It is manifest that the regulation of trade with the several States was altogether a secondary object, suggested by and adopted in connection with the other. If the power necessary to this system of improvement is included under either branch of this grant, I should suppose that it was the first rather than the second. The pretension to it, however, under that branch has never been set up. In support of the claim under the second, no reason has been assigned which appears to have the least weight."

Such is a brief history of the origin, progress, and consequences of a system which for more than thirty years after the adoption of the Constitution was unknown. The greatest embarrassment upon the subject consists in the departure which has taken place from the early construction of the Constitution, and the precedents which are found in the legislation of Congress in later years. President Jackson, in his veto of the Wabash River bill, declares that "to inherent embarrassments have been added others from the course of our legislation concerning it." In his vetoes on the Maysville road bill, the Rockville road bill, the Wabash River bill, and other bills of like character he reversed the precedents which existed prior to that time on the subject of internal improvements. When our experience, observation, and reflection have convinced us that a legislative precedent is either unwise or unconstitutional, it should not be followed.

No express grant of this power is found in the Constitution. Its advocates have differed among themselves as to the source from which it is derived as an incident. In the progress of the discussions upon this subject the power to regulate commerce seems now to be chiefly relied upon, especially in reference to the improvement of harbors and rivers.

In relation to the regulation of commerce, the language of the grant in the Constitution is, "Congress shall have power to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States, and with the Indian tribes." That to "regulate commerce" does not mean to make a road or dig a canal or clear out a river or deepen a harbor would seem to be obvious to the common understanding. To "regulate" admits or affirms the pre-existence of the thing to be regulated. In this case it presupposes the existence of commerce, and of course the means by which and the channels through which commerce is carried on. It confers no creative power; it only assumes control over that which may have been brought into existence through other agencies, such as State legislation and the industry and enterprise of individuals. If the definition of the word "regulate" is to include the provision of means to carry on commerce, then have Congress not only power to deepen harbors, clear out rivers, dig canals, and make roads, but also to build ships, railroad cars, and other vehicles, all of which are necessary to commerce. There is no middle ground. If the power to regulate can be legitimately construed into a power to create or facilitate, then not only the bays and harbors, but the roads and canals, and all the means of transporting merchandise among the several States, are put at the disposition of Congress. This power to regulate commerce was construed and exercised immediately after the adoption of the Constitution, and has been exercised to the present day, by prescribing general rules by which commerce should be conducted. With foreign nations it has been regulated by treaties defining the rights of citizens and subjects, as well as by acts of Congress imposing duties and restrictions, embracing vessels, seamen, cargoes, and passengers. It has been regulated among the States by acts of Congress relating to the coasting trade, and the vessels employed therein, and for the better security of passengers in vessels propelled by steam, and by the removal of all restrictions upon internal trade. It has been regulated with the Indian tribes by our intercourse laws, prescribing the manner in which it shall be carried on. Thus each branch of this grant of power was exercised soon after the adoption of the Constitution, and has continued to be exercised to the present day. If a more extended construction be adopted, it is impossible for the human mind to fix on a limit to the exercise of the power other than the will and discretion of Congress. It sweeps into the vortex of national power and jurisdiction not only harbors and inlets, rivers and little streams, but canals, turnpikes, and railroads—every species of improvement which can facilitate or create trade and intercourse "with foreign nations, among the several States, and with the Indian tribes."

Should any great object of improvement exist in our widely extended country which can not be effected by means of tonnage duties, levied by the state, with the concurrence of Congress, it is safer and wiser to apply to the States, in the mode prescribed by the Constitution, for an amendment of that instrument, whereby the powers of the General Government may be enlarged, with such limitations and restrictions as experience has shown to be proper, than to assume and exercise a power which has not been granted, or which may be regarded as doubtful in the opinion of a large portion of our constituents. This course has been recommended successively by Presidents Jefferson, Madison, Monroe, and Jackson; and I fully concur with them in opinion. If an enlargement of power should be deemed proper, it will unquestionably be granted by the States; if otherwise, it will be withheld; and, in either case, their decision should be final. In the mean time I deem it proper to add that the investigation of this subject has impressed me more strongly than ever with the solemn conviction that the usefulness and permanency of this Government, and the happiness of the millions over whom it spreads protection, will be best promoted by carefully abstaining from the exercise of all powers not clearly granted by the Constitution.

JAMES K. POLK.

WASHINGTON, December 15, 1847.

Mr. PAGE. I yield one minute to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DUNN].

Mr. DUNN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] says that he is following the views of the "fathers." I wish to read from a letter addressed by George Washington, October 12, 1783, to the Marquis de Chastellux, a French nobleman:

I have lately made a tour through the Lakes George and Champlain as far as Crown Point; then returning to Schenectady, I proceeded up the Mohawk River to Fort Schuyler, crossed over to Wood Creek, which empties into the Oneida Lake, and affords the water communication with Ontario; I then traveled the country to the head of the eastern branch of the Susquehanna, and viewed the Lake Otsego, and the portage between that lake and the Mohawk River at Canajoharie. Prompted by these actual observations, I could not help taking a more contemplative and extensive view of the vast inland navigation of these United States, and could not but be struck with the immense diffusion and importance of it, and with the goodness of that Providence who has dealt His favors to us with so profuse a hand. Would to God we may have wisdom enough to improve them!

This is the language of "Father" Washington.

Mr. COX, of New York. But that does not meet the point. I recognize Washington as the father of my country; but the extract read does not touch this question.

Mr. CASWELL. Mr. Chairman, I avail myself of this opportunity to say a word upon the pending bill. I do not object to limited appropriations for the improvement of the rivers and harbors which are entirely national in their character. Indeed, I regard the water-ways of the country the natural check upon the railroad companies in establishing routes for transporting the products of the West to the seaboard, and in that the people of my State have a large interest. Congress would therefore be justified, in my opinion, in carrying on those improvements to a reasonable extent. It was well settled, however, in the recent elections that the people of this country are opposed to the use of the public money for the improvement of rivers not of a national character. This expression was too emphatic to be ignored, and I for one can not vote to continue any improvement which does not redound to the use and benefit of the whole country. There are many items in this bill for which I could cheerfully vote. They come within the class which will clearly benefit the commerce of the United States. But I can not consent to continue the pernicious practice of coupling with works of national those of purely a local character. If I vote for the one in this bill I must also vote for the other. We are told by the Secretary of War, who has charge of these works, that the appropriation of last year was so liberal, and that there is yet so large an unexpended balance in the Treasury, that further appropriations by the present Congress is unwise if not unnecessary. In this I think he is right, and an attempt now to appropriate a further sum I regard as a reckless use of the public money, and I feel it my duty to vote against the bill.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BUTTERWORTH].

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Mr. Chairman, the time which I am allowed for the discussion of this question is too limited to enable me to do either it or myself justice. I was a member of the committee appointed to investigate the plans of the Mississippi River Commission for improving that river. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROBINSON] has rightly said that there was no dispute or controversy in the committee as to the propriety of making needful and needed appropriations to improve the navigation of the Mississippi. It is a stream of national consequence, and the Government that forced its way through enemies' lines to the Gulf in order to open that national highway will not be likely now to neglect it or fail to make proper appropriations for the improvement of its navigation.

To recognize the necessity for such improvement is one thing; the means to that end is quite another. If I had any criticism to make upon the gentlemen with whom I was brought in contact while acting as a member of that committee it would be that they promptly called in question the friendship of any one who disputed the fitness and propriety of their pet method or methods. There was something of a disposition to treat the members of this committee as if they were strangers in a hostile land, unless they would subscribe to every proposition placed before them in regard to the improvement of that river. I do not mean that gentlemen were uncivil or inhospitable, but that they seemed to take each suggested criticism of their own peculiar plans for the improvement of the Mississippi as an evidence of hostility to any and all improvement.

Sir, the commerce from my own section finds its way to the Gulf and to the markets of the South and Europe down the Mississippi River; and we are as much interested in its navigation as those who live along its banks. But, sir, gentlemen familiar with the soil and the conditions with which we have to deal from Cairo to the Gulf, a distance of 1,200 miles, know that it is all made earth—an alluvial deposit, percolated all through by quicksands. The soil is such that it melts in water like sugar, caving off by the acre, nay by acres, and is swept down the stream, so that it may in very truth be said that that mighty river holds in solution an empire. Some of our friends are under the impression that they can confine the water spreading over sixty miles by building mud walls along the banks, without a compromise with muskrats or a truce with moles, and thus keep within the narrow confine of these earthen barriers an ocean that sweeps along with the force of twenty Niagaras. We doubt if they can do it. If they can, we shall be very glad to learn it.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the committee believed—I do not know that there were more than one or two dissenting voices—that the attempt to protect the banks of the Mississippi River by a system of willow mattresses, or the like, was and is purely experimental. Nobody will be more glad, I take it, than gentlemen of that committee if this experiment should prove to be successful. But, sir, we are dealing with a stretch of river of which 1,200 miles is to be protected on both sides by this system, costing an immense sum of money, certainly much above $50,000,000. All the committee say is, until the present plan shall have passed beyond the region of experiment and proved a success, we ought not to strew money up and down the banks of that river as Ceres strewed corn. That is all.

When it shall have been demonstrated that the levee system is a needed supplementary work, and that the system adopted by the Mississippi River Commission will serve the purpose for which it is intended, I will vote and advocate, wherever I am, an appropriation equal to the improvement of the banks from its source to its mouth.

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROBINSON] is clearly right when he asserts that the commission has gone beyond the letter, certainly the spirit, of the law in using so large a part of the appropriation for the construction of levees along the banks of the river. Sir, I do not inveigh against either the levee or any other system which is being tried as an experiment by the Mississippi River Commission. I only want all those attempts to be treated as an experiment, because they are in the experimental stages, and when we get beyond that it will be time enough to consider what appropriation will be necessary to keep and control the Father of Waters and improve its navigation.

The fact that an immense commerce floats on its bosom does not change the character of the banks nor the difficulty of dealing with that stream. It is the opinion of old and experienced navigators that what is most needed is a system of dredge-boats properly and energetically worked—that which they do not have now; but whatever is necessary to be done I am sure the committee in its entirety are willing to do. The question remains, what ought we to do? The experiments being made will determine, and then we can act advisedly, and will, I trust, appropriate liberally.

Mr. Chairman, I was appointed chairman of a sub-committee to consider a special branch of the investigation which related solely to the outlet system. We have made a report which I commend to the reading and careful consideration of the members of this House. I have not time now to consider it beyond saying this: The sub-committee found the Mississippi dammed up at its mouth, and the waters backed up the stream, impeding the natural flow of the current; so that the river, while it is two hundred feet deep at New Orleans, is less than twenty feet deep at the mouth; it therefore occurred to the sub-committee that if by any means, through an outlet, you could lower the plane of that stream ten or fifteen feet it would tend to increase the current of the river below, improve navigation, and as an incident protect the riparian owners. And hence we advised the experiment of cutting an outlet at Lake Borgne, some ten or twelve miles below New Orleans.

Let me leave the consideration of the Mississippi River matter, Mr. Chairman, to refer generally to the system for the improvement of rivers and harbors. My honorable friend from New York [Mr. COX] goes back more than half a century, and notes the nature and amount of appropriations to determine what this House may properly do to-day in the matter of appropriations for the improvement of rivers and harbors. I want him to understand that the young Republic is no longer an infant in swaddling clothes. It no longer occurs that the harvest fields and gardens about your cities and villages yield enough to satisfy the wants of all the inhabitants. It no longer occurs that even the great West, in the valleys of the Mississippi—it no longer occurs that the forests yield all the fuel they want or all the lumber they require. In place of the forests of a quarter of a century ago, we seek now the great coal-fields in the country, and from thence we get our fuel. And it seems to have been a wise provision of Providence that these ample coal-fields are placed at the head of the streams upon which the mined coal may be floated at little cost to the homes of the inhabitants below. Can it be doubted, sir, that to the inhabitants of the Mississippi Valley, of the Ohio Valley, the Kanawha River is much more important than the Hudson?

The Hudson or the Big Kanawha, which could we best spare? Why, sir, there is not a village or hamlet within twenty-five miles of the Ohio that does not receive its coal from that stream or adjacent streams. Upon the banks or in the hills along those streams God has stored our fuel, indispensable to us and to all the people in the Ohio and Mississippi Valleys. We must have fuel and we want it cheap. And this recalls an incident. While I was speaking about the question of river and harbor improvements in a town fifty miles north of Cincinnati, some anxious soul was in the audience and was concerned to catechise me. I asked him: "How much do you pay for coal here?" He said: "We get it put into our cellars at 15 cents a bushel." "You do, and you get it by rail from a mine that is less than a hundred miles away, while I get my coal from Kanawha, brought on the river five hundred miles, a superior article, put into my cellar two miles away from the city at 11 cents a bushel."

Why my friend talks as if those who are in the harvest fields of Kansas and Iowa are not interested in this matter at all. Gentlemen from Iowa and from Kansas, let me ask, whom do you feed? Where is the market for your hogs, for your oats, for your wheat, your barley, and for all that you produce for the markets. Where is it? Is it about your homes? Not at all. Is it in the villages and hamlets of your several neighborhoods? Not at all. Where then is the market for your produce? It is in the hives, the busy hives of industry upon the Atlantic, down the Mississippi River and throughout this vast country in other localities; and the highways that God has digged for the people of these localities ought to be improved that your products may reach those marts cheaply. How else can you reach them? Cheap transportation is what you want, and then it will not occur again, as it has in the past, that men will be starving in the streets of New York for the corn which you are burning for fuel in your houses in Iowa and Kansas.

I want to say a word touching the East. Gentlemen, there is not a river, there is not a creek harbor of yours that we have not improved and improved liberally if it is in any respect or in any degree important to the commerce of this country. The little bays and shoal places along your coasts where a fishing-smack with twenty kits of mackerel and fifty codfish might ride safely at anchor, we have improved. We ask now that rivers bearing the commerce of this country from the corn and wheat fields of the West shall be also improved, and that the Constitution shall be construed with reference to existing conditions. The streams and rivers that fifty years ago nobody would have dreamed of improving have since become important factors in the problem of our national and interstate commerce, in the sense in which the term "commerce" is used in the Constitution.

To my friend from New York, when he speaks of the "great arteries" of commerce, let me say that the arteries of commerce, as the arteries of the human system, are of little consequence if the veins that feed them and by which they are fed are dried up. I say more, in defending the action of the House touching the river and harbor appropriation bill of last year (conceding, as I do, that there were many objectionable features in it; these were, however, the speck in the ointment), that it shall not be forgotten that the time will soon come, if it is not now here, when men from the Mississippi Valley who shall refuse to vote ample appropriation for improving the people's highways will not get votes enough to pay for counting them. Do not forget, men of New York and of the East, you who would treat the country as an orange you have sucked and now want to chew the pulp; do not forget that from the East, not through the balmy South, nor yet the frigid North, but along the central line, with North to South conjoined, "Westward, the course of empire takes its way." And in the line of that march of empire these necessary improvements will follow; nay, more, will henceforth walk abreast, and the needed appropriations to that end be voted, and the people's highways made ready and convenient for the people's use. [Applause.]

Mr. ELLIS. I am glad, Mr. Chairman, for the poor privilege of speaking, if only for fifteen minutes, upon this question. I have not time even to gather about the shores of the truths that lie hidden in this subject. I can but devote the brief space of time given to me to try to elaborate one single point. I have agreed with the majority of the committee, the special committee appointed by this House, in concurring that for the present at least the efforts of the Mississippi River Commission should be confined exclusively to the points where work has already begun. It was not, Mr. Chairman, any lack of confidence in the theory or plans of the commission. It was not but that I believe they will successfully work out the permanent improvement of that river; but it was because they themselves testified that until the like character of work which they had adopted for the purpose of this river improvement had proved satisfactory and all sufficient for their designs and plans they themselves would prefer that the work should be so confined. What is that plan? It has not been half stated in this discussion. It is as stated in the report of the minority of the committee, which I propose to read, simply this; and I now beg the careful consideration of the committee to this point, because it is one of magnitude and importance in connection with the question:

The contraction for low-water channel of the river to a uniform width of 3,000 feet between one of its natural banks revetted and held in place, so that caving is impossible, and a bank formed within the channel by the rivers' deposits of silt, arrested and held by permeable dikes and piles so constructed as to arrest the current and cause the necessary deposit.

That is the low-water channel. And now, coincident with this, and absolutely inseparable from this, is the theory of the high-water channel. That is a channel constructed upon or near the dikes on the bend of the levees, along which the river must be trained into the same course or direction of current secured as the low-water channel. And the plan embodying both the low and high water channel is an entirety, a whole, and you can not separate them. I will read also the language of the minority of the committee with reference to this high-water channel:

Coincident with this plan for low-water channel, dikes or levees are to be constructed on or near the natural banks for the purpose of training the flood waters in the direction and course of the low-water current, to restrain them from breaking off into cross or counter currents, which would endanger the lower-water channel works and cause deposits therein, and to secure additional dynamic force for the more speedy discharge of flood waters.

Now, what is the proposition of the gentleman from Massachusetts? He says to this commission: take Plum Point reach and Lake Providence reach and work out your plan; and then he proposes that Congress shall deprive them of one essential of their plan. He says, "Go work out your theory, but you shall not have the opportunity to illustrate and develop that theory in full."

Ah, Mr. Chairman, that gentleman's progress on this subject has been rather like that of the craw-fish. He has been looking one way and going another. In 1879, when this commission bill was before Congress, that gentleman said—and I challenge his attention and ask him to explain it under the five-minute rule——

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. I will be happy to do so.

Mr. ELLIS. The gentleman said—

The committee have found—

The committee of which he was a member and which framed this commission bill—

The committee have found these two subjects to be interdependent. They have not seen in the investigation they have given that the one necessarily stands apart from the other. All the writers and all the engineers from whom they have heard declare that in some measure, greater or less, the protection of the lands has also an influence upon the navigable character of the river.

He further said:

This bill is intended to provide a commission to devise a plan for the improvement of the Mississippi River and the protection of the alluvial lands combined. If as a part of the whole plan for the improvement of the river for the purposes of navigation, and incidental thereto, the lands of the valley may be protected, I am in favor of it.

Now, what is the gentleman's attitude here to-day? As I have shown, the plans of low-water channel and of high-water channel are coincident and the one depends upon the other. Now, what does the gentleman hold? "You may go and work out your low-water channel; if you can we will give you money to try the experiment; but you shall not have the high-water channel." That is the proposition of the gentleman from Massachusetts to-day.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I desire to say that this theory met the approval of every engineer that testified before us save one, a most intelligent gentleman from his own vicinity, who could by no possibility of means be suspected of entertaining any sectional prejudices that way that would lead him to wish to take the Government money and apply it for the protection of property. Professor Clemens Herschell told him this was the means of training rivers in Europe, and that the plan was an entirety; and that the low-water channel was dependent upon the high-water channel. That is the main point, Mr. Chairman. The members of the committee were told that when the river overflowed it attacked not only the surface-water, but the water away down to the bottom of the river attacked the bank. There is your revetment bank—the wall of the House will represent it. Over it a crevasse plunges. Now, by the experience and deliberate testimony of these engineers the water when it overflows even to the depth of three or four feet, the surface-water directing the attacking column, attacks that bank down to the very bottom of the river. What chance would revetment have with such an attack, an attack that plows its way two hundred or three hundred or four hundred yards into the bank of the river creating a great bay? What will protect all your low-water improvements if you permit attacks of this character?

No, sir. You must train and must guide these flood-waters in a course coincident with the low-water scour, or your low-water plan will fail.

There was another thing that bothered the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROBINSON], who is a great and good lawyer and a scholar, but who, I judge, would hardly muster up engineering skill enough to construct a flutter-mill on the boyhood plan of thirty years ago. He looks at that stained map and asks how it is possible to gather up these flood-waters into banks 3,000 feet apart. Mr. Herschell, his friend and neighbor, told him. Let me read his testimony. He was being cross-examined by that gentleman at the time. I ask the attention of the gentleman again to that testimony, because there is a good deal in it which he may learn from. I call his attention to this portion of Mr. Herschell's testimony:

Question. Have you had experience or observation in Europe?
Answer. Yes, sir.
Q. Do you know whether that system has been pursued in European rivers?
A. I know that it has.
Q. What river?
A. The Rhine is a good example of it, the upper reaches of it. It is a well regulated and trained river from Switzerland to the mouth, to the German Ocean.
Q. How has it been regulated and trained?
A. Generally by the very system I have described. In the time of flood its waters are limited and defined. In time of low water they are likewise marked out within the high-water limits.
Q. A channel within a channel?
A. A channel within a channel: that is it precisely.
Q. Is it regarded in streams that are subject to flood periods as necessary to have the high-water channel well defined?
A. I think that is the general opinion among engineers. It certainly is mine.
Q. Why is that; is it a protection to the inner channel, the low-water channel?
A. I should say the principal reason was to keep the river from abandoning entirely its former channel and striking out in a new course for itself, as it would be likely to do unless guided during times of flood. Another reason is that the very material that the river erodes or takes up is one of the chief causes of its forming shoals. That is where the most of the material that makes shoals comes from. It comes from being picked up in one place and deposited in another. In order to have a river of proper navigable depth—a reliable navigable depth—at all stages it is necessary that it shall pick up material as little as possible.
Q. I should suppose, however, that those high-water banks can not provide against every exigency; occasionally a flood will come that will go over them?
A. In case of river works, they are liable to floods such as occur, we will say, once in a century or thereabouts. They will be higher than has been provided for. It does not pay commercially to provide against exigencies of this sort, that are not liable to occur more than once in a hundred or two hundred years. At this very moment the greater part of Central Europe is recovering from the effects of a flood from both the Danube and the Rhine, the like of which I am informed has not been seen for two hundred years. To make the river works on those rivers sufficient to guard against grossly exceptional floods of that character probably would not pay. It is practically impossible. A contingency of that sort must be endured.
Q. Certainly. Like the flood of which we read—they could not help it. But generally, in your opinion, it is necessary to control the river in high-water periods?
A. I think it is.
Q. And this essentially, in your judgment, for the purpose of navigation and commerce?
A. I think it is.
Q. It looks like a mammoth undertaking, does it not, to gather up the flood waters that extend, for instance, fifty or sixty miles wide and three or four feet deep? For instance take this point where, according to the section lines, the flood was seventy miles wide. It looks like a huge undertaking to propose to control all that water and keep it within the channel of the river and compel the river to discharge it.
A. Well, sir, it does not look so very formidable to the hydraulic mind.
Q. To the unprofessional mind I confess it looks like a big job.
A. If the river discharged it it would not spread out.
Q. That is true.
A. There would be nothing to gather up, as it were.

That is, by the theory of general concentration you compel the discharge before the waters have accumulated. And this is a well-known principle in hydraulic engineering, that every increase of dynamic force of a current increases the rapidity of discharge.

I quote from Mr. Herschell's testimony further:

Q. Under what law of hydraulic engineering or dynamics would the river ever control and discharge that immense flood?
A. It is one of the most notable laws of hydraulics that the channel with an increase of depth and only a slight increase of slope, discharges so much more water. Five feet increase in depth when the depth is already 80 feet, say, may double the discharge.
Q. Five feet increase in depth may double the discharge.
A. Those are mere random figures to illustrate that a small increase in depth will very greatly increase the discharge.
Q. Is not that the law?
A. It is the law.
Q. It is a well-ascertained, incontrovertible law.
A. It is a well-ascertained law that one handling water becomes very familiar with, and is not surprised at, when he sees it in practice.

Again, at pages 331–2, he says:

Q. But could the flood of 1882, extending down in the valley, ranging from twenty to seventy miles in width, and in depth over the land from five to ten feet, be confined in that space? Do you look forward to it as a practicable scheme that by any walls of earth in the bed of the river, or on the banks, you could confine that flood and carry it out to the Gulf without disturbance?
A. Certainly. The width of a flooded district and the moderate depth over which it has flowed are alarming-looking figures. But if that water, instead of standing still and flooding the land, had been enabled to pass on it would not have assumed this alarming proportion. It is like the genii in the Arabian Nights Entertainment. So long as it was kept within the bottle it was all right; but when it got out it looked very formidable and impossible to get it back again.

It is in testimony here, as recalled by my friend from Illinois [Mr. THOMAS], that whenever the water is confined within its channels, it travels from Cairo to New Orleans, 1,000 miles, in ten days. Where the water had spread all over the country, the floods have consumed one hundred days in traveling the same distance. That is, by confining it, the discharging power of the water increased 1,200 per cent.; and for every foot of rise the scouring power is also increased, and the current is deepened.

They have testified that every additional rise, while confining the waters, adds immeasurably to the discharging power of the river. Here, then, you find these two plans, the one dependent upon the other, tending to work out all the design that was contained in the instructions to the Mississippi River Commission.

There is one thing said by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROBINSON] which I desire to correct. It was intended to prejudice the minds of members of this House against the building of levees. I refer now to the testimony of Major Harrod. The attempt was made, and has been made, to produce the impression on the minds of members of this House that this Mississippi River Commission has been colluding with State and private corporations for the building of levees.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ELLIS] does injustice not only to myself but to Major Harrod. I did not refer to Major Harrod at all.

Mr. ELLIS. Major Harrod was the gentleman who was badgered on that subject like a witness in the police court.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. I refer to Major Richardson. I interrupt the gentleman because I do not wish to have any injustice done to Major Harrod. I did not refer to him in any manner in what I said.

Mr. ELLIS. He was a witness and was cross-examined by the gentleman in regard to building a railroad dike. Major Richardson had nothing to say about that.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. General Comstock testified about that.

Mr. ELLIS. The testimony of Major Harrod and the testimony of Mr. Taylor, of Indiana, was this: that it being in the direction of the work of the commission in establishing this high-water channel and closing these outlets, when they found State or corporations building works in the direction of the accomplishment of their object, they found they could do the work a great deal cheaper and with a great deal more of economy to the Government by inviting their aid.

So when they found that the State and the railroad company were about to close Bonnet Carre cavasse they found they could with $15,000 do what would ordinarily require eighty-five or ninety thousand dollars to do. And when they found that this railroad company was prepared to construct a dike along the bank of the river in the form and shape of a levee, so as to accomplish their purpose of high-water channel confinement, they found they could do for $30,000 what would otherwise cost $60,000.

And with that scrupulous care for the interest of the Government which has been developed in every line and syllable of this testimony, they embraced the opportunity of doing the work which was best for the Government.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I ask leave to print some remarks upon this bill.

There was no objection, and leave was granted accordingly. [See Appendix.]

Mr. ROBERTSON. I ask leave to print some remarks, as I find I shall have no opportunity to deliver them.

There was no objection, and leave was granted accordingly. [See Appendix.]

Mr. PAGE. I find that I have three or four minutes of my time left, which I do not care to occupy. I prefer to have the bill read by paragraphs.

Mr. WHITE. As a member of the Committee on Commerce, I ask leave to occupy the four minutes' time remaining which the gentleman from California says he does not wish to occupy.

Mr. PAGE. I have no objection; there are three minutes remaining, I believe.

Mr. WHITE. As a member of the Committee of Commerce, who I believe my colleagues will bear witness during the last session gave close attention to the work of preparing the bill which received such wide condemnation, beginning with the veto of the President, I desire to say that at this time I am opposed to passing any river and harbor bill. But I am pursuing this course to help educate the people up to the necessity for more liberal appropriations for internal improvements in the future.

In the first place, we were told last year by the President that the duty devolved upon him to withhold his signature from a bill containing appropriations which in his opinion greatly exceeded in amount the needs of the country for the current year. If the $18,000,000 we appropriated last year was more than the Executive knew how to properly expend, then I think it would be unwise to make an additional appropriation at this time.

Again, the President said that his principal objection to that bill was that it contained appropriations for purposes not for the common defense or general welfare, and which did not promote commerce among the States. He said that in the bill he found an appropriation for the Potomac marshes, which he had recommended, and an appropriation for the Mississippi River, which he had recommended; but which in my opinion were the worst things in that bill.

After spending days and nights for months carefully preparing a bill which in my opinion met the wants of the country, the Senate amended it and the President vetoed it, saying that there was more money in it than he could properly expend. Now, if that was so, there must be a surplus fund on hand to-day.

Let the President and his advisers alone until they have expended the $18,000,000 appropriated last year and notify Congress that more money is needed.

Last year the House's river and harbor bill was carefully prepared to meet the wants of the entire country; while this bill has not been carefully prepared and does not meet the wants of the entire country. It proposes additional appropriations, when the Executive who has the disbursing of the fund through his subordinate officers notified us and the country that we had appropriated more money last August than they know how to expend.

I am therefore opposed to passing any river and harbor appropriation bill at this session of Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. The time for general debate has been exhausted. The Clerk will now proceed to read the bill by paragraphs for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the following sums of money be, and are hereby, appropriated, to be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War, for the construction, completion, repair, and preservation of the public works hereinafter named:

Improving harbor at Portland, Maine: Continuing improvement, $15,000.

Mr. PAGE. I am instructed by the Committee on Commerce to offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk and which was omitted from this bill by mistake.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the paragraph just read insert the following:

"Improving harbor at Rockland, Maine: Continuing improvement, $20,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. I desire to offer the following amendment:

Improving Quincy Bay: Continuing improvement, $25,000.

Mr. PAGE. That amendment is not germane to this part of the bill. I ask the gentleman to wait until we get to the part relating to the Mississippi River. I will notify the gentleman.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. I have no objection to withdrawing the amendment for the present.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving harbor at Plymouth, Massachusetts: Continuing improvement, $1,000.

Mr. ANDERSON. I move to strike out the last word. I wish to inquire whether Plymouth, Massachusetts, is not one of the cases referred to by the Secretary of War where there is an unexpended appropriation in the Treasury?

Mr. PAGE. It is among the items which were objected to by the Secretary of War, but upon examination the committee found it to be, in its claim for an appropriation, one of the strongest works in the river and harbor bill. This position is justified by the reports of the engineers for this year, last year, and preceding years. In addition to this at the last session a letter was addressed to the chairman of the Committee on Commerce by the Secretary of War calling attention to the damage done to that harbor by storms, and urging an appropriation of $14,000 to carry on the work last year. I hold in my hand an additional letter from the Secretary of War asking for an appropriation of the same kind.

Mr. WASHBURN. I wish to inquire whether the appropriation made last year has not been expended, or will not be expended before the end of this fiscal year?

Mr. PAGE. It will be, and this additional sum of $1,000 is for the completion of the work.

Mr. CRAPO. I would like to answer the question put by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANDERSON]. The harbor of Plymouth is in the neighborhood of my home; and hence I have personal knowledge in regard to it. It is the first in the detailed list of alleged unimportant works in the last river and harbor bill which the Secretary of War reported to Congress in his recent communication in answer to the resolution of the House. I think this particular item in the bill deserves some attention in order that we may determine what reliance can be placed upon the statements made by the Engineer Department in that detailed list. The Secretary of War, in his list of objectionable works, forgets the special communication which he made to Congress in April of last year, when the last river and harbor bill was in the course of preparation by the Committee on Commerce, in which he urged the repair and maintenance of Long Beach, in this harbor; and asserted that any action of the sea thereon likely to injure it should be at once arrested; and recommended over his official signature an appropriation by Congress of $14,000 for this work——

Mr. McLANE, of Maryland. Out of the regular order.

Mr. CRAPO. Out of the regular order as a special appropriation. That appropriation was made in the last river and harbor bill. Yet in his recent communication specifying objectionable works the Secretary of War says that this particular appropriation ought not to have been made, because the benefits to be derived from the improvement are local, with but little bearing upon the general commerce of the country. Now, the fact is that the harbor of Plymouth has a very considerable foreign commerce. There came into that harbor last year merchandise from foreign countries amounting to over $320,000; and merchandise was exported from that harbor to foreign countries. The custom-house at that port, during the last year, collected on merchandise coming from foreign countries duties amounting to over $47,000; and there is to-day in bonded warehouses of the United States at that port foreign merchandise valued at $120,000, upon which the duty when collected will amount to $18,000 or $19,000. This very port of Plymouth, in the amount of customs duty which it collects, is the second or third of the ten collection districts of Massachusetts, Boston of course standing first.

In view of these facts and figures, to say that the improvements at Plymouth are simply local and of local importance is to throw discredit generally upon the conclusions of the Secretary of War in the document sent to the House enumerating unimportant and objectionable harbor works.

Mr. ANDERSON. I withdraw my former amendment and move to strike out the words "one thousand dollars." I am perfectly aware, Mr. Chairman, that the different items in this bill will be passed as they have been heretofore, and therefore there is not much inducement to make any motion to strike out. And on account of the historic name of Plymouth and of the friendship of the gentleman from Massachusetts I would be willing to withdraw the motion to strike out $1,000. If you put it as a matter of friendship, if you put it as a recognition of the name of Plymouth and the effect of its traditions upon this country which have gone into American history, I repeat I am perfectly willing that this appropriation shall remain in. But, Mr. Chairman, if you put this appropriation as in any sense regulating railroad rates or as in any sense affecting the broad commerce of the nation, I certainly would not concur in such an appropriation. The fact is that all along that coast there are other points to which commerce comes. Now, I happen to know something of that specific harbor from personal experience. I have sailed on it; and at low tide, if the mud was not so soft that you could not walk upon it, you would have a particularly large amount of traveling to do to reach the land.

Mr. CRAPO. But how deep is it at high water?

Mr. ANDERSON. I do not know; I did not get out to measure it at that time. [Laughter.] But that is one case where you have a question of expending a large amount of money before you can make a channel through which any large vessel can pass. The gentleman from Massachusetts knows as well as I do that at low water this is used largely to-day for fishing-smacks.

Mr. CRAPO. Let me say to the gentleman from Kansas that this is not for the preservation of the channel; but it is for the preservation of a beach which protects the harbor from the encroachments of the ocean.

Mr. ANDERSON. Oh, yes; and ultimately you will have to run it all along that long arm that reaches out there, and it will require additional expense.

But, Mr. Chairman, I am calling attention to this particular item for the purpose of illustrating my opposition to this class of appropriations, under the guise of improvements of rivers and harbors for the commerce of this country. Where you dig a channel that is necessary, where you improve a harbor that is necessary for the commerce, where you take one work that is really affecting even to a limited extent the general commerce of the country, I am ready to vote for it, but in no other case.

Mr. WASHBURN. What do you call general commerce?

Mr. ANDERSON. I do not call some little petty creek the general commerce of this country.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. Does the gentleman from Kansas know that during the last year 2,700 vessels arrived at that port, according to the statistics?

Mr. ANDERSON. If that be true, then of course they must have come in at high tide. When I get through I expect to withdraw my motion to strike out the $1,000, because if that harbor is already adapted to the entrance of the number of vessels to which the gentleman refers, then $1,000 will not make any material difference in its improvement. If it is not adapted to their entrance, that sum of money will not have any effect upon its improvement. But the appropriations which are made in a bill of this kind should be for purposes which can be of utility in connection with the commerce. It may just as well in such a case as this go where a great deal of the details of appropriations as mentioned here will go; we may charge it up to a high general royal account. My object in presenting this motion was only, however, to call attention to the facts in connection with this matter of appropriations as carried by this bill, and I now withdraw the motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving channel between Staten Island and New Jersey: Continuing improvement, $25,000.

Mr. ANDERSON. I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the gentleman in charge of this bill what the purpose of this appropriation is?

Mr. PAGE. Let me say to the gentleman that it is made in pursuance of the recommendations of the engineers. I can turn to the engineer's report if the gentleman wants to hear it.

Mr. ANDERSON. It is not one of the objected-to items?

Mr. PAGE. No, sir.

Mr. ANDERSON. I withdraw the motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving harbor at Charleston, including Sullivan's Island, South Carolina: Continuing improvement, $100,000.

Mr. RICHARDSON, of South Carolina. In line 70, I move to strike out "100" and insert "250;" so that it will read:

Continuing improvement, $250,000.

The amount recommended by the Engineer Department for the improvement of Charleston Harbor is $1,800,000. The amount which the Engineer Department has said can be used and ought to be appropriated for the improvement of the harbor for the next fiscal year is $755,000. In a report which I hold in my hand, and a part of which I will incorporate with my remarks, the Engineer Department informs us that unless a sufficient amount is appropriated now to continue the improvements which have been begun great losses must result to the Government and serious injury to the work. Here is what the report from the Engineer Department says:

The work as far as constructed is generally in a satisfactory condition, notwithstanding some slight settlement has occurred at different periods at several portions of both jetties. Thus far nothing of a serious nature has taken place. At other points sand is collecting over the work, aiding in protecting the mattress logs from the attacks of the teredo.

Considerable scour has recently been observed alongside of and past the seaward portion of the south jetty. This has not only necessitated the construction of spur jetties on either side of it, but also indicates the expediency of a rapid seaward extension of the work, to guard against an undue increase of its ultimate cost.

To expend the sum of $300,000 appropriated for improving the entrance to Charleston Harbor, by act of Congress passed August 2, 1882, a contract was entered into, on September 30, 1882, with Mr. A. Ames Howlett, of Syracuse, New York, who agreed to do at least $25,000 worth of work per month.

Operations under this contract were commenced during the latter part of October last, and are now progressing. It is calculated that of said appropriation not more than $50,000 will remain unexpended at the end of the present fiscal year, and it is probable that the entire sum will be expended by the first of the following August.

It should be stated that, while the future ship-channel proposed to be developed and protected by the jetties is not yet formed nor available for the passage of large vessels, though some important changes are taking place, the existing or Pumpkin Hill Channel shows unmistakable signs of deterioration, caused no doubt by the influence of the works now in progress. A further reduction of the depths of this channel may be reasonably expected. It seems, therefore, to be of great importance, if not of urgent necessity, to promote the formation of the new ship-channel, not only by pushing out and raising both jetties as rapidly as possible, but also to hasten this effect by dredging, so that increased depths may be obtained at an early date. The increase gained in this manner will undoubtedly be substantially maintained by the jetties if the latter are simultaneously extended and strengthened.

The present appropriation is not sufficient to carry the work through this critical stage, and it is therefore greatly to be desired that an additional sum be made available for the coming fiscal year, in order to prevent a suspension of operations.

Should this latter take place, it would undoubtedly cause a very material increase in the cost of this work, and seriously jeopardize even the present inadequate facilities for commerce.

I understand the plan of the committee has been to give ordinarily one-third of the amount recommended by the Engineer Department. And yet, in this instance, we have less than one-seventh of the amount appropriated. Now, I appeal to the committee that in the interest of economy as well as a matter of justice to the people of Charleston to put them upon an equal footing with the other appropriations which they recommended in the bill, they should at least give one-third of the amount which the Engineer Department has asked for as absolutely necessary to be appropriated in order to carry on in a proper manner this great work and to prevent loss on the work already done. If they do not intend to abandon the work and allow all that has been done to be lost, and the expense incurred by the Government wasted, I appeal to them to adopt the amendment I have offered and at least allow a sufficient amount to enable this work to be carried to such a state of improvement that no loss will result to the Government from a cessation of all work. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. PAGE. I agree with what the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. RICHARDSON] has said as to the importance of this work. The committee endeavored to keep this bill down somewhere between bounds. They tried to make a bill against which there could be no complaint as to the extravagant amount of money carried by it. It is true that the Engineer Department asked for $755,000. There are $60,000 now on hand or will be on the 1st of July. We have given $100,000 more, making in all that will be available for that harbor for the next year $160,000. I leave it to the Committee of the Whole to decide whether they wish to increase this appropriation.

Mr. RICHARDSON, of South Carolina. Let me read a single passage from the engineer's report.

Mr. PAGE. There are many other works in the same condition as the Charleston Harbor is.

Mr. RICHARDSON, of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, the engineer in his report in answer to Senator BUTLER's request uses this language speaking of the suspension of operations:

> Should this take place it would undoubtedly cause a very material increase to the cost of this work and seriously jeopardize the present inadequate facilities for commerce.

I trust, in the interest of economy and the preservation of what has already been done, that we shall pass this amendment.

Mr. MACKEY. I move to strike out the last word.

The amount appropriated in this bill for the continuation of the work now in progress for improvement of Charleston Harbor is so utterly inadequate that it is almost equivalent to an abandonment of the work which was begun there several years ago for the deepening of the channel at the entrance of the harbor. Any one who will take the trouble to read the reports that have been made by the engineers in charge of the work will see that those engineers express the opinion that unless an adequate amount is appropriated for the purpose of continuing the work throughout the next fiscal year serious shoaling may occur in the channel now used for the purpose of entering the harbor, which may result in a serious injury to the commerce of the port. In a recent communication from Lieutenant Bailey of the Engineer Corps, that officer says:

> The work is now just in that condition when it should be pushed with energy. A discontinuance would unnecessarily expose the present work to deterioration, increase the cost of future construction, and seriously delay the development of the new channel.

With an appropriation of only $100,000 work can not be carried on through more than about one fourth of the year and consequently during the balance of the fiscal year the work will have to be suspended.

In comparison with the appropriations provided in this bill for other harbors, the Committee on Commerce, in proposing so small an amount for Charleston Harbor, have acted rather unfairly to that locality. By this bill the appropriation proposed for the harbor of Mobile, Alabama, is $100,000, the same amount as it is proposed to give to the harbor of Charleston. And yet by reference to the annual report of the Chief of the Bureau of Statistics on the commerce and navigation of the United States it appears that the value of imports and exports of merchandise during the past fiscal year from the port of Charleston was over $20,000,000, while the value of imports and exports from the port of Mobile, for the improvement of whose harbor it is also proposed to give $100,000, amount to only $3,637,681, about one-sixth of the value of the imports and exports at Charleston. Furthermore, in the value of her imports and exports Charleston ranks as the eighth port in the United States, while Mobile ranks as the twenty-fourth.

Let me mention another instance. By this bill it is proposed to give Galveston, Texas, $200,000, or twice the amount given to Charleston, and yet in the value of her imports and exports Galveston stands below Charleston. And so in other cases, which I could mention if I had the time. Here is a port, the value of whose commerce is over $70,000,000——

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Can the gentleman give us the amount of tonnage?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has expired.

Mr. WASHBURN. I hope this amendment will not be agreed to, and I hope no amendment will be agreed to increasing these appropriations. There are hardships in many cases no doubt, but the Committee on Commerce, desiring to bring in a bill that would meet the approbation of the House, have felt it their duty to reduce many appropriations they otherwise would have increased. I trust all friends of the river and harbor bill will stand by the bill as reported by the committee, at least so far as keeping it within its present bounds is concerned.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I would ask the gentleman one question. In that case what is the use of considering the bill?

Mr. WASHBURN. I have a right to appeal to the House to keep this bill within its present limits. It is in the discretion of the House to do as they please. The river and harbor bill of last year passed through the House without an amendment, and I hope this will. Those who are desirous of beating the bill entirely I notice are in favor of amendments.

Mr. WHITE. The gentleman will not insist that this bill is prepared as carefully as the last one was.

Mr. WASHBURN. If the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WHITE] had taken pains to be in the committee-room a few times he would have known all about it.

Mr. WHITE. The committee was not full at any time; the bill was prepared by half a dozen men.

Mr. MACKEY. I will ask the gentleman, is not the amount appropriated for Charleston Harbor much less in proportion than in any other case?

Mr. WASHBURN. That may be the fact, but Charleston is one of the harbors for which large appropriations have been made. The Galveston Harbor improvements are comparatively recent; so that there is very good reason for the larger appropriation in the latter case than in the former.

Mr. MACKEY. The gentleman is mistaken as to that.

Mr. KENNA. I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of asking the chairman of the Committee on Commerce, or some member of that committee, whether in the reduction made in reference to the appropriation for Charleston Harbor the same rule substantially has been applied that was applied to other reductions throughout the bill?

Mr. HORR. I will answer the gentleman by saying that the reduction of the appropriation for Charleston Harbor is larger than we have generally made throughout the bill; there is no doubt about that. The facts are these: we last year gave a larger amount to Charleston Harbor than to any other harbor along that coast. Of that amount there is $60,000 left, and we concluded that they could get along this year very well with $160,000, though upon the face of it the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. MACKEY] is correct in his statement. It does not look exactly just, but we tried to give what we thought they ought to have.

I am frank to confess for one that when the estimates came to the committee there was a feeling that the one for Charleston Harbor was a very large one.

Mr. KENNA. I made that inquiry, looking further than merely the appropriation in this particular instance. If the Committee on Commerce in devising this bill have made the same general reductions, taking into consideration and always having in view the question of the amount which will be on hand for each of these works at the close of the present fiscal year—if, in other words, the reductions have been made with some degree of uniformity and with a general degree of fairness throughout, I am ready to accede to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. WASHBURN] and aid in the passage of this bill as it came from the committee.

Mr. MACKEY. But in this instance the reduction has not been made with uniformity and justice.

Mr. WHITE. I move to strike out the last word. The estimate for 1884 for Charleston Harbor was $755,000. The amount recommended by the Committee on Commerce in this bill is $100,000.

I rise to reply especially to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. WASHBURN], who has intimated that if I had attended the meetings of the committee a little oftener I would not have had such a bad opinion of this bill.

Mr. HORR. No; he said you would have known more about it.

Mr. WHITE. I desire to remind that gentleman, without betraying any of the secrets of the committee, that among the first things we did in that committee was to agree on some system by which to prepare this bill. And the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HORR] offered a resolution that we would take the estimates and prepare a smaller bill than we had last year upon some fair basis, say of 33⅓ per cent. of the estimates.

After we had proceeded a little ways it was found that that would not work as well as it was thought originally it would work. When we came to this Charleston Harbor the grossest injustice was done by giving not merely 33⅓ per cent. but going way down below that proportion of the estimates, and treating that harbor unjustly and unfairly, although the board of trade asked us for an appropriation to develop the trade in Charleston, as the board of trade in Louisville did for that city.

I say again, as I said a moment ago, that this bill has not been carefully prepared but is a patched-up arrangement.

Mr. BISBEE. I wish to say a word upon the pending amendment for the reason that I represent a district that has an improvement going on which is in precisely the same condition as the improvement at Charleston.

I do not wish to condemn or criticise the Committee on Commerce. But when they inform the House that they have adopted as a rule of action as the basis of their report the taking one-third of the estimates of the engineers——

Mr. PAGE. No such statement has been made, no such rule was adopted.

Mr. BISBEE. Then I think they have gone on a wrong basis.

Mr. WHITE. Let me interrupt the gentleman a moment.

Mr. BISBEE. Not now.

Mr. WHITE. Merely to correct a mistake.

Mr. BISBEE. Not now. This is a national work, and after a plan of improvement has been adopted by the Engineer Department and the work commenced, I want to know what reason there is for not appropriating money enough to keep that work continuous until it is completed. Is it not economy to do so?

Would it not be a waste of public money to frame a bill giving a little appropriation for one harbor and a little for another, instead of giving sufficient to keep the works going on continuously until they are completed. There is no sense in acting otherwise, and there is certainly no statesmanship in so doing.

The Government is committed to the completion of this work. There is no complaint that the Government has not money enough to complete it. It is obliged at some time to complete the work, but instead of appropriating money enough to do so in one year or two years, it is proposed to drag it along through a series of four or five or even ten years.

I have a word to say to this side of the House. In 1880 we had a national convention at Chicago, and in the platform adopted at that convention I find among other things that the party committed itself to this:

That we esteem it the duty of Congress to develop and improve our watercourses and our harbors.

And I find in the letter of acceptance of General Garfield the following:

Fortunately for the interests of commerce there is no longer any formidable opposition to appropriations for the improvement of our harbors and great navigable rivers, provided that the expenditures for that purpose are strictly limited to works of national importance.

Now, sir, we are committed to this doctrine of improving our seacoast harbors and all the navigable waters under the jurisdiction of the United States.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. I desire to say very briefly——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will interrupt the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TOWNSEND] by saying that he was in error in recognizing him, as he desires to alternate from side to side of the House, and will now recognize the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. EVINS].

Mr. EVINS. I want to say but a word or two. This is a very serious matter, not only to the people of Charleston, but to all who trade with Charleston. The engineer in charge of the work is now here; a delegation from that city is also here to represent to this Congress the importance of making a more liberal appropriation for the completion of the improvements of that harbor.

The gentleman from Michigan spoke of the large estimate made by the engineers and seemed to question—at least by his manner—whether the estimate should have been made so large.

Mr. HORR. No; the point I made was that it seemed to be larger than the other estimates for works on the coast, and consequently a different rule would apply.

Mr. EVINS. Mr. Chairman, the reason of that is very evident. The character of the work is such that it is absolutely necessary it should be pressed with all vigor to completion.

Mr. HORR. That may be.

Mr. EVINS. The plan of the work there, as members of the committee know, is the jetty system; and in order to make this work effective, in order that it may not obstruct the entrance to the harbor, it must be prosecuted vigorously. It has already changed somewhat the channel entering into that harbor. By the continuance of the work the channel is constantly shifting, and there is great danger that the Government, too, will suffer great loss if the work should not be continued without interruption as the engineers desire.

I regretted very much to hear my friend from Minnesota appeal to the House to stand by the bill as it came from the committee. Why, Mr. Chairman, if that is the way in which bills are to be passed through this House, what is the use of considering them at all? What is the use of taking up the time of members by going into Committee of the Whole and considering bills of this kind, item by item, if the bill as framed is to be accepted by the Committee of the Whole without change?

We may be sure, Mr. Chairman, that the members of the Committee on Commerce, representing different portions of this country, have taken care of their own local interests; but I trust that there are in the House friends enough of justice and fair dealing to adopt this amendment. The appropriation proposed in the bill is entirely inadequate, as must appear when it is examined, especially in connection with appropriations reported for other harbors along the coast. As was stated by my colleague, the appropriation for Galveston Harbor is $200,000; the appropriation proposed for the Tennessee River is $200,000; but here is one of the most important works upon our whole seacoast, a work the importance of which is urged upon us by the chambers of commerce of New York and other commercial cities, which is cut off with the insignificant sum of $100,000. This important work being now in progress and likely to deteriorate greatly, to greatly injure the approaches to the harbor if not prosecuted rapidly to completion, this House should not hesitate about granting the additional appropriation proposed. If we are in earnest about this matter, if this measure is not intended to be a job, if we desire to improve our great rivers and harbors and thereby aid the commerce of the country, I am sure gentlemen can find no better opportunity for a wise appropriation of the people's money than is afforded by this amendment, and I trust it will be adopted.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. RICHARDSON, of South Carolina, there were—ayes 42, noes 55.

Mr. EVINS. I ask for tellers.

Mr. PAGE. I hope not.

Mr. EVINS. This amendment is so just that I hope the Committee of the Whole will not refuse to adopt it.

Mr. PAGE. I will say to the gentleman that if he has any disposition to have this bill considered in the Senate——

Mr. EVINS. I would rather not have the bill considered than that an appropriation so unjust in amount as that proposed in the bill should be made.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from South Carolina demand tellers?

Mr. EVINS. Yes, sir. No quorum voted.

The CHAIRMAN. The point in regard to a quorum was not raised in time.

Tellers were not ordered.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. MACKEY. I move to amend the pending paragraph by striking out "$100,000" and inserting "$200,000."

Mr. PAGE. Make it $150,000.

Mr. MACKEY. No, sir. All we ask is that this committee give to the harbor of Charleston the same amount given to the harbor of Galveston. In point of commercial importance our harbor stands a great deal higher. This is an exceptional case. The stoppage of this work is a serious injury to the harbor. Unless you are willing to give a sufficient amount to carry on this work properly, you might as well strike out the whole appropriation. We either require $200,000 or we require nothing. If we can not get what we are justly entitled to, I for one shall vote against this whole bill.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. MACKEY, there were—ayes 29, noes 53.

Mr. MACKEY. No quorum.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. PAGE and Mr. MACKEY were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 59, noes 81.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. MACKEY. I now move to amend by striking out "$100,000" and inserting "$175,000."

The amendment was not agreed to, there being—ayes 36, noes 47.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving harbor at Pensacola, Florida: Continuing improvement, $25,000.

Mr. PAGE. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CANNON reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 7631) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

TARIFF AND INTERNAL REVENUE.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to announce the appointment of the gentleman from Georgia, Mr. SPEER, to fill the vacancy on the conference committee upon the bill (H. R. 5538) to reduce internal-revenue taxation.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the joint resolution (H. Res. 358) to provide for the publication of the memorial addresses delivered upon the life and character of Hon. John W. Shackelford.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, and requested the concurrence of the House in a bill, (S. 2482) to amend the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879, and for other purposes," approved June 20, 1878.

The message further announced that the Senate had adopted a resolution (in which the concurrence of the House was requested) for printing 10,000 additional copies of the report of the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PAGE. I move that the House again resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of the river and harbor appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole (Mr. CANNON in the chair), and resumed the consideration of the river and harbor appropriation bill.

Mr. DAVIDSON. I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 79 insert the following:

"Improvement of harbor at Appalachicola, Florida: Continuing improvement, $20,000."

Mr. DAVIDSON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say a word in support of the amendment. Appalachicola is a Gulf port situated at the mouth of the Appalachicola River. It is a city of growing importance, largely engaged in the manufacture of lumber. Annually for three or four years past Congress has made an appropriation for the improvement of the channel of the harbor of that city. Now, sir, the last appropriation will soon be exhausted and the work stopped unless appropriation be made for it by this bill.

The engineers report only $45,000 is required to complete the work. My amendment asks but for $20,000 to continue this work. Yesterday afternoon the gentleman from California [Mr. PAGE], the chairman of the Committee on Commerce, when appealing to this House to take up and consider the river and harbor bill, said that millions of money would be lost if that bill was not considered and promptly acted on, that the benefit resulting from appropriations heretofore made would cease. So I can say of the Appalachicola River that the appropriations heretofore made will be lost unless this work is continued. Therefore, sir, not only as a matter of right, but as a matter of economy, I ask that this amendment be adopted. It is not to commence a new work at Appalachicola, but to continue a work which has been in operation for three or four years past.

Mr. PAGE. In response to the gentleman from Florida, Mr. Chairman, I desire simply to say that while I presume all he states is true, and no man on the committee regrets more than I do the inability of that committee or of Congress to give a sufficient amount of money to protect all these works, nevertheless the gentleman will observe we have given for the improvement of the harbor of Pensacola $20,000, or nearly one-half. There are many works which the committee could not provide for; but we have selected the most meritorious, leaving the others to be carried over and provided for in the next Congress.

Mr. DAVIDSON. I would not only be satisfied with 33 per cent., but would be satisfied with 25 per cent. of the amount recommended by the engineers.

Mr. WHITE. I wish to say a word in regard to this harbor at Appalachicola.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. WHITE. I rise to support the amendment of the gentleman from Florida, and will move pro forma to strike out the last word.

Now, in reference to this improvement at Appalachicola Bay, Florida, I read from the report of the engineers:

6. Appalachicola Bay, Florida.—The present project for this improvement was adopted in 1880, the object being to afford a channel of entrance from Appalachicola Bay into Appalachicola River, up to the wharves of the city of Appalachicola, one hundred feet wide and eleven feet deep at mean low water. The channel before the improvement was commenced had a depth of four feet at the shoalest place.

Now, we have appropriated $1,000 to complete the work at Plymouth, where, as stated by the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. BELFORD], at low tide there is no water at all—a mere mud-hole. Here we have at mean low water a channel eleven feet deep. We have spent a good deal of money already. Last year the Committee on Commerce, which sat day and night for months, and not for a few hours, with a small part of the committee present, as it did at this session—that committee, then, at the last session thought this work was of sufficient importance to appropriate $25,000 for the purpose of continuing it. Now, because the President dared to veto that bill, and because the metropolitan press and the railroads of the country had dared to raise a howl against Congress on that account, we propose to put our tails between our legs and run away. If it were an important work last year it is an important work now. If we appropriated $25,000 last year, why not appropriate $25,000 now to continue this work, which by the engineers' report they can profitably expend this year?

The President says now they have more money than they knew how to use, but the Chief of Engineers says that for the next fiscal year they can profitably expend $45,000. Why, then, has not the committee provided for it in this report? Why did they leave it out entirely? Now, when the gentleman from Florida [Mr. DAVIDSON] asks for the small sum of $20,000 to continue a work, is this House ready to say to the country that last year it acted corruptly, that it was wrong in making appropriations aggregating $18,000,000, and therefore they are going to whittle it down to $8,000,000 this year? Will they do any such thing? If we are going to vote to stand by what was done last year, if we are going to take what the engineers estimate instead of the howl of the press, then let us stand by this appropriation moved by the gentleman from Florida. It is for the continuance of a work recommended by the engineers.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the amendment, and I desire to say in a very few words that the committee, in order to keep the bill down to a reasonable amount, allowed only 25 per cent. of the amendment recommended by the Secretary of War. We were compelled to make some reduction in many cases where we would have been glad to appropriate the full amount. Those only were omitted which would receive no injury by waiting for a year longer.

There will be no serious injury or loss by postponing that for a year or two. It is not necessary that it should be appropriated at this time, and I hope the amendment will not prevail.

Mr. WHITE. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. BELFORD. I desire to offer an amendment, to come in at the end of line 75.

The Clerk read as follows:

That $100,000 be appropriated for the construction of reservoirs at points where the Platte and Poudre Rivers emerge from the Rocky Mountains, in the State of Colorado, to the end that the surplus waters of these streams which occur in the spring-time may be utilized in reclaiming the lands belonging to the nation.

Mr. PAGE. If the gentleman from Colorado desires to be heard upon his amendment I will reserve the point of order.

Mr. BELFORD. I beg to say a word on the point of order. This bill, Mr. Chairman, pertains to water, and my amendment proposes that for the reclamation and the redemption and the utilization of the arid plains of this nation the surplus waters of our Western streams shall be preserved. I have stood here and voted for the improvements of the rivers and harbors of the East. There is not a river in my State that is benefited by the appropriations carried in this bill. We have no harbors in the State of Colorado. I have regarded this, however, as a great national question, a question as broad as the confines of the Republic itself. I have voted for river and harbor appropriation bills because in the valley of the Mississippi River there are 30,000,000 of the people of this nation; because it is a river that goes through eighteen States and two of our Territories. I have voted for it because I believed the time had come when the Republican party, with its grand generosity of character, could reach its hand down to the struggling people of the South and lift them out of the destitution and the impoverishment of war. I voted for it because I regarded it as the entering-wedge into the great coming political battle against the monopolists of the nation. Both parties are destitute of issues. The railroad companies of this country have subsidized its press and have attempted to disgrace, discredit, and dishonor the action of this Congress because it desired and dared to promote the national commerce. I propose to vote for this bill now because I believe it will cheapen transportation. Reduce the tonnage tax 1 mill and you save to the people of this country $70,000,000. Add 1 cent to it and you tax them $700,000,000 a year. I regard this bill in the interest of the great body of the toiling, working, laboring people of this nation, and for that purpose and that purpose alone it shall receive my hearty support. [Applause.]

I withdraw the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Florida.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 52, noes 59.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Tampa Bay, Florida: Continuing improvement, $10,000.

Mr. DAVIDSON. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 81 insert:

"Improving the northwest channel of the harbor of Key West, Florida, $25,000."

Mr. DAVIDSON. I am aware, Mr. Chairman, that the prospect is not very cheering to secure the passage of that amendment, but I offer it in the discharge of what I believe to be a duty devolving upon me. The commercial importance of Key West demands that this harbor should be improved. It is the extreme southern city of the Union, containing a population of more than 10,000 souls. It collects annually for the Government between four and five hundred thousand dollars of revenue. The number of vessels that entered and cleared from that port during the year 1881 was more than nine hundred. This amendment asks for an appropriation of $25,000 to improve the northwest channel of that harbor. Should that channel be deepened the distance from Key West to the Gulf ports would be shortened by about one hundred miles, as will be seen by the letter of the collector of the port which appears in the report of the engineers.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this is not only a local matter, in my judgment, but it is one of national importance, for the ports of the Atlantic as well as of the Gulf are concerned in it. Not only citizens of Key West are interested, but all persons concerned in sailing vessels around the Florida capes are interested.

If I may be permitted I will say that the claims of Key West in my judgment have not been recognized by Congress as they should have been. Long since there should have been a public building there for customs, court-house, and post-office; for the buildings—shanties, they may be called—in which these offices are now kept do no credit to our Government and are altogether inadequate for the purpose for which they are used. But I can not hope for the passage of a bill of that kind during this Congress. Still, in view of the importance of that city and the character of the work proposed, and notwithstanding obstacles that have been thrown in the way of any additions to this bill, I hope the committee will adopt the amendment.

Mr. PAGE. Let me call the attention of the gentleman to the fact as shown by Miscellaneous Document No. 15, that the sum of $25,000 already appropriated for this purpose has not been used, nor has any order been given by the Secretary of War to commence the work.

Mr. DAVIDSON. I could have anticipated what the gentleman has said, but as I live in that district I think it only proper to state that by the time the next Congress meets this appropriation will have been exhausted.

Mr. PAGE. But the $25,000 appropriated last year is still on hand, and there is no order to begin the work.

Mr. DAVIDSON. I know that, but probably it will begin very soon, and that sum is not adequate to keep it up until the next Congress meets.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Florida [Mr. DAVIDSON].

Mr. DAVIDSON. I do not desire to delay one moment the progress of this bill, but in justice to my constituency I must demand a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 29, noes 42.

So (there being no further count called for) the amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read lines 92 and 93, as follows:

Improving Sabine Pass, Texas: Continuing improvement, $75,000.

Mr. WHITE. I desire to have some explanation of this item. Why does the bill appropriate $75,000 for Sabine Pass?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. WHITE. I move to strike out lines 92 and 93.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky will be heard on his motion to strike out.

Mr. WHITE. The point, Mr. Chairman, I desire to call attention to is that in this case the appropriation is $75,000, whereas in the engineer's report it is estimated that $500,000 can be profitably expended there. I want to know from the committee why it is they propose to keep that work hanging fire on the pittance of $75,000 when it is reported by the engineer that $500,000 can be profitably expended?

Mr. DUNN. But they can not do it all at once.

Mr. WHITE. I call upon the chairman of the committee to explain this to the satisfaction of the House and the country. I think it is another evidence of what I have twice stated, that this bill is simply an endeavor to appease what our committee believe—and it is hoped the House will indorse that action—was the scare throughout the country that last session we did something that was horribly bad.

Now, sir, I do not believe that. And if there is any reason why that work last year should have had $150,000, and if this year they can profitably expend $500,000, and it is an important work, and in the unanimous opinion of our committee last year it was considered an important work, why should it be crippled in this way by giving it only half what we gave it last year?

Mr. DUNN. Why does the gentleman not move to increase the amount?

Mr. WHITE. I would move to increase it if I were in favor of passing any bill. But I say we should not pass any bill if we believe that the President and the Secretary of War have an abundance of that $18,000,000 on hand. The President, in his veto message, said it was more than he could expend within the year. I therefore would appropriate nothing, but would leave them to expend what they have on hand.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

Improving harbor at Huron, Ohio: Continuing improvement, $4,000.

Mr. ANDERSON. I move to strike out the paragraph just read.

I find this language in the report of the Secretary of War:

IMPROVING HARBOR AT HURON, OHIO.

Continuing improvement..... $2,500

The local engineer reports that he has endeavored to procure statements of the commerce of the port for the past ten years, with the aggregate amount of imports and exports during that time, but it could not be furnished by the collector of customs. The records show that the amount of commerce to be benefited is very small; but the community anticipate some increase on the completion of a railroad which it is proposed to build to that point.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. I simply desire to reply that this is one of the oldest harbors on Lake Erie. It has been a port of entry for forty years. It is in the collection district of Sandusky city and its commerce is reported to that office; and of course it has no very large amount of reports in its own office. It is one of the harbors that some years ago were more important than now. But there has been recently constructed a railroad terminating at that point and there is another in progress of construction which will make it a very important harbor. A large amount of shipping will be there. It is important to improve it; and this is only to keep the harbor in a proper state. It is a proper appropriation.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read lines 106 to 107 as follows:

Improving ice-harbor at the mouth of Muskingum River, Ohio: Continuing improvement, $20,000.

Mr. DAWES. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out "$20,000" and insert "$40,000."

Mr. DAWES. I am perfectly aware of the extreme difficulty of breaking in upon the completed proportions of this bill, but here is a case where as soon as the Engineer Department became aware what the appropriation for the work was they immediately entered their protest.

The Secretary of War last night presented to this House a communication from the engineer in charge of the Ohio River, in which he says:

I notice the new river and harbor bill appropriates only $20,000 for ice-harbor at the mouth of the Muskingum River, Ohio. The necessary amount of work can not be undertaken without an appropriation of at least $40,000, and I therefore urge that this state of affairs shall be made known to the Committees on Commerce of the two Houses.

Now, the point is this: the work is especially hazardous for the reason that the Government is constructing a lock through a dam belonging to the State of Ohio. The portion of the lock above the dam is completed. The dam is to be cut through, and in order to enter upon that breaking through of the dam and the reconstruction of the dam special and extraordinary risks to the Government as well as to the improvement of the river are necessarily encountered. I shall incorporate as a part of my remarks the letter from Major Merrill. It is as follows:

UNITED STATES ENGINEER OFFICE,
Cincinnati, Ohio, February 20, 1883.

GENERAL: I notice that the new river and harbor bill appropriates only $20,000 to the ice-harbor at the mouth of the Muskingum River. The work at this point is specially hazardous, inasmuch as the United States is building a large lock, on a quicksand bottom, through an existing dam belonging to the State, which dam must be kept up and which has a low-water lift of twelve feet. All of the work lying in the pool of the State dam is finished; and the next thing to be done is to cut through this dam, remove the abutment and so much of the dam as comes within the lock, and immediately build up lock walls and new abutment so as to tie the new work to the land. Should a high flood come in the midst of these operations we should run the risk of having the river break through behind the new lock and carry away the large flouring-mill just below, and the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad bridge. But this risk is unavoidable, and if taken during the summer, when the rivers are usually low, it will not be imminent.

The point which I wish to urge is that we must either take this risk or do nothing at all during the coming season. But if we begin work we can not stop until both walls are built through the State dam and a firm connection is made with the bank. To stop short of this would be to invite almost certain destruction during the floods of the following winter.

This amount of work can not be undertaken without an appropriation of at least $40,000, and I therefore urge that this state of affairs should be made known to the Committees on Commerce of the two Houses.

It is specially important that a large appropriation should be made now, because a high stage in the Muskingum, with low water in the Ohio, may entirely demolish that part of the coffer-dam below the line of the State dam. As the old dam had to be cut entirely in two last summer to stop leakage, any serious damage to this part of the coffer-dam is almost sure to start another breach in the State dam, destroying navigation, and bringing serious loss upon the river interests.

We have reached a point where it is almost as dangerous to stand still as it would be to go ahead with insufficient funds.

As the Government has undertaken this work, justice to the people in whose interest it is built, and justice to the engineer, who is responsible for its safe construction, demands that such appropriations as are absolutely essential to the safe progress of the work should not be withheld.

Nothing can be done with an appropriation of but $20,000, and the committee should be so informed.

I inclose herewith a map, which shows the present condition of the work and illustrates my remarks on the necessity for a larger appropriation.

Respectfully, your obedient servant,
WM. E. MERRILL, Major of Engineers.

Brig. Gen. H. G. WRIGHT,
Chief of Engineers, Washington, D. C.

It will be seen that this work is specially important, because of the risk of breaking the dam, and having floods occur such as they have had this season, destroying improvements below the dam, jeopardizing the bridge of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad and putting in peril the property of the Government on which $150,000 have already been expended.

That is the situation. The estimate to entirely complete the work is $66,000. The committee have treated this as they have treated other works. They have given it its proportion of one-third, or $20,000. The committee were not in possession of these representations. They were laid before the House last night by this communication from the Secretary of War.

Now, the point in this case is that the property of the Government at this work is in peril, and the navigation of the river, involved in the preservation of that dam, is also imperiled, and the Government is bound to preserve and maintain that navigation as a condition of the grant by the State of right of way through its dam, which is one essential link in the chain of dams that make the river a line of navigation.

There is a valley here nearly one hundred miles long, with a rich commerce which is dependent upon the preservation of that public work. I am sure I will get the support of my honorable friend from New York, who speaks a great deal against this bill. He is a product of that valley, one of its fairest flowers, that has for many years adorned this Hall; I refer to the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX], who was born on the banks of that river, and if he can not support the bill he will scarcely refuse to help this small amendment for the Muskingum River.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. A single word. I desire to say to the gentleman in charge of this bill that the investigation shows that the work here ought to be put in such condition that the Government shall not sustain actual loss.

Mr. PAGE. We gave more in proportion for this work than for many others.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. If the condition of this work is such that it can not be placed in a condition of safety with the amount you propose to give, and the result of not giving more will be a great loss to the Government, then there will be neither a suggestion of economy nor of propriety in refusing such a sum as will put this work in a proper condition. The letter of the engineer shows that by refusing to give a proper appropriation you will jeopardize all that has been done by the Government, as well as the work belonging to the State.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. I do not think it necessary to say anything about this matter. The facts were presented to the committee, and we considered them all carefully. I am aware that the engineer can do more work with $40,000 than with $20,000; but in justice to other works we propose to give $20,000 to this. I am satisfied that it can go over to the next year with the remainder of the public works, and I am not in favor of increasing the appropriation.

This information, referred to by my colleague [Mr. DAWES] came too late to the Commerce Committee. It is now impossible, in justice to the bill, to accept an amendment, and a liberal appropriation is made for this work in comparison with other works, and we must preserve the harmony of the bill if we expect to have any hope of passing it. I am in favor of this improvement and always have been.

The amendment of Mr. DAWES was not agreed to.

The Clerk read lines 110 and 111, as follows:

Improving harbor at Sandusky city, Ohio: Continuing improvement, $10,000.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. I wish to offer an amendment to the paragraph just read.

Mr. WHITE. Lines 108 and 109 should be read after the amendment which was offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. DAWES] in line 107.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. Those lines have been read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that those lines have been read.

Mr. WHITE. I make the point of order that they have not been read; that lines 108 and 109 have not been read since the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. DAWES] was allowed to move an amendment to line 107. And it is not in order for the Clerk to read lines before amendments have been offered to preceding lines.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the lines indicated.

The Clerk read lines 108 and 109, as follows:

Improving harbor at Port Clinton, Ohio: Continuing improvement, $5,000.

Mr. WHITE. I move to strike out lines 108 and 109. The Secretary of War, in Executive Document No. 1 of this session, page 2, reports to Congress as follows in regard to this item:

The first survey of the harbor under the General Government was made in 1867; but no action was taken upon it. In 1870 a new survey was made, which showed the channel at the entrance to be narrow and intricate, with a depth of only five feet.

Now, I would like to know if that is not a trout stream?

Mr. RYAN. No.

Mr. WHITE. Well, it is a trout harbor. The amount appropriated in the bill of last August for this item was $6,000 in a bill appropriating over $18,000,000. We now propose to give to this trout harbor $5,000 in a bill of less than $8,000,000. You tell me this is a fair bill, is a just bill. I tell you it is a bill without due consideration, patched up to fit a few localities.

Furthermore, if we are going to make appropriations, let us do so on a fair basis, or we will get more condemnation for the bill we are running through now than we did after making a gallant fight with a bold front on the bill of last August.

The Chief of Engineers in his report to the Secretary and to the President, who vetoed the last bill, I believe, says that the amount which can be properly expended for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, for this purpose is $20,000. Now, I have no doubt that if we are going to make a good harbor out of this trout harbor, we can expend $500,000 before they will be done asking for it. This seems to be one of those places where it is convenient for the State of Ohio to spend money. I move to strike it out

The motion to strike out was not agreed to.

The Clerk read lines 110 and 111, as follows:

Improving harbor at Sandusky city, Ohio: Continuing improvement, $10,000.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. I move to add to the clause just read the words "and to deepen the channel to sixteen feet." That was omitted by the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no objection the amendment will be adopted.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will send up his amendment in writing.

Many MEMBERS. Read! Read!

Mr. WHITE. I object to reading, until we know what amendment has been adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the clause these words:
"And to deepen the channel to sixteen feet."

Mr. WHITE. On page 301 of this report I find that the engineer in charge recommends that the depth of the channel of this harbor be increased to sixteen feet. I would like to know whether the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TOWNSEND], because he is a member of the Committee on Commerce, is going to override the recommendation of the Department for this harbor?

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. That is just what the amendment is.

Mr. WHITE. You are not going to do it all this year?

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. I want to say to my good-looking friend from Kentucky [Mr. WHITE] that this is in the line of the recommendation of the Engineer Department; does not increase the appropriation at all. It is proposed to deepen the channel of the harbor to sixteen feet, which is a proper depth for the channel of a harbor on Lake Erie.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. WILSON. The apology is all right, WHITE; sit down. [Laughter.]

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Chairman, the Chief of Engineers in this report says he estimates the cost of gaining this increased depth at $61,000. Now, if I understand the object of the gentleman from Ohio it is to drive a peg upon which to get future appropriations. There can be no other object. But we are now in an era of reform. We have passed the civil-service-reform bill. We have heard from the country on tariff reform at the election of last November. We are now about to have another election on internal-improvement reform. If the President was right in vetoing the last river and harbor bill, then the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio is not only in bad taste, but in direct violation of the spirit of that veto message which seems to have been indorsed in Ohio, though it was not indorsed in Kentucky. I am doing this for the good of the Republican party in Ohio.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving harbor at Michigan City, Indiana: Continuing operations at outer harbor, $50,000.

Mr. ANDERSON. In order to make an inquiry I move to strike out the paragraph last read. The Secretary of War in his report says:

Work on the outside harbor was designed in the interest of the general commerce of the lakes, and has been carried on in pursuance of approved projects. Work on the inner harbor has for its object the enlargement of an unnavigable creek to a capacity sufficient to admit vessels drawing over twelve feet of water, and the docks are built on private property adjoining as rapidly as the improvement is carried forward. Its prime benefit accrues immediately and directly to the owners of this dock property.

There seem to be two points of appropriation here—the outer harbor, which might possibly be brought within the purview of the phrase general commerce, and this creek, the improvement of which is evidently for the benefit of private parties.

I see also that of the last appropriation of $80,000 only $45,000 was drawn. I wish to inquire whether the $50,000 appropriated in this bill, together with the $35,000 undrawn, will be expended on this creek or on the outer harbor?

Mr. PAGE. The objection made by the Secretary of War was to the improvement of the inner harbor; this appropriation is for the outer harbor.

Mr. CALKINS. Mr. Chairman, the misapprehension of the Secretary of War and also of the gentleman from Kansas——

Mr. ANDERSON. I simply quoted his language.

Mr. CALKINS. Is that they did not know that in 1865 the Michigan City Harbor Company was required to pay $100,000 for the benefit of the outside harbor before the Government would make any appropriation at all to again commence the work.

Mr. HORR. The outside harbor is a harbor of refuge.

Mr. CALKINS. The outside harbor is a harbor of refuge. The inner harbor has been improved by the harbor company, and the Government has simply been paying back to that company the money it was required to expend in 1865. But in this bill the committee have been so careful that they have done the injustice of not allowing the Government to pay the balance due to this harbor company.

Mr. WHITE rose.

Mr. ANDERSON. I withdraw my amendment in order that the gentleman from Kentucky may renew it.

Mr. WHITE. I renew the amendment. When we were considering the improvement of Charleston Harbor I stated that the Chief of Engineers has said that the Government could probably expend on that harbor $755,000. But notwithstanding the prayer of the boards of trade of Charleston, of Cincinnati, and of Louisville, the latter two cities looking forward to their railroad communications soon to compete with Charleston, this committee gave to Charleston Harbor less than one-seventh of the estimate of the Engineer Department, notwithstanding the rule of the committee to give one-third. In reference to this harbor at Michigan City, for which the Secretary of War recommended an expenditure of only $200,000, and the improvement of which, as stated by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANDERSON], is to be largely for the benefit of private parties, this committee, though smarting under the lash of the President's veto and the rebuke at the polls in last November, has seen fit to give 25 per cent. of the estimate. In the case of Charleston Harbor, where the recommendation of the engineer is that $755,000 be expended, you give but $100,000, while for Michigan City, where the same engineer recommends $200,000, you give $50,000.

Mr. ANDERSON. I rise to oppose the amendment. I find that appropriations have been made for Michigan City since 1836—not in every year, but nearly every year. The total amount appropriated has been $858,918.

Mr. CALKINS. That does not include the $100,000 that the harbor company paid.

Mr. ANDERSON. Now, here is a case where it appears nearly $1,000,000 have been expended, and yet the improvement of this creek is uncompleted; and for the outer harbor there is to be an appropriation of $50,000 more. I would like to know how much more money it is going to take before this company is repaid and this improvement completed.

Mr. CALKINS. I will answer the gentleman from Kansas in a single sentence. The engineer in charge of this work has estimated that about $100,000 more will complete the harbor of refuge.

Mr. ANDERSON. I would like to ask my friend this question—I have no doubt what the answer will be: whether the engineer if by his daily work he had to earn this sum of $1,000,000 would be quite so liberal in his estimates of expenditure?

Mr. CALKINS. I do not care to go off into the philosophy of labor.

Mr. ANDERSON. There is a little bit of philosophy here. Somebody must furnish this money. We are called upon to vote as to the way of expending this money, and it becomes a question in my mind whether Michigan City has not had pretty nearly enough.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving harbor at Calumet, Illinois: Continuing improvement, $15,000.

Mr. ALDRICH. I move the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In the clause just read strike out "$15,000" and insert the following:
"Fifty thousand dollars, $35,000 of which shall be expended for the improvement of the Calumet River, in accordance with the recommendation of the board of engineers in their report dated October 6, 1882."

Mr. ALDRICH. It happens, Mr. Chairman, that the report made by the engineers has just come in. I expect that there is not a single member of the committee who has seen it, unless it be perhaps the chairman of the committee, to whom I showed it yesterday. That report was made and sent here in accordance with the bill passed at the first session of the Forty-seventh Congress; that is in the river and harbor appropriation bill of last year. It gives all the facts as before, but presents them in a much stronger light.

Now, I apprehend, Mr. Chairman, there is not any improvement in our State, or indeed anywhere in the West that I know of, which is more important than this. The manufacturing industries which have grown up in that particular locality are remarkable. The river for a mile and a half is now being laid out for the purpose of building more factories. And the report of the Chief of Engineers states what is necessary to be done is to straighten the river.

I ask only for a small sum. I do not ask for more, because I wish to get what I do ask for. I do not want to ask for more, for, Mr. Chairman, I am really anxious to have this bill pass. I will, therefore, not take up the time of the committee, but if this committee will do what is right they will accept the amendment for the small appropriation which I have asked. I know, busy as the members of the committee are, and have been, if they only had time to read one-half of the report of the engineers in behalf of this amendment, to say nothing on the subject generally, I am sure they would have put it into their report on this bill. I ask simply the justice to increase the amount because of the building of these factories. They have increased fourfold in two years on this river. The absolute necessity of the improvement of this river is apparent at a glance, and without detaining the committee further I will ask that my amendment be adopted.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 64, noes 41.

So the amendment was adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving harbor at Chicago, Illinois: Continuing improvement, $75,000.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I move to strike out "$75,000" and insert "$125,000;" so it will read:

Improving harbor at Chicago, Illinois: Continuing improvement, $125,000.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment in the interest of economy. We have a small balance left over from the last appropriation of something like $40,000. We require in all to complete this great improvement at Chicago $384,000. That finishes the improvement. The breakwater that is being constructed is right in the line of passage of vessels, and until this is completed it is really of no service.

I wish now to call the attention of the committee to the improvement of this, apart from the fact they have stated they have given close attention and careful scrutiny to provide for the large ports of this country. I notice they have voted an appropriation of $75,000 to improve Sabine Pass. The total tonnage passing over the bar at Sabine Pass is 4,000; while that of Chicago is 8,000,000. Yet you give to Chicago the same amount you do to Sabine Pass.

Further, at Sabine Pass the Government has expended $400,000 in experiments, and they are now beginning a new project, the completion of which will require the payments of $2,800,000. Aransas Pass is another where $175,000 is appropriated. The tonnage of that place is 15,000. Galveston is given $200,000. The tonnage amounts to 200,000. So with many others.

The improvement of Chicago Harbor ought to be completed in the interest of the commerce of the entire West.

A MEMBER. What is the tonnage?

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Eight millions of tons. There is arriving and departing every twenty-four hours during the entire navigable season, from the 1st of April to the 1st of December, one hundred vessels.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. RICHARDSON], in his speech last night, referred to the amount of grain shipped to Chicago by rail—something like 150,000,000 of bushels. He stated 96 per cent. came by railroad. He did not add over 81 per cent. was shipped by steamer or barge. This is one of the first ports in the country. But little more is required to improve it. In the interest of economy it should be improved at once.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. PAGE. I hope this amendment will not pass.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 51, noes 50.

Mr. PAGE demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. PAGE and Mr. DAVIS of Illinois were appointed.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 47, noes 66.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. No quorum has voted.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 61, noes 90.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving harbor at Black Lake, Michigan: Continuing improvement, $6,000.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move to strike out those lines. The Chief of Engineers' report of last year, page 2313, states that the commerce of this port is local and extremely light. A statement of that commerce is given in a table, which shows that instead of an increase of commerce by reason of the improvement it has vastly decreased.

The number of vessels entering that port for the year ending June 30, 1870, was 1726. The number for the year ending June 30, 1881, was only 165. The fact of the matter is, Mr. Chairman, that that port has degenerated and is of no utility. In a national point of view, it is of no utility whatever, as the report shows. Certainly not in the line of the general commerce of this country, and therefore I think this should be stricken out.

It appears that there has been already expended at that port $229,478, and that there was an available balance on hand for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, of $10,000. It is proposed now by this bill to add $6,000 more to it, to be thrown away. I hope gentlemen will not insist upon wasting and squandering the people's money upon such trifling and insignificant harbors as this. Therefore I move to strike out the clause.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Chairman, before the vote is put I would like to be heard in addition to what the gentleman from Illinois has just said. I wish to state that the number of vessels entering that port in 1869 was 1,865; in 1870 that number had decreased to 1,726; but last year, 1882, there was only 192.

The object of establishing that port was in the first instance to get the timber away. That object having been accomplished, having removed the timber, there is no longer any necessity for the port. It is only one of those dry harbors in Michigan which are very convenient to spend $6,000 upon. Unquestionably it has no place in this bill, if there is to be any reform on the subject of internal improvement appropriations. We can not appropriate for such important works as the improvement of the Charleston Harbor more than a mere pittance, but for these little trout harbors of Michigan, tad-pole harbors along the shores of Michigan, we can appropriate a few thousand dollars without any objection on the part of anybody.

Now we appropriate more here in this bill than they spent in 1882. More money than was spent in that year is appropriated here, and at a place where the work is not needed at all; where the commerce has dwindled from year to year until it amounts to nothing. I repeat, it is unquestionably a matter which should not be in this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Illinois to strike out.

The committee divided, and there were—ayes 10, noes 38.

So (no further count being demanded) the motion to strike out was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving harbor at Marquette, Michigan: Continuing improvement, $3,000.

Mr. WHITE. I move to strike out lines 143 and 144.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I move to amend that motion by inserting in place of those lines the following——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Kentucky desire to be heard?

Mr. WHITE. I would like to be heard for a moment.

In Executive Document No. 1, part 3, page 2115, I find that the original estimate for this harbor was $325,000. The amount appropriated up to this day is $314,000. Now, the Secretary of War, in volume 1, page 267, of these documents, recommends an appropriation of $10,000 for this year. The committee has seen fit to reduce it down to $3,000. I must confess, Mr. Chairman, that I believe in interior improvements as much as any member on this floor; but, sir, I do not believe in making up appropriation bills so as to catch votes. I do not believe in making an appropriation this year of $3,000 to a work which it will only take $15,000 to finish altogether; and when we are told by the War Department that they can properly expend $10,000, for us to exercise this right simply because we are on the committee, and for the House, because the committee agreed to it, to swallow the dose whole, strikes me will appear to many people that we are simply leaving over $7,000 to be put on the river and harbor appropriation bill of next year. Then Michigan will vote again on this question. If it takes $10,000 to complete it, let us appropriate that amount; and let us if we are going to complete the work do it in a proper way or else strike out this item altogether.

The question was taken on Mr. WHITE'S amendment; and it was not agreed to.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I now call up the amendment which I sent to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert after line 144:
"Provided, That all unexpended moneys appropriated by former river and harbor bills, not needed to fulfill existing contracts, shall be covered into the Treasury."

Mr. PAGE. I make the point of order upon that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman on the point of order.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I would like to know what the point of order is.

Mr. PAGE. It is not germane to that part of the bill, and it changes existing law.

Mr. ANDERSON. And reduces expenditures.

Mr. BAYNE. It impairs the obligation of contracts.

Mr. PAGE. I submit to the Chair to decide the question.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I would like to be heard on the point of order.

Mr. PAGE. I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. Then I desire to be heard on the amendment.

The Secretary of War has sent to the Committee on Commerce of this House a letter, which has been printed. That letter was sent upon invitation of this House suggested by the chairman of the Committee on Commerce, and in it he states there are ninety-one of these useless and worthless improvements for which the money in the former bill has not been used. There is somewhere about $4,000,000 of funds appropriated for utterly worthless things. That money ought to go back into the Treasury. Now, that does not affect those valuable improvements which are entitled to have appropriations made for them. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. Chairman, I am very much obliged to my colleague [Mr. CAMP], who has not been here for three months, for now calling "vote."

Mr. CAMP. The gentleman is mistaken. I did not call vote on him.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. Then some loafer did. As I said before, for a meritorious work such as the engineers can perform—[cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]—I wait for order.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order.

Mr. GUENTHER. I will state to the gentleman that it is not members of the Committee on Commerce who are crying "vote."

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. Then the cry proceeds from the friends of the Commerce Committee, from the "heelers" of that committee in this House. The cry comes from the men who have got something in this bill as a consideration for their votes for it. They are the men who howl down anybody who tries to talk.

I could not get an opportunity to be heard in the general debate. Some four hours were allotted to general debate, and you, Mr. Chairman, gave almost every minute of that time to the friends of the bill, giving only five minutes to my colleague from New York [Mr. COX], who made the only speech against it on the floor of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to say he is not aware he is subject to the rebuke of the gentleman from New York. The Chair divided the time under the rules of the House.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. That explanation is unnecesary. Let us have a vote.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Let the amendment be again reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of line 144 insert:

"Provided, That all unexpended moneys appropriated by former river and harbor bills, and not needed to fulfill existing contracts, shall be covered into the Treasury."

Mr. FLOWER rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from New York rise?

Mr. FLOWER. I wish to inquire does this cover into the Treasury the appropriation of $400,000 made for the Harlem River improvement in 1879, under which the State of New York was obliged to secure the right of way for the Harlem River improvement and under which she has expended $50,000? Does that amendment take it back into the Treasury?

The CHAIRMAN. That is hardly a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. PAGE. The amendment covers everything.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 15, noes 69.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will appoint as tellers the gentleman from New York, Mr. VAN VOORHIS, and the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. TOWNSEND.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the point as to a quorum will be withdrawn.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I understand this provision is already in the bill.

Mr. PAGE. No, sir; the amendment covers into the Treasury every dollar even for works under contract.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 26, noes 123.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read lines 149 and 150, as follows:

Improving harbor at South Haven, Michigan: Continuing improvement, $8,000.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I offer as an amendment, to be inserted after line 150, what I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 150 insert:

"Improving Harbor, at Saint Joseph, Michigan, and water channel leading up to Benton Harbor, Michigan, $15,000."

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I will not weary the committee if they will give me their attention for a moment. There are four harbors in my district. The committee have left out three and appropriated for one. The one appropriated for is not the most important. The most important are the harbor of Saint Joseph and Benton Harbor. They are the chief harbors in my district. I presume it is an oversight on the part of the committee; having so much work to do, it it is very natural they should omit something. The Saint Joseph Harbor lies on the lake, and the Benton Harbor on Saint Joseph River, a mile up the river. These two places were appropriated for last year, and for several years. I read from the report in regard to Saint Joseph Harbor:

The entire north revetment and pile pier is in a tumble-town condition, and nothing short of absolute replacing of the whole structure will be worth undertaking. To repair this work would be simply to throw away money.

The work will probably stand one more season, but hardly longer.

It is recommended that this work be replaced and that upon a line drawn from the angle formed by the cribs and pile pier, beyond the shore line to a point 1,100 feet east, which is 300 feet from the south pier opposite.

The cost of the above work is estimated, dredging included, at $37,650, and is recommended in place of pier extension, for the reason that it is thought that by converging the piers a little toward the present opening, instead of allowing them to diverge, the action of the current would be more positive upon the sands outside and that the result would be nearly if not quite as beneficial as a 200-foot extension of the pier outside, also because pier extension hardly seems advisable while the railroad bridge remains as it now is.

The crib at the end of the north pier, placed under contract with Dewar and Corlett in 1879, has settled at the outer end to about three feet below water, and remains unsuperstructured. This should be built up, and will be, should the amount appropriated in the pending bill be sufficient.

Repairs are needed upon the south pier, and catch-sand fences should be built to prevent the encroachment of sand from the beach. These also will be completed if the amount appropriated in the pending bill is sufficient.

The commerce of this harbor, in connection with that of Benton Harbor, will increase very rapidly under the impetus given by two new railroads which are now in process of construction with their respective termini at these ports.

It is estimated that $50,000 can be used to advantage during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884.

The water channel or canal leading from Saint Joseph's River to Benton Harbor was constructed by the people of Benton Harbor at their own expense at the cost of $100,000. For two years the Government of the United States has taken the work in charge and appropriated expressly for it. The railroad is already completed to Benton Harbor.

In regard to Benton Harbor, I read from the report as follows:

At this junction—

Speaking of the improvement—

a proposition was made by the president of the Cincinnati, Wabash and Michigan Railway Company to Major Harwood in effect as follows, namely: That if the Government would dredge the canal to a width of ninety feet (instead of eighty feet as under approved project) the railroad company would build the entire revetment on the north side of the canal, agreeing to push the work as fast as the dredging would allow.

This proposition was submitted to the Chief of Engineers by Major Harwood with the recommendation that the canal be made one hundred feet wide, as the expense of dredging would not exceed the cost of the entire work as originally proposed, and being approved the dredge was put at work casting over, removing between September 1, 1881, and April 15, 1882, 88,060 cubic yards of sand and muck, and leaving a wide cut in the axial line of the canal twelve feet deep.

The south bank of the canal is revetted with sheath piling nearly four-fifths of its length. This was done by local parties and will probably be completed by the end of another season.

The north bank will be and is now being prepared by the railway company as the site of an extensive lumber and grain dock, and it is more than likely that a greater depth of water will be required in the canal than the present project calls for (namely, twelve feet).

A line of propellers plies between this port and Chicago daily, and the local fruit trade, augmented as it is about to be by the railroad shipments from a large area of Southern Michigan and lumber receipts from the North, gives the port, in connection with Saint Joseph, an importance which will demand ample harbor facilities in the near future.

The report further states that the amount that can be profitably expended in the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, is $50,000.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I would like to have a minute or two more.

Mr. ANDERSON. I rise to oppose the amendment, and will yield my time to the gentleman.

Mr. PAGE. I hope the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] will see the propriety of not taking up more time.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I have not trespassed on the attention of this committee, and I desire to say one word more.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HORR.]

Mr. HORR. I will yield two or three minutes of my time to my colleague.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I do not think that both of these harbors should be abandoned and one which is unimportant compared with these appropriated for in this bill. Let me say in connection with these harbors that last year there were eight hundred and seventy-five entries and clearances of vessels into and from these harbors. The commerce is large, the cities are growing, and I certainly think it was an oversight on the part of the committee to leave out this appropriation. Take the harbor of South Haven, for instance: the engineers recommend an appropriation of $30,000, though it is not so important a harbor as these, and the committee appropriate $8,000 for it; while in this case the engineers recommend an appropriation of $25,000 and the Committee on Commerce have given it nothing.

Mr. HORR. I desire to say to my colleague [Mr. BURROWS] that his statements are substantially correct; and the only reason that the committee omitted the appropriation for this harbor was on account of the fact that it was like entering upon a new work or a new plan, and we were drafting a bill leaving everything of that kind out.

Every statement my colleague has made is borne out by the report, and if we were preparing a bill containing the ordinary appropriations for these purposes which we make every year and from year to year we should have included an appropriation for this harbor as a just appropriation. It was left out of this bill simply because it was in the nature of new improvement, and for no other reason.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. Allow me to say that the harbor of Saint Joseph, which lies a mile from Benton Harbor, is certainly not a new improvement; that has been appropriated for for twenty-five years. And the harbor of Benton has been appropriated for for the last two, nay three, years by Congress, and it is as important a harbor as Saint Joseph and is rapidly growing. The new railroad goes there, and the Government has undertaken this work. It is not a new work, but a continuation of a work already begun.

I think in fairness and justice this work ought not to be abandoned. These two are the chief harbors in my district, and I trust the committee will do justice to them and put in this appropriation.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I move to strike out the last word. One of the grounds upon which a river and harbor appropriation bill has grown unpopular in this country is because of the unfair distribution of the funds sought to be appropriated.

I have made a computation of the amounts appropriated by this bill for the State of Illinois. I find that only $175,000 is appropriated by this bill for the improvement of the harbors and rivers and streams of Illinois, whereas I discover that there is appropriated for the State of Michigan by this bill $398,000—a State that is far less in territory and extent, far less in population, far less in commerce, and far less important in every particular than the State of Illinois.

Mr. KENNA. But infinitely greater in its navigable waters.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Infinitely greater in having more influence upon the Committee on Commerce than the State of Illinois.

Mr. DUNN. Does the gentleman think this is a division of money among the States?

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I hope the gentleman will not interrupt me. A few moments ago a Representative from one of the Chicago districts asked for an increase of the appropriation for Chicago from $75,000 to $125,000, an increase of only $50,000 for that great harbor in which there is perhaps more commerce than in any harbor off the Atlantic coast.

The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] now comes here and asks us to make an appropriation for a little harbor up in Michigan which it would seem has just been discovered; for I thought the Committee on Commerce had discovered every little rivulet, inlet, and harbor there was in the State of Michigan. He comes here and asks us to make an appropriation for that little harbor, in face of the fact that the Committee on Commerce refused to make a dollar of appropriation for it, and also in face of the fact that the very able and vigilant friend from that State, one of her Representatives on that committee, did not deem it of sufficient consequence to make an appropriation for it.

And the same gentleman who asks us now to create a new object for appropriation himself voted to strike down the amendment offered by my friend from Chicago for an increase of the appropriation for the improvement of the harbor of Chicago. I certainly do not see how this committee can consistently vote in favor of the appropriation asked for by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] right upon the heel of this vote just recorded against an increase of the appropriation for the harbor of Chicago.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. If I thought the speech of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] would have any effect on the committee, I would like to reply to it; but I do not think it will.

The question was taken upon the amendment offered by Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan; and upon a division there were—ayes 19, noes 73.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. No quorum has voted.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I do not make that point.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I make it on my own responsibility.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I trust my friend will not make that point.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. Very well; I will withdraw it.

So (there being no further count called for) the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I move another amendment, making the amount $10,000 instead of $15,000. I hope the committee will adopt that amendment and not leave this harbor without any appropriation at all.

And I desire to say, in reply to what the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] has said about this being a harbor recently discovered, that is wholly untrue, and the gentleman must himself know that the statement is not correct.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Why did not the Committee on Commerce discover it?

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I can not tell you why. I simply say it is an important harbor and one that should be appropriated for, and there is no reason why it should be left out of this bill.

It is hardly fair and honorable in the gentleman, simply because Chicago, in his own State, did not get all she wants, to attempt to inflame the members of this committee to strike down a harbor that does not get anything in this bill. That is hardly fair and hardly honorable. There is no reason why because he could not get all that he wanted for Chicago, in his State, therefore he should refuse to give anything for this harbor. There is nothing fair and honorable in an argument of that kind.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. If I desired to obtain lessons in what is honorable or fair, the gentleman from Michigan is about the last member on this floor from whom I would seek them. I do not consider that it is fair and honorable that the gentleman should vote here steadily against these appropriations in favor of Illinois and then have the inconsistency to ask this committee to make an appropriation of $15,000 for an insignificant harbor in Michigan, which the Committee on Commerce was unable to discover.

It does strike me, if there is anything unfair or not honorable, it is in the conduct of the gentleman from Michigan, who has antagonized this bill for the reason, I apprehend, that he did not get a large enough portion of the "pork."

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. The gentleman is in error in the supposition that I voted against the Chicago appropriation; I voted for it. He is in error also in saying that I am antagonizing this bill. I am not; I am for it.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Then, Mr. Chairman, I want to say that when the gentleman took the floor during the time allowed for general debate and consumed one hour under the pretext that he was an opponent of this bill, his conduct certainly was worthy of some criticism.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I did not do that.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Other gentlemen were denied the privilege of opposing the bill in the general debate, because, as was stated by members of the Committee on Commerce, the gentleman from Michigan was occupying one hour of the time allotted to the opponents of the bill.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. The "gentleman from Michigan" occupied just fifteen minutes and five minutes yielded to him by the gentleman from California [Mr. PAGE], not in opposition to the bill, but simply in a discussion of the plan of improving the Mississippi River.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I reassert that when I asked in regard to the time to be allotted to the opponents of the bill in the general debate, I was told by some members of the Committee on Commerce that the gentleman from Michigan took the floor to oppose the bill.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. You were simply misinformed.

Mr. KENNA. As the gentleman from Illinois has just said to me that I was the person who made the statement, I wish to say that he misunderstood me if he understood me to make any such statement.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. The gentleman did not correctly understand what I said. It was my friend from Maryland [Mr. MCLANE] who gave me the information.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SPRINGER. I move to amend by striking out the last word.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I ask my colleague in fairness to yield a moment that the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. MCLANE] may state he was the authority for my assertion that the gentleman from Michigan had occupied one hour of the time in opposition to the bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. There is no doubt, I presume, that the gentleman was so informed.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I merely wanted to vindicate the correctness of what I had said.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Michigan is right in saying that this is not a new work. It is an old frequenter of these Halls. As the report of the engineers shows, we have already expended $297,000 in improving this harbor. The Committee on Commerce, it seems, thought we had expended about enough upon this work, and concluded it was time to call a halt. I commend the committee for discovering, in one case at least, that the Government had expended quite as much as was justifiable.

The further fact appears, according to the report of the engineers, that there is for the year ending June 30, 1883, an available balance of $12,407 for this improvement. No more money, therefore, is needed. I am glad to be able to compliment the Committee on Commerce for stopping this work.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. Will the gentleman please read from the report of the engineers the further statement that $50,000 can be expended upon this work for the next fiscal year?

Mr. SPRINGER. Oh, I have not the slightest doubt that you can expend a million there. I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. WHITE. I renew it. We here have evidence of the statement I made early in this debate, that this bill is by no means perfect. We have in the consideration of the bill passed over many small appropriations and some quite as large as the present, without debate, without amendment, or if any amendment was offered it has been voted down simply because the committee had reported a certain appropriation.

Now, sir, here is a case where last year we thought it advisable to appropriate $12,407. The Secretary of War advised this Congress that $50,000 can be profitably expended there this year. Yet, sir, the committee has left that entirely out of the bill.

If we are going to have a bill that will secure the confidence of the people, that will have the approval of this House, then this bill ought to go back to the committee with instructions to report it back, a measure which in the opinion of the committee would be perfect in its provisions, without taking into account either the veto of the President or the denunciation of the metropolitan press of the country. In my judgment they have been attempting to please too many people instead of carrying out our instructions under the Constitution to make appropriations for the improvement of our rivers and harbors in behalf of the commerce of the country.

If I had the time, Mr. Chairman, I would put in every one of these harbors which the Committee on Commerce has left out from fear that the President might veto the bill again or the metropolitan press, owned by the railroads in New York, might condemn us. I say, sir, we ought to make a perfect bill, while this is an imperfect bill. It is unjust and unfair; the result of cowards, who are afraid of the public lash wielded by the railroads who own the metropolitan press. [Applause.]

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I move to strike out the last word. My friend from Illinois expressed great surprise at the fact that $12,000 was unexpended. Here, in the case of Chicago, $241,000 remain unexpended, and yet you appropriate $75,000 in this bill. I make no complaint of that, but merely call attention to the fact.

Mr. SPRINGER. What year?

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. Unexpended on the 30th of June in this year $241,000.

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman is correct. But Chicago Harbor is not to be compared with that of Saint Joseph, Michigan.

By unanimous consent the pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The amendment of Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan, was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving harbor at Oconto, Wisconsin: Continuing improvement, $12,500.

Mr. SPRINGER. Then I move to strike out that paragraph.

The Chief of Engineers' report states that the estimated cost of this improvement is $125,000. The natural entrance, we are told, to the Oconto River has less than two feet of water in its channel. In the engineer's report, on page 2128, it appears there are two available plans for the improvement of that harbor.

Mr. POUND. Will the gentleman now permit me to make a suggestion?

Mr. SPRINGER. Certainly.

Mr. POUND. The gentleman is reading from an old report, which proposed to improve the river of Oconto, while this appropriation is for the improvement of the harbor of Oconto.

Mr. SPRINGER. I am reading from page 2128 of the last report of the Chief of Engineers. "Improvement of Oconto Harbor, Wisconsin; estimated cost of the present plan $125,000; appropriated $25,000."

Mr. POUND. What has the depth of water in the river to do with the harbor?

Mr. SPRINGER. This is to improve the harbor.

Mr. POUND. But the gentleman read from the report in regard to the river being only two feet deep.

Mr. SPRINGER. That is at the mouth of the river, where the harbor is. Now let me read from the report:

IMPROVEMENT OF OCONTO HARBOR, WISCONSIN.

Estimated cost of the present plan	$125,000
Appropriated	25,000

The first appropriation for this harbor having been made on an insufficient citizens' estimate, was withheld from expenditure until further action by Congress, as fully set forth in the last annual report (1881, pages 2062, 2063). Another appropriation having been made, it is proposed to begin the work this season, so that during the fiscal year 1882-'83 about 3,000 linear feet of slab pier will be constructed, and a new dredge built for work at this and other harbors in the vicinity. During the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, it is proposed to continue pier extension and to begin the work of dredging.

MONEY STATEMENT.

July 1, 1881, amount available	$10,000 00
July 1, 1882, amount available	10,000 00
Amount appropriated by act passed August 2, 1882	15,000 00
Amount available for fiscal year ending June 30, 1883	25,000 00
Amount (estimated) required for completion of existing project	100,000 00
Amount that can be profitably expended in fiscal year ending June 30, 1884	50,000 00

There is now unexpended for this purpose $25,000, and yet we propose to increase that by $12,500. It does not appear from the reports here there is any considerable business done at this place, and as there are only two feet of water in the mouth of the river where the harbor is to be, and it seems we are to make an artificial mouth and an artificial channel and harbor, I believe it ought to be stricken out. [Cries of "Vote."]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving harbor at Port Washington, Wisconsin: Continuing improvement at outer harbor, $6,000.

Mr. ANDERSON. I move to strike out these lines. I do it because in the report made by the Secretary of War I find the following language:

The local engineer reports that Port Washington has as small an amount of commerce as Two Rivers. The benefits to be derived from expenditures at that place would have a local bearing only.

The amount appropriated under the act of August 2, 1882, was $17,000, from which there has been drawn on requisition until December 1, 1882, $10,000, leaving a balance of $7,000 on hand at this time unexpended. This bill proposes to expend in addition to that sum $6,000 more.

Mr. GUENTHER. This is for the deepening of the harbor.

Mr. ANDERSON. That may be all very true, but the facts are as I state them, that this is for local benefit only; and reference is made to the harbor at Two Rivers, Wisconsin. In that connection I desire also to quote the language of the Secretary of War transmitted in the report made accompanying this bill. He says:

The local engineer reports that Two Rivers Harbor is of no importance to the commerce of the lakes, its value being entirely local. The commercial statistics show a great falling off in the tonnage entering this harbor. Since 1879 steamers have not run to or called at this place.

Now, as I have shown, the local engineer reports that Port Washington has as small an amount of commerce as Two Rivers, and that is the report of the Secretary of War to this House, one of the constituted officers of the Government, one who has every facility that the Government can afford for obtaining information, one who has caused a special examination to be made of this particular case and who reports to this House that this can not come under the purview or within the jurisdiction of the proper doctrine of general commerce. He says that this is simply a matter of local commerce, and the facts, as I have stated, from his report show that there were $7,000 unexpended last year, with $6,000 to be appropriated by this bill. It seems to me that that authority ought to be good enough for this House to take into consideration the propriety of making this appropriation. I have no doubt that it is good, and this is another of the cases where I feel authorized to draw the line.

There is another reason also. The President, I think, in a previous message vetoed an appropriation bill of this kind for these places. I am not prepared to take the position that the President of the United States in that message did not express the popular opinion of this country and the sentiment of those who furnish this money, and to whom it belongs, with respect to this class of items named in this river and harbor appropriation bill.

I believe that he did express that sentiment. I believe furthermore that his expression of that sentiment and the response it met in the hearts of the people had very much to do with the last election; and I as a Republican do not want to repeat that mistake.

Mr. GUENTHER. In response to the remarks of the gentleman from Kansas, I will say that this subject has been fully examined by the Committee on Commerce and thoroughly considered. The present State Legislature of Wisconsin sent a memorial to Congress showing conclusively that the discontinuance of the work at this point would seriously imperil navigation. After careful examination the committee became convinced that this statement was correct.

This appropriation of $6,000 is for the superstructure of the piers in the outer harbor. The number of vessels that arrived at that port, as shown by the statistics, in 1882 was three hundred and ninety-eight steam and sailing vessels, with a tonnage of 60,000 and 4,300 crew. The exports and imports are large and of a character showing general and not only local commerce. So that no excuse can be offered for the statement of the Secretary of War that this is not for the benefit of the general commerce of the country. Besides that, it is a harbor of refuge and should be preserved on that account for the safety of vessels navigating on Lake Michigan. I call for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Kansas to strike out.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 4, noes 47.

Mr. ANDERSON. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will appoint tellers.

Mr. ANDERSON and Mr. KENNA were appointed tellers.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 18, noes 122.

So (no further count being demanded) the amendment of Mr. ANDERSON was not agreed to.

Mr. PAGE. I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. KENNA. Before that, I desire to ask the gentleman from California whether he proposes to take a final vote on this bill to-night.

Mr. PAGE. I do. I expect when we meet at half past 7 to-night to go on with the bill and continue its consideration until it is passed.

Mr. KENNA and others. That is good.

Mr. WHITE. Then I shall move that the House adjourn.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from California, that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CANNON reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the river and harbor appropriation bill, had come to no conclusion thereon.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WHITE. I move that this House do now adjourn.

Mr. BINGHAM. I hope the gentleman will withhold the motion until I can make a report from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Mr. McMILLIN. And I desire to make a report on a Senate bill.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

Mr. TALBOTT, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found duly enrolled a joint resolution of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

Joint resolution (H. Res. 358) to provide for the publication of memorial addresses delivered upon the life and character of Hon. John W. Shackelford, of North Carolina.

SALARIES OF POSTMASTERS.

Mr. BINGHAM, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. 7611) to adjust the salaries of postmasters; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PHŒBE C. DOXSIE.

Mr. McMILLIN, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (S. 43) granting a pension to Phœbe C. Doxsie; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

FREEDMAN'S SAVINGS AND TRUST COMPANY.

Mr. LYNCH, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Education and Labor, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 6204) to reimburse the depositors of the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company for losses incurred by failure of said company; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

STATUE OF JOSEPH HENRY.

The SPEAKER. In accordance with the provisions of the joint resolution of the House (H. Res. 356) accepting the invitation of the Smithsonian Institution to attend the inauguration of the statue of Joseph Henry, approved February 24, 1883, the Chair announces the appointment of the following-named members to be present and represent the Congress of the United States on the part of the House of Representatives, as provided in said joint resolution, namely: Mr. WAIT of Connecticut, Mr. ALDRICH of Illinois, Mr. BROWNE of Indiana, Mr. KASSON of Iowa, Mr. ROBESON of New Jersey, Mr. CANDLER of Massachusetts, Mr. WALKER of Pennsylvania, Mr. PETTIBONE of Tennessee, Mr. McCLURE of Ohio, Mr. COX of New York, Mr. ROSECRANS of California, Mr. KNOTT of Kentucky, Mr. TUCKER of Virginia, Mr. CURTIN of Pennsylvania, and Mr. GIBSON of Louisiana.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. MOORE, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD remarks upon the pending House bill (No. 6158) relating to education. [See Appendix.]

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. WARD, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to withdraw from the files of the House all the papers relating to House bill No. 4446, entitled "A bill to require the testing of chains and anchors and for the better security of life and property on ship board," there being no adverse report thereon.

REPORT ON FISH AND FISHERIES.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House a concurrent resolution of the Senate, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, February 28, 1883.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That 10,000 additional copies of the Report of the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries for the year 1882 be printed, of which 2,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 6,000 copies for the use of the House, 1,500 copies for the use of the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries, and 500 copies for sale by the Public Printer, at a price equal to the actual cost of publication and 10 per cent. thereon added.

The resolution was referred to the Committee on Printing.

JOHN CONNOLLY.

Mr. GARRISON, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 3409) for the relief of John Connolly; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

PATRICK COOK.

Mr. GARRISON also, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported a bill (H. R. 7680) for the relief of Patrick Cook; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

RECESS.

The SPEAKER. The hour of half past 5 having arrived, the Chair, in pursuance of the order of the House, declares the House in recess until half past 7 o'clock this evening.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House reassembled at half past 7 o'clock p. m.

MORRIS C. MENGIS.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported back with an adverse recommendation the bill (H. R. 6883) granting the right of way through grounds belonging to the United States at Sandy Hook, New Jersey, to Morris C. Mengis, his associates, successors, or assigns, for the construction of a railroad; which was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

FIRE-PROOF BUILDING FOR ARMY MUSEUM.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER also, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported a bill (H. R. 7681) authorizing the erection of a fire-proof building in the city of Washington, to contain the records, library, and museum of the Army Medical Department; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

DANIEL W. PERKINS.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Claims, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 777) for the relief of Daniel W. Perkins; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

MARY A. LEE.

Mr. LACEY. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 3335) for the relief of Mary A. Lee, and that the same be brought before the House for present consideration.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, subject to objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Mary A. Lee, mother and only heir at law of Walter J. Lee, late a second lieutenant in the Twenty-eighth Regiment Michigan Infantry Volunteers, the amount of pay and allowances of a second lieutenant of infantry from September 22, 1864 to the 10th of April, 1865, and the pay and allowances of a first lieutenant of infantry from April 10, 1865, to August 10, 1865; such payment to be made out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and deducting therefrom the amount of any pay, if any, made him for such service.

Mr. HOLMAN. Reserving the right to object I desire to hear the report read.

Mr. LACEY. The report accompanies the bill and it is very short.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Indiana desire to have the report read or to hear an explanation?

Mr. LACEY. I can explain it to the gentleman from Indiana if he so desires.

Mr. HOLMAN. I should prefer hearing the report.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3335) for the relief of Mary A. Lee, submit the following report:

It appears that Mrs. Mary A. Lee is the widowed mother and sole heir at law of Walter J. Lee, deceased, late a second lieutenant in the Twenty-eighth Regiment of Michigan Volunteers; that Lieutenant Lee was promoted from the ranks to be a second lieutenant in this regiment, was duly commissioned, and entered upon duty as such on the 22d day of September, 1864, and so continued till the 2d day of March, 1865, when he was placed in arrest for alleged disobedience of orders; that he was tried by court-martial on the 3d day of April, 1865, found guilty, and sentenced to be cashiered and to forfeit all pay and allowances due and to become due him; that said sentence was approved in a general order from headquarters Department of North Carolina, bearing date July 14, 1865; that Lieutenant Lee was commissioned a first lieutenant in the said regiment to date from April 10, 1865, but was not mustered; that he was released from arrest May 18, 1865, and performed duty as first lieutenant in said regiment until the said 10th day of August; that on the said 10th day of August the general commanding the department issued a general order remitting so much of his sentence as forfeited his pay and allowances, but it being held that the sentence had been executed by virtue of the order of July 14, the order of August 10 was inoperative. As Lieutenant Lee actually performed service up to the 10th day of August, and as it is to be presumed the commanding general had good reason for remitting this part of the sentence, it is the opinion of your committee that his pay and allowances to that date were at least equitably due him, and that they should now be paid to his mother and heir at law, and the passage of the bill is therefore recommended.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HOLMAN. While there was a prospect of the Senate passing the general bill covering such cases which passed the House I was inclined to object to bills of this kind. But under the circumstances I will not object.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. LACEY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. RICE, of Missouri, addressed the Chair.

Mr. PAGE. I call for the regular order.

Mr. SPRINGER. Do not call for it yet.

Mr. PAGE. Very well.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT JEFFERSON CITY, MISSOURI.

Mr. RICE, of Missouri. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table for consideration at this time the bill of the Senate, No. 889, to provide for the erection of a public building in Jefferson City, in the State of Missouri.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the bill.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. It is to be read subject to objection?

The SPEAKER. Certainly.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to purchase a site for, and cause to be erected thereon, a suitable building, with fire-proof vaults extending to each story, in Jefferson City, in the State of Missouri, for the use and accommodation of the United States circuit and district courts, post-office, and other Government offices held and located in said city, which site shall leave the building unexposed to danger from fire in adjacent buildings by an open space of at least fifty feet, including streets and alleys; the site, and the building thereon, when completed according to plans and specifications to be previously made and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, not to exceed the cost of $100,000; and said sum of $100,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purchase of said site and the completion of said building: Provided, That no part of said sum shall be expended until a valid title to said site shall be vested in the United States, and the State of Missouri shall cede to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same, during the time the United States shall be or remain the owner thereof, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of said State and the service of any civil process therein.

There being no objection, the bill was taken from the Speaker's table, read three several times, and passed.

Mr. RICE, of Missouri, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. HAZELTON. I call for the regular order.

MARINE HOSPITAL, CHELSEA, MASSACHUSETTS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Navy in response to a resolution of the House relative to the naval and marine hospital and grounds at Chelsea, Massachusetts; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

NAVY DEPARTMENT LIBRARY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Navy reporting the condition of the library in the Navy Department, as required by the act of August 7, 1882; which was referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Navy Department, and ordered to be printed.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted to Mr. JOYCE, for this evening's session, on account of sickness in his family.

D. AND J. R. MORDECAI.

Mr. TALBOTT. The regular order, I think, will not be insisted upon, and I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table for passage at this time Senate bill 1785, for the relief of David Mordecai and J. Randolph Mordecai, composing the commercial firm of Mordecai & Co., of Baltimore, Maryland. I have here a report from the Committee on Ways and Means of the House covering the same subject. It is one of a class of bills a number of which has been passed.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay David Mordecai and J. Randolph Mordecai, composing the commercial firm of Mordecai & Co., of Baltimore, Maryland, the sum of $822, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated; which said sum was illegally collected from vessels owned by them by the collector of customs at Charleston, South Carolina.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration at this time of the bill which has just been read?

Mr. HOLMAN. I reserve the right to object until I can hear the report read.

Mr. TALBOTT. I have here a report made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MORRISON] from the Committee on Ways and Means of this House on a House bill of a similar import.

Mr. PAGE. How long is the report?

Mr. TALBOTT. It is very short.

Mr. PAGE. I think I shall have to call for the regular order.

Mr. TALBOTT. Let the report be read.

Mr. PAGE. If it does not take too long.

Mr. TALBOTT. It will not take more than two minutes to read it.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the report.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Ways and Means, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6380) for the relief of Mordecai & Co., having carefully considered the same, submit the following report:

That David Mordecai and J. Randolph Mordecai, composing the commercial firm of Mordecai & Co., of Baltimore, Maryland, were shipping merchants of Baltimore, Maryland, and were the agents and owners of a line of steamships doing business between the said city of Baltimore and the city of Charleston, South Carolina, doing a coastwise trade. They were illegally charged with entrance and port entry fees at the custom-house in Charleston, at various times between November, 1866, and January, 1877, amounting to $822, and were compelled to pay the same. Protest was made against the illegality of the charge; and representations being made to the Secretary of the Treasury by the said Mordecai & Co. of the exaction of the tax by the custom-house at Charleston, the custom-house officer was directed by the Secretary of the Treasury to discontinue the collection of the tax.

The petitioners applied for reimbursement of the amount illegally paid, to wit, the sum of $822, but were informed by the Treasury Department that they had no power to refund the amount illegally exacted, but they must ask the special enactment of Congress. The Secretary of the Treasury, in a letter to Hon. JUSTIN S. MORRILL, chairman of Finance Committee of the Senate, says:

"Under these circumstances I consider the relief which the bill proposes to give to Messrs. Mordecai & Co. as proper, and would recommend its passage."

The committee report favorably on the bill (H. R. 6380) for relief of David Mordecai and J. Randolph Mordecai, composing the commercial firm of Mordecai & Co., and recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. HAZELTON. What committee does that come from?

Mr. TALBOTT. Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. HAZELTON. How did the committee stand?

Mr. TALBOTT. I think they were unanimous.

There being no objection, the bill was taken from the Speaker's table, read three several times, and passed.

Mr. TALBOTT moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ROBERT SMALLS—STEAMBOAT PLANTER.

Mr. DEZENDORF. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Private Calendar for consideration at this time the bill (H. R. 7626) authorizing a reappraisement of the steam transport-boat Planter, captured by Robert Smalls, and for a distribution of the proceeds thereof.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read subject to objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint a board of competent officers of the Navy, whose duty it shall be to make a reappraisement of the steam transport-boat Planter, taken during the late rebellion by Robert Smalls from the harbor of Charleston, South Carolina, and of all arms, munitions, tackle, and other property on board of said transport-boat at the time of her delivery to the Federal authorities by the said Robert Smalls; and when the full value of said transport-boat, the arms, munitions, tackle, and other property shall be ascertained, estimating said values by the worth of the property at the time of capture as aforesaid, shall cause an apportionment of such value so ascertained to be made between Robert Smalls and his associates on said transport-boat at the time of her capture and delivery to the Federal authorities, in the manner hereinafter provided for by this act, deducting only the amount or amounts paid to the said Smalls and his said associates under the act of Congress approved May 30, 1862.

SEC. 2. That the apportionment referred to in the first section of this bill shall be made as follows: One-third of the full amount of the value of the said transport-boat Planter, the arms, munitions, tackle, and other property at the time of her capture and delivery to the Federal authorities, shall be awarded to the said Robert Smalls, and the balance shall be equally divided between his said associates or their heirs at law.

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay to Robert Smalls and his associates or their heirs at law as aforesaid, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum which may be by the said board of officers hereby authorized apportioned, to each of them under the provisions of this act.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. Is this bill read subject to objection?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. Then I object.

Mr. HAZELTON. Then I call for the regular order.

Some time subsequently,

Mr. DEZENDORF said: The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SINGLETON] has withdrawn his objection to the bill which I desired to call up for consideration.

Mr. HAZELTON. How does the committee stand on that bill?

Mr. DEZENDORF. It is a unanimous report from the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. WISE, of Virginia. I object.

Several MEMBERS. Do not object.

Mr. DEZENDORF. I hope my colleague will not object.

Mr. WISE, of Virginia. Very well; I will withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill which has been read?

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask for the reading of the report; I hope there will be no objection to that.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed that it will take some forty minutes to read the report.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then I hope the gentleman calling up the bill will state the facts so that the House may understand what the bill is and act knowingly upon the subject.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. DEZENDORF] will be recognized to make a brief explanation.

Mr. DEZENDORF. This is a substitute for a House bill which was introduced to place Robert Smalls on the retired-list of the Navy with the rank of captain, in consideration of his services in capturing the steam transport-boat Planter. The Committee on Naval Affairs in examining the case found that there was no precedent for any such action. They however found that the appraisement which was made in 1862 was made at a ridiculously low figure, the facts of the case showing that the guns on board the vessel at the time she was captured were worth more than the appraisement of the vessel, guns and all.

The evidence shows that this ship was worth at the time of the capture $60,000, and the Government at that time was paying for just such vessels $400 per day. The evidence also shows that the guns and munitions of war on board the vessel were worth $10,000. Yet the appraisement was made at only $7,500, of which Robert Smalls received $1,500.

We found a precedent for the reappraisement of this vessel in the case of the confederate ram Albemarle. The report of the Committee on Naval Affairs recommending the passage of this bill was unanimous. I hope there will be no objection to the bill. I take the liberty of incorporating with my remarks the report of the committee:

The Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred bill H. R. 7059, beg leave to report a substitute therefor (H. Report No. 1887, Forty-seventh Congress, second session), authorizing the President to place Robert Smalls on the retired-list of the Navy.

January 23, 1883, recommitted to the Committee on Naval Affairs and ordered to be printed.

Mr. DEZENDORF, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, submitted the following report, to accompany bill H. R. 7059:

The Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill to retire Robert Smalls as captain of the Navy, beg leave to report as follows:

This claim is rested upon the very valuable services rendered by Robert Smalls to the country during the late war. The record of these has been very carefully investigated, and portions of it are appended, as exhibits, to this report. They show a degree of courage, well directed by intelligence and patriotism, of which the nation may well be proud, but which for twenty years has been wholly unrecognized by it. The following is a succinct statement and outline of them:

On May 13, 1862, the confederate steamboat Planter, the special dispatch boat of General Ripley, the confederate post commander at Charleston, South Carolina, was taken by Robert Smalls under the following circumstances from the wharf at which she was lying, carried safely out of Charleston Harbor, and delivered to one of the vessels of the Federal fleet then blockading that port.

On the day previous, May 12, the Planter, which had for two weeks been engaged in removing guns from Cole's Island to James Island, returned to Charleston. That night all the officers went ashore and slept in the city, leaving on board a crew of eight men, all colored. Among them was Robert Smalls, who was virtually the pilot of the boat, although he was only called a wheelman, because at that time no colored man could have, in fact, been made a pilot. For some time previous he had been watching for an opportunity to carry into execution a plan he had conceived to take the Planter to the Federal fleet. This, he saw, was about as a good a chance as he would ever have to do so, and therefore he determined not to lose it. Consulting with the balance of the crew Smalls found that they were willing to co-operate with him, although two of them afterward concluded to remain behind. The design was hazardous in the extreme. The boat would have to pass beneath the guns of the forts in the harbor. Failure and detection would have been certain death. Fearful was the venture, but it was made. The daring resolution had been formed, and under command of Robert Smalls wood was taken aboard, steam was put on, and with her valuable cargo of guns and ammunition, intended for Fort Ripley, a new fortification just constructed in the harbor, about 2 o'clock in the morning the Planter silently moved off from her dock, steamed up to North Atlantic wharf, where Smalls's wife and two children, together with four other women and one other child, and also three men, were waiting to embark. All these were taken on board, and then, at 3.25 a. m., May 13, the Planter started on her perilous adventure, carrying nine men, five women, and three children. Passing Fort Johnson the Planter's steam-whistle blew the usual salute and she proceeded down the bay. Approaching Fort Sumter, Smalls stood in the pilot-house leaning out of the window with his arms folded across his breast, after the manner of Captain Relay, the commander of the boat, and his head covered with the huge straw hat which Captain Relay commonly wore on such occasions.

The signal required to be given by all steamers passing out was blown as coolly as if General Ripley was on board going out on a tour of inspection. Sumter answered by signal "all right," and the Planter headed toward Morris Island, then occupied by Hatch's light artillery, and passed beyond the range of Sumter's guns before anybody suspected anything was wrong. When at last the Planter was obviously going toward the Federal fleet off the bar, Sumter signaled toward Morris Island to stop her; but it was too late. As the Planter approached the Federal fleet a white flag was displayed, but this was not at first discovered, and the Federal steamers, supposing the confederate rams were coming to attack them, stood out to deep water. But the ship Onward, Captain Nichols, which was not a steamer, remained, opened her ports, and was about to fire into the Planter, when she noticed the flag of truce. As soon as the vessels came within hailing distance of each other the Planter's errand was explained. Captain Nichols then boarded her, and Smalls delivered the Planter to him. From the Planter Smalls was transferred to the Augusta, the flag-ship off the bar, under the command of Captain Parrott, by whom the Planter, with Smalls and her crew, were sent to Port Royal to Rear-Admiral Du Pont, then in command of the Southern squadron.

Captain Parrott's official letter to Flag Officer Du Pont, and Admiral Du Pont's letter to the Secretary of the Navy are appended hereto.

Captain Smalls was soon afterward ordered to Edisto to join the gunboat Crusader, Captain Rhind. He then proceeded in the Crusader, piloting her and followed by the Planter to Simmons's Bluff, on Wadmalaw Sound, where a sharp battle was fought between these boats and a confederate light battery and some infantry. The confederates were driven out of their works, and the troops on the Planter landed and captured all the tents and provisions of the enemy. This occurred some time in June, 1862.

Captain Smalls continued to act as pilot on board the Planter and the Crusader, and as blockading pilot between Charleston and Beaufort. He made repeated trips up and along the rivers near the coast, pointing out and removing the torpedoes which he himself had assisted in sinking and putting in position. During these trips he was present in several fights at Adams's Run on the Dawho River, where the Planter was hotly and severely fired upon; also at Rockville, John's Island, and other places. Afterward he was ordered back to Port Royal, whence he piloted the fleet up Broad River to Pocotaligo, where a very severe battle ensued. Captain Smalls was the pilot on the monitor Keokuk, Captain Ryan, in the memorable attack on Fort Sumter, on the afternoon of the 7th of April, 1863. In this attack the Keokuk was struck ninety-six times, nineteen shots passing through her. She retired from the engagement only to sink on the next morning, near Light House Inlet. Captain Smalls left her just before she went down, and was taken with the remainder of the crew on board of the Ironsides. The next day the fleet returned to Hilton Head.

When General Gillmore took command Smalls became pilot in the quartermaster's department in the expedition on Morris Island. He was then stationed as pilot of the Stono, where he remained until the United States troops took possession of the south end of Morris Island, when he was put in charge of Light-House Inlet as pilot.

Upon one occasion, in December, 1863, while the Planter, then under command of Captain Nickerson, was sailing through Folly Island Creek, the confederate batteries at Secessionville opened a very hot fire upon her. Captain Nickerson became demoralized, and left the pilot-house and secured himself in the coal-bunker. Smalls was on the deck, and finding out that the captain had deserted his post, entered the pilot-house, took command of the boat, and carried her safely out of the reach of the guns. For this conduct he was promoted by order of General Gillmore, commanding the Department of the South, to the rank of captain, and was ordered to act as captain of the Planter, which was used as a supply-boat along the coast until the end of the war. In September, 1866, he carried his boat to Baltimore, where she was put out of commission and sold.

Besides the daring enterprise of Captain Smalls in bringing out the Planter, his gallant conduct in rescuing her a second time, for which he was made captain of her, and his invaluable services to the Army and Navy as a pilot in waters where he perfectly knew not only every bank and bar, but also where every torpedo was situated, there are still other elements to be considered in estimating the value of Captain Smalls's services to the country. The Planter, on the 13th of May, 1862, was a most useful and important vessel to the enemy. The loss of her was a severe blow to the enemy's service in carrying supplies and troops to different points of the harbor and river fortifications. At the very time of the seizure she had on board the armament for Fort Ripley. The Planter was taken by the Government at a valuation of $9,000, one-half of which was paid to the captain and crew, the captain receiving one-third of one-half, or $1,500.

Upon what principle the Government claimed one-half of this capture can not be divined, nor yet how this disposition could have been made of her without any judicial proceeding. That $9,000 was an absurdly low valuation for the Planter is abundantly shown by facts stated in the affidavits of Charles H. Campbell and E. M. Baldwin, which are appended. In addition thereto their sworn average valuation of the Planter was $67,500. The report of Montgomery Sicard, commander and inspector or ordnance, to Commodore Patterson, navy-yard commandant, shows that the cargo of the Planter, as raw material, was worth $3,043.05; that at ante-bellum prices it was worth $7,163.35, and at war prices $10,290.60. For this cargo the Government has never paid one dollar. It is a severe comment on the justice as well as the boasted generosity of the Government that, while it had received $60,000 to $70,000 worth of property at the hands of Captain Smalls, it has paid him the trifling amount of $1,500, and for twenty years his gallant daring and distinguished and valuable services which he has rendered to the country have been wholly unrecognized.

Report of Flag-Officer Du Pont.

FLAG-SHIP WABASH,
Port Royal Harbor, South Carolina, May 14, 1862.

SIR: I inclose a copy of a report from Commander E. G. Parrott, brought here last night by the late rebel steam-tug Planter, in charge of an officer and crew from the Augusta. She was the armed dispatch and transportation steamer attached to the engineer department at Charleston, under Brigadier-General Ripley, whose barge, a short time since, was brought out to the blockading fleet by several contrabands.

The bringing out of this steamer, under all the circumstances, would have done credit to any one. At 4 o'clock in the morning, in the absence of the captain, who was on shore, she left her wharf close to the government office and headquarters, with palmetto and confederate flags flying, passed the successive forts, saluting as usual by blowing her steam-whistle. After getting beyond the range of the last gun, she quickly hauled down the rebel flags and hoisted a white one.

The Onward was the inside ship of the blockading fleet in the main channel, and was preparing to fire when her commander made out the white flag. The armament of the steamer is a 32-pounder, or pivot, and a fine 24-pounder howitzer. She has, besides, on her deck four other guns, one 7-inch rifled, which were to have been taken the morning of the escape to the new fort on the middle ground. One of the four belonged to Fort Sumter, and had been struck in the rebel attack on the fort on the muzzle. Robert, the intelligent slave and pilot of the boat, who performed this bold feat so skillfully, informed me of this fact, presuming it would be a matter of interest to us to have possession of this gun. This man, Robert Smalls, is superior to any who have come into our lines—intelligent as many of them have been. His information has been most interesting, and portions of it of the utmost importance.

The steamer is quite an acquisition to the squadron by her good machinery and very light draught. The officer in charge brought her through Saint Helena Sound, and by the inland passage down Beaufort River, arriving here at 10 o'clock last night.

On board the steamer when she left Charleston were eight men, five women, and three children.

I shall continue to employ Robert as a pilot on board the Planter for the inland waters, with which he appears to be very familiar. I do not know whether, in the views of the Government, the vessel will be considered a prize; but if so, I respectfully submit to the Department the claims of this man Robert and his associates.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

S. F. DU PONT,
Flag-Officer, Commanding, &c.

Hon. GIDEON WELLES,
Secretary of the Navy, Washington, D. C.

UNITED STATES STEAMSHIP AUGUSTA,
Off Charleston, May 13, 1862.

SIR: I have the honor to inform you that the rebel armed steamer Planter was brought out to us this morning from Charleston by eight contrabands and delivered up to the squadron. Five colored women and three children are also on board. She carried one 32-pounder, and one 24-pounder howitzer, and has also on board four large guns, which she was engaged in transporting.

I send her to Port Royal at once, in order to take advantage of the present good weather. I send Charleston papers of the 12th, and the very intelligent contraband who was in charge will give you the information which he has brought off.

I have the honor to request that you will send back, as soon as convenient, the officer and crew sent on board.

I am, respectfully, &c., your obedient servant,

E. G. PARROTT,
Commander, and Senior Officer present.

Flag-Officer S. F. DU PONT,
Commanding South Atlantic Blockading Squadron.

Exhibit of the estimated values of certain ordnance and ordnance stores on board the rebel steamer Planter, which came out of Charleston, South Carolina, in the United States blockading fleet on the 15th day of May, 1862.

Articles of ordnance and ordnance stores on board the Planter.	Estimated under the supposition that the guns and projectiles are of value to the United States only as old material, the powder being considered as useful for saluting.		Estimated supposing that all the articles are valued at prices paid before the war, except the Brooks rifle and its projectiles, which are given at war prices. WAR DEPARTMENT, QUARTERMASTER-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., January 3, 1883.

SIR: Your communication of the 26th ultimo, in relation to your services on the steamer Planter during the rebellion, and requesting copies of any letters from General Gillmore and other officers on the subject, has been received.

The records of this office show that the name of Robert Smalls is reported by Lieutenant-Colonel J. J. Elwell, Hilton Head, South Carolina, as a pilot, at $50 per month, from March 1, 1863, to September 30, 1863; and from October 1, 1863, to November 20, 1863, at $75 per month.

He was then transferred to Captain J. L. Kelly, assistant quartermaster, November 20, 1863, by whom he was reported as pilot from November 21 to November 30, 1863. He is reported by that officer in same capacity from December 1, 1863, until February 29, 1864, at $150 per month.

The name of Robert Smalls is then reported by Captain Kelly as captain of the steamer Planter at $150 per month from March 1, 1864, until May 15, 1864, when transferred to the quartermaster in Philadelphia.

He is reported by Captains C. D. Schmidt, G. R. Orme, W. W. Van Ness, and John R. Jennings, assistant quartermasters at Philadelphia, as captain of the Planter, at $150 per month from June 20, 1864, to December 16, 1864, when transferred to Captain J. L. Kelly, assistant quartermaster, Hilton Head, South Carolina, by whom he is reported to January 31, 1865.

From February 1, 1865, he is reported as a "contractor, victualing and manning the steamer Planter."

I respectfully inclose herewith copy of a letter dated September 10, 1862, from Captain J. J. Elwell, chief quartermaster, Department of the South, in relation to the capture of the steamer Planter, which is the only one found on file in this office on the subject.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

ALEX. J. PERRY,
Deputy Quartermaster-General, U. S. A.,
Acting Quartermaster-General.

Hon. ROBERT SMALLS,
Member of Congress, Washington, D. C.

OFFICE OF THE CHIEF QUARTERMASTER,
Hilton Head, S. C., September 10, 1862.

GENERAL: I have this day taken a transfer of the small steamer Planter of the Navy. This is the confederate steamer which Robert Smalls, a contraband, brought out of Charleston on the 13th of May last. The Navy Department, through Rear-Admiral Du Pont, transfers her, and I receipt for her just as she was received from Charleston. Her machinery is not in very good order, and will require some repairs, &c.; but this I can have done here. She will be of much service to us, as we have comparatively no vessels of light draught. I shall have her employed at Fort Pulaski, where I am obliged to keep a steamer.

Please find inclosed a copy of the letter of Rear-Admiral Du Pont to General Brannan in regard to the matter.

I am, general, very respectfully, your most obedient servant,

J. J. ELWELL,
Captain and Assistant Quartermaster.

J. G. CHANDLER,
Deputy Quartermaster-General, U. S. A.

Personally appeared before me Charles H. Campbell, of the city, county, and State of New York, who, being by me duly sworn according to law, deposes and says as follows:

That during the year 1862, and from that time up to and including the year 1865, he was doing service in the Department of the South, headquarters at Hilton Head, South Carolina; that he knows Hon. ROBERT SMALLS, of Beaufort, South Carolina; that he was present when the steamer Planter, of the city of Charleston, came into Hilton Head on or about the 13th of May, 1862; that he went on board the Planter and made a personal examination of her condition, and found she was built of live oak and red cedar, and a first-class coastwise steamer, well furnished and complete in every respect; that he was and is well acquainted with the value of steamers, and has been engaged in the business of steamboating, both as captain and owner, for the last fifteen years; that the steamer Planter was fully worth, at the time she came into Hilton Head, the sum of $60,000 in cash for the boat alone; that the United States Government was paying at that time for steamers of her class $400 per day under a charter-party agreement with the chief quartermaster at that place, the Government finding both wood and coal; that he chartered to the United States Government at or about that time the steamer George Washington for $350 per day, which was only about half the size of the Planter, and not more than half her value; that he executed seven charters for steamers with the Government, and also had a valuation set on them in case of loss, and the above statement is made in accordance with the prices paid by the Government at Hilton Head and elsewhere during the time the Planter was in the service; that, at the close of the war, and while the Planter was laying up in Charleston and in a very bad condition from the nature of her past services, I was commissioned by her former owner, Captain Ferguson, to purchase the Planter from the Government for the sum of $25,000, which sum I did offer, and the same was refused on the part of the Government of the United States; that the steamer Planter was an extra strong built boat, her frame was live oak and red cedar, and built as strong as possible; she was built expressly for the coastwise trade, and she is running out of the city of Charleston to-day, and is considered by steamboat men one of the strongest and best built steamboats in the South.

CHARLES H. CAMPBELL.

Subscribed and sworn to before me the 23d day of March, 1876.

[OFFICIAL SEAL.] JAS. A. TAIT,
Notary Public.

Personally appeared before me, a notary public, E. M. Baldwin, of the city of Washington, District of Columbia, who was by me duly sworn according to law, and deposes and says:

That during the year A. D. 1862 and afterward was doing service for the Navy Department at Hilton Head, South Carolina, in the South Atlantic blockading squadron; that he was captain of the steam-tug Mercury, and was one of the first persons that boarded the Planter at Hilton Head on the 13th day of May, A. D. 1862.

That he has been for years, and is now, engaged in the steamboat business as an officer and owner, and is familiar with the prices paid for charters by the quartermaster at Hilton Head, and the value of steamboats generally at that time and since; that he examined the Planter when she came into said harbor at Hilton Head, and found her a first-class steamboat, built of live oak and red cedar, and her outfit and findings complete in every particular; that she could have been readily sold at the time she arrived at Hilton Head for $75,000 in cash for the steamboat alone, or could have been chartered to the Government for $400 per day, which at that rate would have paid the purchase-money at the price aforesaid in less than one year, and would have left a large surplus to the purchaser; that she was considered by both the officers of the Army and Navy, on account of her light draught and great strength, by far the best steamer for that coast service in the Department of the South.

E. M. BALDWIN.

Sworn to before me and subscribed by him in my presence this 25th day of March, A. D. 1876.

[OFFICIAL SEAL.] JAS. A. TAIT,
Notary Public.

The committee in calling attention of the House to the above facts in this case, establishing, as they do, that Robert Smalls performed on the occasion referred to a most meritorious and praiseworthy action, calling for great bravery and daring, regret that they do not find any precedent in the history of the legislation of the country which would authorize them in recommending the action asked for in the bill, namely, placing a civilian on the retired list of the Navy.

Your committee, however, are of the opinion that the evidence on file in the case, and above recited, justifies them in the conclusion that Robert Smalls and his associates were unjustly dealt by in the matter of the appraisement of the Planter under the act of Congress approved May 30, 1862, and the apportionment made thereunder, which appraisement formed the value of said Planter, the arms, munitions, and tackle, at the sum of $9,000, while the evidence shows that the said boat was worth $60,000 at the time of her capture, and that the Government was offered $25,000 for her at the close of the war, and that the arms, munitions, and tackle alone were worth $10,000 at the time of capture.

Your committee therefore believe that there should be a reappraisement of said transport boat Planter, and the arms, munitions, and tackle on board of her at the time of her capture and delivery to the Federal authorities by the said Robert Smalls, and a reapportionment of the proceeds of the full value of said transport boat Planter, arms, munitions, and tackle between Robert Smalls and his associates, and for that purpose report the following bill as a substitute for H. R. 7059.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to inquire whether the rule laid down for the distribution of this fund, in the event——

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. How much money will this bill carry?

Mr. BISBEE. I happen to know the truth of the facts stated in this case. I was on the scene of action.

Mr. PAGE. The bill may not carry $2,000.

Mr. DEZENDORF. The amount of money will be very small.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to ask whether if this reappraisement be made and a further sum shall be found to be due to the captors, Captain Smalls will not under the rule provided in this bill receive a larger proportion of the amount than he would under the general law touching the capture of vessels?

Mr. DEZENDORF. He will receive the same proportion as in the case of the original appraisement under the act of May 30, 1862, one-third. The amount which he will receive will be very small at any rate.

There being no objection, the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar was discharged from the further consideration of the bill; which was thereupon ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DEZENDORF moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DISTRIBUTION OF REBELLION ANNALS.

Mr. SPRINGER, from the Committee on Printing, reported a joint resolution (H. Res. 365) in relation to the distribution of the volumes of the Official Records of the War of the Rebellion; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask for the present consideration of this resolution.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Be it resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled, That the time in which the Senators, Representatives, and Delegates of the Forty-seventh Congress may designate the addresses to which the volumes of the Official Records of the War of the Rebellion shall be distributed, as provided in the act of Congress approved August 7, 1882, shall continue until the 1st day of September, 1883; and that all volumes not then designated by them to be distributed under the provisions of said act, and not directed by said act to be otherwise distributed, shall be sold by the Secretary of War as provided in said act.

Mr. McCOOK. Why not continue the time till the first of December?

Mr. PAGE. If this resolution is going to lead to debate I must object.

Mr. SPRINGER. It is not subject to objection. In explanation of the resolution I will state that the Secretary of War is of opinion that members under the act of August 7, 1882, will not have the right to designate addresses for the distribution of these volumes after the 4th of March next. This resolution provides merely for continuing the time and allowing members to designate addresses until the 1st of September.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. Is this reported from a committee?

The SPEAKER. It was reported from the Committee on Printing yesterday, was printed in the RECORD, and went over.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SPRINGER moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MOORE. I ask consent to submit a resolution of inquiry, which will take but a minute.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I call for the regular order.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PAGE. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union to resume the consideration of the river and harbor bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union (Mr. CANNON in the chair), and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7631) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving harbor at Two Rivers, Wisconsin: Continuing improvement at the piers, $3,000.

Mr. ANDERSON. I move to strike out the lines just read. I am led to make the motion by the report of the Secretary of War to this House, in which it is stated:

The local engineer reports that Two Rivers Harbor is of no importance to the commerce of the lakes, its value being entirely local. The commercial statistics show a great falling off in the tonnage entering this harbor. Since 1879 steamers have not run to or called at this place.

Balance in Treasury July 1, 1882	$——
Appropriated act of August 2, 1882	15,000
Drawn on requisition, July 1 to December 31, 1882	7,000

The appropriation made last session for this work was $15,000, of which it appears about half remains unexpended. In addition to this balance, this bill proposes to appropriate $3,000. Now, if there have been no steamers calling at this point since 1879, if the tonnage is steadily decreasing, notwithstanding the fact that there are two rivers there, it seems to me we should abide by the recommendation of the Secretary of War, and enforce in this case the principles of the President's veto message. It seems to me this is a typical case. Attention has been officially called to it; and it is a case which certainly can not be covered either by the proposition of promoting general commerce or by that other proposition about decreasing the cost of transportation by rail.

Mr. GUENTHER. Mr. Chairman, what I said before taking a recess in reference to the harbor at Port Washington applies with equal force to this harbor. In fact, the two items were lumped together in that remarkable letter of the Secretary of War.

The Secretary of War, in his letter, says that no steamers have called at that port for a good many years. The fact is that since 1881 steamers have called there. In 1881, in addition to sailing vessels, there were one hundred and fifty-two steamer arrivals there, and just as many departures. I do not wish to take up the valuable time of this committee. I hope the motion of my mild-mannered friend from Kansas will be voted down. [Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I move to strike out the last word. Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not find in this bill Cheesequake Creek, and no bill is perfect that does not have Cheesequake Creek in it. I also miss another; I do not find Sacramento River. We gave by the last river and harbor appropriation bill $250,000 to take out of the Sacramento River detritus which the California miners throw into it. Now, sir, why are we not called upon to give something more for that purpose? Is the detritus all taken out? Is there no more detritus? The engineers say it will take a million and a half of dollars to do that. I ask some member of the committee why this noble river, which floats the commerce of a continent, is slighted in this manner? Why is nothing appropriated in this bill for taking out the dirt which the State of California permits the miners to throw into it?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman withdraw his pro forma amendment.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. Yes; I will withdraw my pro forma amendment.

Mr. ANDERSON's amendment was disagreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving harbor at Oakland, California: Continuing improvement, $80,000.

Mr. ANDERSON. I move to strike out that paragraph. And I do so, Mr. Chairman, for the purpose of making an inquiry of my friend, the chairman of the Committee on Commerce, in regard to the necessity for this work at Oakland. Now, these appropriations running through the Eastern States are for $2,000, $3,000, $4,000, $6,000, $10,000, and even for Chicago, where there is greater commerce and greater tonnage probably than at all the other ports of the lakes put together, or nearly so, the appropriation is only for $75,000. Yet here is a proposition for the harbor at Oakland of $80,000. I do not remember what it was last year.

A MEMBER. Two hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. ANDERSON. I am told it was $200,000 last year. It so happens, as I remember that country, that at San Francisco, across the bay, is one of the grandest harbors which the Almighty has anywhere made. The entire shipping of the world could be accommodated in that San Francisco harbor. If you took in Suisun Bay and San José Bay it would be analogous to the splendid harbor along the front of New York, deep channel, broad channel, and fine harbor. There is a flat there where the sediment is deposited by the bay, and the proposition is to improve that flat at Oakland. I know Oakland has become an important city, but I am not quite clear when called upon to vote away $80,000 of the people's money I ought to vote to give it for making a harbor at Oakland when there is a magnificent harbor at San Francisco.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. Chairman, in order to gratify my friend, who has been to California and who ought to know, if he does not know, I will say that Oakland is on the side of the bay where all the wheat that is produced in the State of the California is shipped to Liverpool. Every pound of grain that comes to the harbor of San Francisco goes there at an expense of $2 a ton, being crossed in boats carrying cars loaded with wheat, when it ought to go to Oakland where ship and car ride side by side. On forty millions of quintals shipped from California to Liverpool there is a saving of $2 a ton. The Oakland Harbor of San Francisco is on the side of the bay where all the agricultural products of California exist.

The only other harbor is the wharf belonging to the Central Railway Company. I hope my friend is answered.

The estimate of the Engineer's Department is for $300,000, but this Committee on Commerce has only given $80,000. But as my friend from Kansas has been the advocate at all times of the interests of agriculture, and I have no reason to doubt his sincerity, I ask him to stand by this appropriation to-day, for if there is anything in this bill in the interests of agriculture it is the matter of this harbor at Oakland.

And furthermore, Mr. Chairman, let me say that every pound of tea, every pound of coffee, and all the produce of the Asias which comes into this country by way of San Francisco comes in at that point, where the ships that bring them are run up by the very side of the wharves of the railroad companies to unload their cargoes there; and from there they are shipped to New York, Philadelphia, and all of the other Eastern cities.

Mr. ANDERSON. I would like to be heard for a moment. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. ANDERSON. I do not believe that I occupied all of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman if he desires to be heard.

Mr. ANDERSON. I think I understood my friend from California to say that the depot at San Francisco for the arrival of these supplies and also several railroad companies was at Oakland?

Mr. PAGE. This wharf that I refer to is a wharf that belongs to the people; where ships that bring or carry away all of the commerce of the State may land, and where the wheat which comes by rail to be loaded for Liverpool or other points can be shipped from the cars to the boat without paying a tax of $2 a ton to be sent across the bay.

Mr. ANDERSON. Where is this wharf the gentleman speaks of?

Mr. PAGE. At Oakland water front.

Mr. ANDERSON. What railroad company comes in there?

Mr. PAGE. Oh, there are half a dozen of them.

Mr. ANDERSON. Well, that is just what I expected; just what I was looking for. Now, it turns out as I anticipated it would, that the development of that harbor is very largely for the benefit of the various railroad companies coming into Oakland. It will turn out, furthermore, Mr. Chairman, I venture to assert, to be an actual fact that there is no city in this Union where there is such a universal, absolute, heartless monopoly of the railroads as there is at this day in California. If you go to the very bottom of this thing I do not doubt but that you will find an expenditure of public money made here under the guise of developing the agricultural resources and products of the farms of California which is nothing more than a benefit to the railroad companies out there, with the Bank of California, the Steam Navigation Company, the Oregon Company, the California Fur Company all rolled into one great concern to derive all this benefit from the public moneys. [Loud cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. WASHBURN. I hope we can have order.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order.

Mr. PAGE. I do not concur with the views of the gentlemen who call "Vote!" "Vote!" when a gentleman is on the floor in good faith discussing a proposition.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I rise to oppose the amendment. I think I understand this Oakland Harbor matter very well. The object to which this money is to be applied is to build docks. I may say also in this connection that there are $220,000, as I am informed, unexpended belonging to this fund yet.

The harbor is deep enough, the water is deep enough, but somebody wants the Government to build dockage for them, so that these railroads, five or six of them, can use the docks built at the expense of the General Government. It is perfectly absurd to say that that is the improvement of a harbor.

Mr. HAZELTON. What do you know about it? [Laughter.]

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I was there when my friend Mr. HAZELTON was, and he knows what I say to be true as well as I do. I am not going to let my friend contradict me when he does not know anything about it. I do not believe that he ever was in California. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. Oh, no; not yet!

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from New York.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. ANDERSON. I really am not satisfied with that Oakland matter. I move to strike out "80" and insert "75."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. ANDERSON. I desire to be heard.

The question was taken.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment is not agreed to.

Mr. ANDERSON. I demand a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 10, noes 69.

Mr. ANDERSON. No quorum. I wanted to be heard on this motion.

Mr. PAGE. Regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. By consent the gentleman from Kansas may be heard.

Mr. ANDERSON. When I offered the amendment I stated that I desired to be heard.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair begs the gentleman's pardon. He did not intend to take him off the floor, and did not hear his request to be recognized.

Mr. ANDERSON. I am entirely satisfied. I withdraw the motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving harbor at Wilmington, California: Continuing improvement, $50,000.

Mr. BERRY. I offer the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 190 insert:
"For improving the entrance of Humboldt Bay, California, $100,000."

Mr. BERRY. Mr. Chairman, now, if I can have the attention of the House (which I do not often desire), I wish to say a word or two as to the improvement of the bar at the entrance of Humboldt Bay, which the Committee on Commerce, I am sure, have failed to provide for simply because the report of the engineer had not been laid before them in time. This, sir, is the second port upon the Pacific coast, that is, upon the California coast. The commerce of that port amounts to many million dollars per annum. There were about four hundred vessels entered and departed from that port during the year 1882. It is the port which taps the great redwood belt of that coast. We are shipping lumber to Australia and to China and to many of the South American states. There are some 80,000,000 feet of lumber shipped from this port annually. We have three steamers plying between San Francisco and the city of Eureka, situated at this port. There are railroad enterprises now being undertaken to run back thirty or forty miles into the redwood belt, where we have timber from five to fifteen feet in diameter and from two hundred to three hundred feet high, and it is known that the timber suitable for lumber is becoming limited in the United States.

Now, there is a bay that has twenty-seven square miles on the inside of the bar with fine navigable channels. The bar at the entrance of this bay is composed wholly of a sand formation and is constantly changing the channels; and the engineers who have examined this bar report that it should be taken charge of immediately by the Government; also, the consulting board of engineers appointed by the Government of the United States have examined the plans proposed for the improvement of the bar by the engineers in charge and have approved them and recommended there should be an appropriation of $600,000 made, in two appropriations, so that the work might be done economically and insure a proper depth of water whereby vessels might enter and depart with ease and safety.

Mr. FLOWER was recognized, and yielded his time to Mr. BERRY.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. Chairman, I would not trespass upon the patience of the House, knowing how important it is to put this bill through, were it not for the fact that this is the second port on the California coast and of vital importance to my people.

I wish to read one or two lines from the engineer's report I hold in my hand. Let me say that this report has not been printed yet. It was received so late that the Committee on Commerce had not time to examine it satisfactorily.

In 1851 this channel through this bar was 2,200 feet wide and was 21 feet deep; in 1871 it was 3,300 feet wide and only 14 feet in depth; in 1881 it was 2,740 feet wide, with only 14 feet depth of water. During the last year, 1882, the sand-spits that formed the boundaries of the channel have worn away, and we have a width of 4,000 feet and only 10 or 12 feet of water. There were eighteen vessels loaded for foreign ports with this redwood lumber that were compelled to lie for thirty days loaded inside the port waiting for the shifting channel to assume such a shape that they could depart.

Now, the engineers say by the construction of a jetty at one of these sand-spits that the channel could be so improved as to afford a constant depth of water varying from eighteen to twenty-two feet. Here, then, is really a proposition that is in the interest of the commerce of the world; it is truly international commerce. It is no mere local matter. This is a great harbor, and its improvement can be accomplished by the expenditure of $600,000. We only wish an appropriation of $100,000 to commence this work, a work recommended by the local engineers and indorsed by the consulting board of engineers appointed by your authority.

Sirs, from my personal knowledge I know there is no more important work being prosecuted by the Government than the work contemplated by my amendment, or that would result in greater benefits. I see my time has expired. Permit me to say that I hope this committee will adopt this amendment, and let the engineers enter upon this improvement by preparing material and making such other preparations as may be necessary to a rapid prosecution of the work when the channel through the bar may be found in the most favorable condition for the work.

The question being taken on Mr. BERRY's amendment, it was not agreed to.

The Clerk read lines 217 and 218, as follows:

Improving Cheesequake's Creek, New Jersey: Continuing improvement, $7,000.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move to strike out those lines.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. JONES] is recognized.

Mr. JONES, of New Jersey. I suppose I am to do what no other member of the House has done or will do. I move to strike out of this bill appropriations for my own State. I do so because I do not think these works are for the interest of the commerce of the country, or are a national improvement. I will send up my amendment, and I propose to give my reasons for moving to strike out this part of the bill.

The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

Strike out lines 217 to 224, inclusive, as follows:
"Improving Cheesequake's Creek, New Jersey: Continuing improvement, $7,000.
"Improving Elizabeth River, New Jersey: Continuing improvement, $5,000.
"Improving Mattawan Creek, New Jersey: Continuing improvement, $4,000.
"Improving Mantua Creek, New Jersey: Continuing improvement, $5,000."

Mr. JONES, of New Jersey. The first appropriation I wish to strike out is for improving Cheesequake's Creek. [Laughter.] I believe on that creek there are a couple of brick-yards and perhaps a clay pit. [Laughter.]

The next is for improving Elizabeth River; and that furnishes the main reason why I get up here to oppose this. I see the report of the engineers states that there are 19,000 tons of commerce on that river. I have lived on that river for thirty years——

Mr. ROSS. Will the gentleman yield?

Several MEMBERS. Do not yield.

Mr. JONES, of New Jersey. I had a factory on that river for five years; and I have known the river for thirty years. There has not been a sloop or sail-vessel up that river for thirty years, and there will not be for thirty years more. The tonnage on that river is all on the first fifteen rods of it.

Mr. COBB. I want to ask the gentleman whether the Committee on Commerce were not mistaken in putting this into the bill?

Mr. JONES, of New Jersey. That is the very thing I am talking about. I do not believe the Committee on Commerce would have done anything wrong had they known it. Now, this report of the engineers gives the tonnage on that river as 20,000 tons, or about that. The tonnage of the river, as I have said, is all on the first fifteen rods of it. There is a wharf at the mouth of the river; and there has not for thirty years been a load two miles up the river.

That river runs up into the center of the city of Elizabeth. The upper end of it is dammed, and that is used for the supply of water to the city of Elizabeth; and all the water that goes into the river or nearly all of it, has to pass the houses and through the sewers into this river.

One object I have in making this statement and in opposing these items is to suggest that if the Committee on Commerce have been deceived on this particular paragraph, for these particular appropriations, they may have been deceived all the way through.

Mr. ANDERSON. Undoubtedly.

Mr. PAGE. As a member of the committee reporting this bill, I desire to say that the Committee on Commerce, after having their attention called to Cheesequake's Creek so many times through the public press, gave this matter their careful attention.

We examined the reports of the Engineers' Department. Naturally we had a prejudice against the name of Cheesequake's Creek. It has an unfortunate name, I admit. But what are the facts? I was in hopes that my friend from New Jersey [Mr. JONES], whom I esteem very highly, would have been enabled to enlighten this House upon the question of the commerce of that creek, as they call it; it is a tidal stream.

The statistics show that there were 40,000 tons of sand shipped out of that creek of the value of $80,000; that there were shipped 18,000 tons of pottery clay, of the value of $3 a ton, or $54,000.

Mr. SPRINGER. What is the gentleman reading from?

Mr. PAGE. I am reading from the report of the Engineers Department.

Mr. SPRINGER. I do not find anything like that in it.

Mr. PAGE. I can not help that. There were also shipped 4,000 tons of hay, which, at $12 a ton, was worth $48,000; of fertilizers, 37,500 tons, at $2 a ton, $75,000; of wood, 1,000 cords, at $4 a cord; of ashes, 10,000 bushels; of lime, 5,000 bushels; of oysters, 2,300 bushels; of farm products, $300,000, and of general merchandise $100,000, making in all $670,000 worth of produce that goes out of Cheesequake's Creek every year.

Mr. REED. Which end of it? [Laughter.]

Mr. PAGE. I do not care if it goes out of both ends. I will submit to my friend from Maine [Mr. REED] that he can now move for a committee of investigation to find out which end of the creek this commerce goes out.

So far as the Committee on Commerce is concerned, I desire to say now that while the committee once struck this out they afterward put it back again, because they believed that the engineer's reports and the facts and statistics stated in them justified them in making this small appropriation for this river with an unfortunate name. It is a creek, but it is a tidal creek; and as I have shown out of it comes thousands of tons of commerce every year. It is a creek, not in the sense in which we denominate the small streams and creeks of the mountain in the Northern States; but is a tidal stream. It is true that at low tide the water is shallow; but at high tide there goes out of it commerce enough to justify this appropriation.

Now, I submit the matter to the candid judgment of every man who will read the statistics upon the subject. I ask this committee not to be carried away by any cry of newspapers or any false pretensions against this creek because it happens to have an unfortunate name.

Before I conclude I want to state the number of vessels that sail in and out of this creek: Of sloops 152, of schooners 30, of barges 146, and of steam-vessels 222. That is the creek, Cheesequake's Creek, that everybody says is so insignificant that it ought not to be included in a river and harbor bill. I only know what the report of the engineers says, and I only desire to put the committee right on this question.

Mr. HARRIS, of New Jersey, addressed the committee. [See Appendix.]

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I desire to put a question to my friend who has just taken his seat. The papers of this country have howled down this Congress as if we were the consorts of thieves in the matter of this river and harbor bill. If any member of the House has connived at securing an appropriation for a pond or a creek which has no commerce and has thus practiced an imposition upon this House we ought to know it. If any gentleman rises in his place to bear testimony here it should have some relation to the truth in order that the lightning may not bear all over this country statements made as if upon personal knowledge which are as far from the truth as Dives from the court of Heaven.

Mr. HARRIS, of New Jersey, again addressed the committee. [See Appendix.]

Mr. JONES, of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out the last word. My object in this matter, as I have said, is not to antagonize this committee, but to show to this House and the country the operations of this board of engineers. It is asked where the commerce of this river is. Now, a river may have a very good mouth; the first ten or fifteen rods of the river may be navigable and may be better than the sound adjoining, which is the case with Elizabeth River; and there may be a nice dockage. There may be, as is the case with Elizabeth River, a railroad connection, for a spur to the New Jersey Central Railroad runs to this point.

Mr. DAWES. That is to say there is a good harbor.

Mr. JONES, of New Jersey. There is a good harbor, and a good dockage. There is a rolling-mill right there. There is, or was, a large spoke factory there; I had the spoke factory myself for five years. I know what I am talking about, and I never saw a vessel run up the river in my life. I am stating this matter just as it is. I would not willingly antagonize a city within five miles of my own residence. I am making a good many enemies in doing it; but, gentlemen, I am not here for any individual enterprise. I am here for the good of the country, the whole country. I do not care anything about any individuals or any local enterprise.

My colleague has stated to the House that there is on that river a tonnage of so much sand, so much brick, &c. I know that there are a couple of brick-yards, a sand-pit, and a clay-pit. Now, is this improvement a local benefit or is it a public benefit? If it is a public benefit I want a railroad constructed from the Pennsylvania Railroad to my factory, because I have a factory there and have to do all the cartage by teams. If the Government is to dredge this river and dredge the Cheesequake's and the Morris River and all the other rivers there for the sake of a few individuals living there I say let the Government come in and build railroads for the benefit of private individuals.

Mr. HARRIS, of New Jersey. We did that once.

Mr. JONES, of New Jersey. Then it ought to be done again. If it was right then, or if it was once right, it is right all the time.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not want you to understand me as antagonizing the Committee on Commerce, but I am antagonizing the bill, and I am going to vote against it. [Laughter.] I was not well enough to be here last year and vote in the last Congress on this bill, because I was sick; and I was cursed for being sick. [Laughter.] Now I am here and I am going to show my constituents what I would have done had I been here last year. I intend to vote against the bill. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. HARDENBERGH was recognized.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. What gentleman from New Jersey is recognized?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey on the right [Mr. HARDENBERGH.]

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. HARDENBERGH. Mr. Chairman, I rise simply for the purpose of asking a question of this committee in connection with the passage of this bill, or of my colleague, who, I presume, can answer it.

Now, in all the sessions of Congress during which I have been a member, I have never yet voted for a river and harbor appropriation bill; and I did not vote for them simply because I objected to the amount appropriated for that purpose. But this I do know, sir, that New Jersey in all of her history has received but very little favor so far as her internal improvements are concerned from the General Government of the United States. It has been exceedingly seldom that her representatives here have ever asked for one single dollar from the National Government for the improvement of her streams or the benefit of her commerce. But the question that I want to ask to-night as a representative of that State is this—and let us deal with it, gentlemen of the committee, as a plain, practical, common-sense question. It is not a question of the improvement of dry water-ways or the building up of disused harbors. The question which I wish to present is one that goes further than that. It is one of common, business intelligence, and of the proper management of such affairs. It is not whether it is an appropriation for local improvements or local purposes, but the question is how far in so appropriating money we are justified by the relations that our State bears to the Congress and to the country. The question therefore that I desire to ask this committee is simply this: In all these improvements, Mr. Chairman—improving Cheesequake's Creek, New Jersey (continuing improvement), $7,000; improving Elizabeth River, New Jersey (continuing improvement), $5,000; improving Mattawan Creek, New Jersey (continuing improvement), $4,000; improving Mantua Creek, New Jersey (continuing improvement), $3,000—the Government has spent, as near as I can understand it, somewhere between fifty and sixty thousand dollars toward the improvements which I have thus specified, that is toward rendering these streams navigable, toward making them tributary to the commerce and for the benefit, if you please, of the State of New Jersey as she stands in her relations to the commerce of the United States.

Now, when these improvements have been commenced, where they have been made in part, what I desire to ask this committee is whether they should be continued, not whether there is necessity for them. I have nothing to say upon that subject. They are not in the limits of my district, and I leave that question to the representative of that district. But tell me, gentlemen, what is to be done with the money that has been expended already by the Government upon them? If they have been rendered navigable in part will you leave the money of the United States there expended useless, idle, and lost, or will you by a simple continuance of the small amounts of appropriation required proceed to render that money which you have already expended of service to the people and to the country by making these streams navigable and completing the purposes of the improvements? That is the only question I have to ask, and the only one that the State of New Jersey asks this Committee of the Whole and this Congress to consider. It is a plain business question. Will you throw away the money that has been already expended? Has it been used improperly? Is any further expenditure impracticable? If so drop it at once. But when you are asked to spend for that whole State a few thousand dollars to render useful the improvements you have already begun there, and to save the money that has been already put into these improvements, it is your duty not to throw aside the money that you have already expended, but to render it valuable for commercial purposes. In a sense of justice and right I ask you not to throw aside and waste the money that has been spent there, and if there be this addition made to the works already begun and commerce can be made practicable thereby, I ask in the name of New Jersey now that you will not stop the work but allow it to proceed. We want no special favors; we only ask this in a sense of justice.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS addressed the Chair.

Mr. PAGE. I want to ascertain if the committee can not come to some understanding as to the length of time this matter is to be discussed. I hope we can have a vote at once; if not I shall be compelled to move that the committee rise.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted upon this amendment.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I move to strike out the last three words.

The CHAIRMAN. That is not now in order; there are already two amendments pending.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Who moved the amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I hope he will withdraw the amendment.

Mr. HARRIS, of New Jersey. I withdraw the amendment which I offered.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I move to strike out the last word.

I do not wish to detain the House three minutes. I only desire to say what I should have said perhaps when I was on my feet before, that I am willing to strike out any item in this bill which is not properly placed there.

But I want to suggest to the House and to the country that this committee has but two sources of information. One is through the channel fixed and authorized by law to bring that information. That is the report of the board of engineers having charge of these works. If officers falsify, if they bear incorrect testimony, they should be dealt with.

Another source of information is the member in whose district the work is proposed. If he deals unfairly with the House and with the country, upon his head ought to fall the responsibility.

These are all questions which should be discussed, and with care and candor. They are not propositions to be made light of in any respect. The House has acted up to its conception of what was right and proper in the light of the information it gets. Now let the men who have these improvements recommended in their various districts show to the House that the engineer's report is wrong, that the proposed improvement is one that ought not to be made, and this House will now, as it would have done at the last session, be swift to vote it out; because there is no man who knows enough to go in out of the rain but knows that the members of this Congress or any other Congress can not have any interest apart from the general public in these improvements which are carried on under the supervision of the War Department and under the control of the engineers of that Department. All I ask is that the House may be fairly dealt with by members, by engineers, and by the sources from whence we derive our information and upon which we are compelled to act. And I say to my friend from New Jersey that if it is true as he says that these are unworthy projects, I, and I am sure every man on this floor, will be swift to vote them out.

Mr. COX, of New York. I do not find in these estimates or recommendations any recommendation of this Cheesequake's business.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. Here is what the Secretary of War says.

Mr. COX, of New York. I have what he says. On the 1st of July, 1881, the amount available was $24,000. The amount appropriated by the act of 1882 was $15,000, making $39,000. The amount estimated for completion of the existing project is $35,000. The amount that could be profitably expended in the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, is $20,000.

What for? For a little local improvement never recommended. If any gentleman of the committee will tell us this was ever recommended I wish to know it.

Mr. HORR. It was.

Mr. COX, of New York. I can not find it. There is no authority for the improvement. There is not one recommendation of it. All that is said is that the commerce is $110,000 per annum; that it is estimated by interested parties at $110,000.

Mr. HORR. You have not the original report on which the work was commenced.

Mr. COX, of New York. I have the original report. It states this:

> The amount of commerce on Cheesequake's Creek is estimated by parties interested at $110,000 per annum.

Mr. HORR. That is not the report on which the work commenced.

Mr. WASHBURN. If the gentleman from New York will turn to page 680 he will find that the Chief of Engineers recommends it.

Mr. COX, of New York. If I can not make the point as to the particular thing, I make the general point, on which I stand always on these appropriations, that whereas Ohio made her canals by her own money; whereas Maryland made her canals by her own money; whereas New York made her canals with her own cash, and made them free by taxing her own people, we are called on now in the afternoon of the nineteenth century by the Federal Government to add taxes on taxes to gratify a few men, parties interested in certain creeks and harbors entirely local. We are against that on principle. We are against that in detail. We fight it from now to the end. If we do not succeed now we will in the next Congress, when Democrats will have a majority and old State rights principles will prevail.

Mr. HARRIS, of New Jersey. I will answer the gentleman's question now about the recommendation.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted.

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

Mr. WASHBURN. I renew it. I desire to ask the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. JONES] whether these works are in his Congressional district?

Mr. JONES, of New Jersey. No, sir.

Mr. WASHBURN. I supposed when the gentleman arose in his seat with the impressive manner in which he did, and made his statement, that these works were in his district. But it seems that his patriotic sacrifice is very much of the same character as that of Artemus Ward, who was willing to "sacrifice all his wife's relations." He did not propose to go to the war himself, but he was willing to sacrifice his wife's relations. That seems to be the case with the gentleman from New Jersey.

Now, sir, there has been in the past year a systematic effort in many quarters to blackguard the river and harbor bill and the great internal improvements provided for by it out of existence. This attempt was initiated in the city of New York. All this clamor about the river and harbor improvements, all this loose talk about creeks and macadamized streams, has been in the nature of a diversion and cover for the real motives of those who have opposed any river and harbor bill.

The people of the city of New York, as voiced by the press of that city, do not wish to see the great Mississippi River improved; that is the real difficulty. These great improvements that are opening up the channels of commerce of the West, affording competition as against the trunk lines of railroads leading to New York city, are what they fear; but they seek to divert the attention of the country from their real motives by clamoring about Cheesequake's and trout streams, fearing that these improvements will divert the commerce of the country from the city of New York.

Mr. COX, of New York. I deny that statement; it is incorrect.

Mr. WASHBURN. And I am surprised that the gentleman representing that great metropolis of this country——

Mr. COX, of New York. I deny that statement.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Nevertheless it is true.

Mr. WASHBURN. "Actions speak louder than words." But I rose merely to ask the committee not to be diverted from this great question, not to be bulldozed and blackguarded into refusing to make these great improvements for the development of the country, for the opening up of its great channels of trade, and for affording means to relieve the commerce of the country from the arbitrary exactions of the railroads.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. PAGE. I ask if we can not have an agreement now to take a vote on this amendment? We have been discussing it for three-quarters of an hour.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I rise to oppose the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks consent that a vote be taken on the pending amendment.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I object.

Mr. BELFORD. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Colorado rise?

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I demand fair play. You were not put there to act in that way.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is not in order, and will take his seat. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. BELFORD].

Mr. BELFORD. A few years ago—and I hope I may obtain the attention of the committee—my distinguished and eloquent and lovable friend from New York [Mr. COX] made a speech in this House denouncing an appropriation that was contained in a river and harbor bill in reference to a creek called Kiskiminitas. He will float down the annals of time with the name of that creek—Kiskiminitas. [Laughter.]

And yet it is a fact that in the first session of the first Congress that assembled under the Constitution, Madison and the fathers of the Republic discussed and debated the propriety of locating the national capital on that creek because it was a navigable stream.

Mr. COX, of New York. What State is it in?

Mr. BELFORD. It is in the State of Pennsylvania, the State of my birth, by whose interests I always stand. [Great laughter.]

Now, in the five minutes allotted to me I desire to call the attention of the committee and of the country to one fact. The Democracy have always controlled the South, and you men of the South have always stood by the Democratic party; yet the members of the Democratic party have denounced the propriety of improving your rivers and harbors, and of making appropriations to put you on your feet.

When in the last session of Congress the Republican party, that has been aspersed and derided and assailed, came forward and said, We have $150,000,000 of surplus revenue in the Treasury of the United States, and we will contribute from that surplus to put the South on its feet, you Democrats railed and bedeviled and attempted to disgrace us throughout this whole Republic. [Great laughter.]

A MEMBER (on the Democratic side). That is not so.

Mr. BELFORD. That is true. I say that I was in favor of that river and harbor bill because this is our whole country, from the North to the South, from the East to the West.

A MEMBER. Repeat that. [Laughter.]

Mr. BELFORD. Our whole country, from the North to the South, from the East to the West. God has blessed the South with a beautiful climate, with a fertile soil, with magnificent rivers on whose bosoms can float the commerce of this continent.

Now, I hope that the Republican party in the expiring hours of this Congress will have the courage to make these appropriations to the end that our whole country may be made grand and magnificent, that we may teach the South that it is a part of our country, and that she will not again err as she did of old.

Mr. BERRY. Amen! [Great laughter.]

Mr. PAGE. Now I hope that we may have a vote on the pending amendment. I move that the committee rise for the purpose of limiting debate.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. CALKINS having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. CANNON reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 7631) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. PAGE. I now move that when the House again resolves itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of further considering the river and harbor appropriation bill all debate on the pending paragraph and all amendments thereto shall be limited to two minutes.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. Say one minute.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I move to make it twenty minutes.

Many MEMBERS. Vote! Vote!

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will recognize no gentleman until the House shall come to order. [After a pause.] The gentleman from California, the chairman of the Committee on Commerce, moves that when the House again resolves itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the river and harbor appropriation bill all debate on the pending paragraph and all amendments thereto shall be limited to two minutes.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I move to amend so as to make it fifteen minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. VAN VOORHIS].

The amendment was not agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is now upon the motion of the gentleman from California [Mr. PAGE], to limit debate to two minutes.

The question was taken by a viva voce vote; and the Speaker announced that the ayes had it.

Mr. PAGE. I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I call for a division on the last vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman state that he rose in time and called for a division?

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I certainly did. I tried to get a division on my motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Then the question will be again taken.

The House divided upon the motion of Mr. PAGE to limit debate to two minutes; and there were—ayes 146, noes 2.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. No quorum has voted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There was a quorum voting.

Mr. HAZELTON (to Mr. VAN VOORHIS). You voted yourself, and that made up the quorum. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion to limit debate is agreed to.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I could not understand what the Speaker said. I supposed no quorum voted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A quorum did vote.

Mr. PAGE. I now move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the river and harbor bill.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. PAGE, that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, it was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. CANNON in the chair, and resumed the consideration of the river and harbor bill.

Mr. PAGE obtained the floor and said: I yield my two minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX].

Mr. COX, of New York. I want only two minutes to respond to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. BELFORD.] That gentleman has made a very eloquent speech in favor of improving the navigation of our rivers. I know that all the navigation he cares for in Colorado or elsewhere is by artesian wells. [Laughter.] If he will only offer an amendment to strike out "Cheesequake's" and put in "artesian wells," we will bore for him. [Laughter.] I do not see my friend from Colorado here.

Mr. Chairman, I never in my life saw such a reductio ad absurdum as this proposition made here to-night about Cheesequake's. The gentleman from Colorado, a State where there is never any water—for I have been there, and have drank with the gentleman on the top of a stage-coach——

A MEMBER. Drank what? [Laughter.]

Mr. COX, of New York. I do not propose to commit myself on that subject. In the Ohio Valley there is "water, water, everywhere, but not a drop to drink." In Colorado there is no water—only whisky, whisky everywhere.

I want to say to my friend from Colorado that I am proud to see him here making one more speech, although, as it appears, he represents Pennsylvania. I am furnished with a quotation from Macauley which fits his case:

> We knew his purple vestment,
> We knew his crest of flame;
> So even comes Jimminicas
> Of Colorado fame.

[Laughter.]

The pro forma amendment being withdrawn, the question recurred on the amendment of Mr. JONES, of New Jersey, to strike out lines 217 to 224.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 57, noes 77.

Mr. HOLMAN. No quorum.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. HARRIS, of New Jersey, and Mr. JONES, of New Jersey, were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 48, noes 102.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. ANDERSON. I move to strike out lines 217 and 218, containing the appropriation for the improvement of Cheesequake's Creek.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I ask to have read a few lines from the report of the Secretary of War in relation to Cheesequake's Creek.

The CHAIRMAN. No debate is in order.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. ANDERSON, there were—ayes 11, noes 70.

Mr. ANDERSON. No quorum.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. PAGE and Mr. ANDERSON were appointed.

Mr. ANDERSON (during the count by tellers) said: If the gentleman from California [Mr. PAGE] will agree to give us a vote in the House on this proposition, I will withdraw the point in regard to a quorum.

Mr. PAGE. I can not do it; the rules do not allow it.

The committee having divided, the tellers reported—ayes 36, noes 106.

So the amendment of Mr. ANDERSON was not agreed to.

Mr. ANDERSON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. The Clerk, I understand, read last lines 217 and 218 relating to Cheesequake's Creek; he had not read the line relating to Elizabeth River and Mattawan Creek and Mantua Creek.

Mr. WILSON. Oh, yes, he had.

Mr. ANDERSON. They have not been read.

Mr. DUNN. A motion has been voted down to strike them out.

Mr. ANDERSON. I propose, when we reach Mattawan Creek, to make a motion to strike out that appropriation. My parliamentary inquiry is, whether that will not be debatable?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. POUND). The Chair will answer the gentleman's inquiry by directing the Clerk to read, commencing with line 219.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Elizabeth River, New Jersey: Continuing improvement, $5,000.
Improving Mattawan Creek, New Jersey: Continuing improvement, $4,000.

Mr. ANDERSON. Now I move to strike out the clause in regard to Mattawan Creek; and I claim that the motion is debatable.

Mr. PAGE. Oh, no.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate was limited upon the motion of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. JONES] to including these lines.

Mr. ANDERSON. These lines were not before the committee.

Mr. PAGE. Debate was closed upon these four paragraphs.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion to close debate included these lines. The point of order was not made that they had not been read, and it is too late to raise that point now.

Mr. ANDERSON. What is the ruling of the Chair?

The CHAIRMAN. That the motion of the gentleman from New Jersey was to strike out down to and including line 224. The point was not made that these lines had not been read by the Clerk. The motion made by the gentleman from California to limit debate to two minutes included these two lines.

Mr. ANDERSON. My point is that debate could not be closed on lines which had not been read and were not before the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair very distinctly stated they were included in the motion of the gentleman from New Jersey, and no point of order having been made, these lines were not read, and therefore it is now too late to raise that point.

Mr. BRIGGS. The motion was to limit the debate on the pending paragraph and all amendments thereto.

Mr. ANDERSON. That is a fact.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not so understand it.

Mr. ANDERSON. I appeal to the gentleman from California.

Mr. PAGE. My intention was to limit debate on the motion of the gentleman from New Jersey covering the four paragraphs and all amendments thereto. [Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. ANDERSON's motion was disagreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Passaic River, New Jersey: From Pennsylvania Railroad bridge to mouth of river, $15,000.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I move to strike out that paragraph. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BUTTERWORTH] stated that the newspapers have been talking about this bill. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. WASHBURN] said they had been blackguarded about this bill everywhere. Now, I have sought the floor in order that it might be seen who are the blackguards.

In the first place, I suppose the gentleman from Minnesota would place the President of the United States in that category; and, in the second place, that he would place the Secretary of War in the same category. I ask the Clerk to read an extract from the letter of the Secretary of War.

The Clerk read as follows:

IMPROVING CHEESEQUAKE'S CREEK, NEW JERSEY.

Continuing improvement $15,000

The purpose of this appropriation is to improve about three miles of creek by such dredging operations as will secure a navigable channel four feet deep and one hundred feet wide as far back as Whitehead.

The report of the Chief of Engineers shows that the original condition of the channel from the bar or jetty at the mouth gives a depth of one foot at mean low water for about three-fourths of the length to be improved, and for the remaining portion a depth of from four feet to one and one-half feet at low water. The course of the creek is very crooked and requires to be straightened.

The project is a change of the outlet into a direction at right angles to the beach, to sustain this direction by jetties of stone, and to straighten the course of the creek and increase its depth in the upper portions.

The official reports furnish no definite information as to the amount of commerce to be benefited.

Balance in Treasury July 1, 1882	$24,000
Appropriated act August 2, 1882	15,000
Drawn on requisition, July 1 to December 31, 1882	15,000

IMPROVING MATTAWAN CREEK, NEW JERSEY.

Continuing improvement $6,000

From the report of the local engineer it would appear that the object of this improvement is to increase local developments.

The present commerce is small, but he states that "by the proposed enlargement of the channel-way and increased facility for shipping goods it is computed that there would be a growth in the commerce of from one-third to one-half, and that a large portion of Monmouth County would be benefited. Manufacturers would also be induced to locate there, as inquiries have already been made as to whether the creek is easy of access by water."

Balance in Treasury July 1, 1882	$——
Appropriated act August 2, 1882	6,000
Drawn on requisition, July 1 to December 31, 1882	6,000

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I withdraw my amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Woodbridge Creek, New Jersey: Continuing improvement, $1,000.

Mr. ANDERSON. I move to strike that out. Now, Mr. Chairman, while I have confidence, as we all have in any bill reported by the Committee on Commerce, and while I still have that confidence in the members of the committee, nevertheless, I am frank to say my hope has been shattered somewhat and my heart is bruised and bleeding; for, sir, it seems they have been relying on the report of the engineers and the statements which have been made by the Secretary of War, and yet from what has been stated by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. JONES], who is personally familiar with Cheesequake's Creek and Mattawan Creek, who is perfectly familiar with this quartet of New Jersey creeks, which the committee has refused to strike out, that the committee has been misled by false information. He presented the case so clear I conclude the Committee of the Whole will be willing at least to strike out this particular appropriation.

There is no use talking about it, Mr. Chairman, but under the circumstances gentlemen can not justify their action before the country. They may think they can, but they will be unable to do so, because the country will never believe that Cheesequake's Creek is a great national highway.

I have the largest confidence in the judgment of my friend from California, but in this matter it seems to me they have been misled by these engineers, and if so the whole foundation upon which I have rested my hope and vote in regard to the several appropriations as to creeks and other things scattered through this bill is gone.

Now, I should like to know something about Woodbridge Creek.

Mr. PAGE Time is the essence of this bill and of future legislation, and while I am aware that these motions on the part of the gentlemen come from the best motives, I feel if time is unnecessarily taken up in the discussion it will prevent the passage of this or any other bill.

[Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. ANDERSON. It would be quite as well if the committee could have found time when it presented this bill to have given us some information on the subject.

Mr. PAGE. Has not the gentleman's time expired?

The CHAIRMAN. Not entirely.

Mr. ANDERSON. Here in the last week of the session we have had put before us these appropriations for Cheesequake's Creek and the other creeks of the New Jersey quartet. Now comes Woodbridge Creek, and I want to know something about it so I can vote intelligently on the subject.

Mr. HARRIS, of New Jersey. Let me answer the gentleman.

Mr. ANDERSON. It may be all right, but I do not think my friend should insist upon denying to us the right to call for information when this bill is forced upon our attention, when this House ought to be dealing with the reduction of the tariff and other great matters affecting the people, instead of having this strainer full of holes on the river and harbor bill. [Laughter and applause.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. PAGE. I would refer the gentleman to the engineer's report and to the letter of the Secretary of War in reference to this question. That will give him all the information upon the subject that I think he could demand.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Kansas.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Delaware River below Bridesburgh, Pennsylvania: Continuing improvement, $90,000.

Mr. ANDERSON. I move to strike out "ninety" and insert "forty." I want to get some information upon this subject.

Mr. WARD. I think I can explain to the satisfaction of the gentleman the necessity for this. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. PAGE. Let the gentleman examine the engineer's report, which will show.

Mr. ANDERSON. I withdraw the motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Mispillion Creek, Delaware: Continuing improvement, $1,500.

Mr. ANDERSON. Now I move to strike out that paragraph. I want to draw the line somewhere on these little creeks. I want to have some explanation as to the necessity for the improvement of this stream. Where is it?

Mr. WARD. It is not a creek, it is really a part of the Delaware River.

Mr. ANDERSON. Has it any commerce?

Mr. WARD. Yes; that river has $74,000,000.

Mr. ANDERSON. Of what?

Mr. WARD. Commerce.

Mr. ANDERSON. Where from?

Mr. WARD. All the world.

Mr. ANDERSON. I move to strike that out.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. WHITE. I desire to be heard on the motion to strike out lines 250 and 251. I find in the engineer's report, the first volume, page 772, that the exports from this creek, Mispillion Creek, Delaware, for which an appropriation of $1,500 is appropriated in this bill, are stated in full. This is another one of these little creeks and is a very convenient place to put a few thousand dollars into for some purpose.

Mr. O'NEILL. It is about four hundred feet wide.

Mr. WHITE. I find the exports from that creek were white oak timber, 500,000 feet; railroad ties, 30,000; wood, 5,000 cords; bark, 600 tons; wheat, 100,000 bushels; wool, 5,000 pounds; sheepskins,

7,000; hides, 30,000; canned fruits, 54,000. The imports are about 1,000 tons of fertilizers; 2,000 tons of coal, with merchandise of various kinds to the value of $100,000. A little creek over there on the coast of Delaware, and yet here is this great Government expending money for its improvement.

But, Mr. Chairman, the original plan—however, in reference to this creek I should say in the first instance that it was discovered in 1881, on the 3d day of March, by a Democratic Congress. It was never heard of before, although Delaware has been in this Union a long time. This little creek was never discovered until the time that party got into power, as I have said, in 1881. During this time a channel forty to fifty feet wide six feet deep at low water and nine hundred and fifty yards long was made through "Mushpot Shoals." For the completion of the original project which was for six feet of water navigation from the mouth of the creek $3,500 was estimated to be required.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. WHITE. I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair cannot entertain that motion now.

Mr. ANDERSON. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. WHITE. I renew it. I desire to say that the original plan it was estimated required $3,500 to complete the work. Now, that being the case, why does not the committee put that sum in the bill and complete the project at once and get rid of this little creek for the future? I will tell you why it is not done. In this report, page 121, it is said an available entrance depth of four feet at mean low water would cost about $55,000, and a depth of three feet at mean low water would cost $49,000. The intention here, then, is to hold this over until next winter, when a Democratic Congress comes in here, and they will appropriate $10,000 or $20,000 to finish it. But, further, by this second plan it has been discovered you can reach an oyster-bed or a tadpole-pond by having three feet at mean low water, or four feet, at a cost of $55,000. But after a while it will be discovered that by having five feet at mean low water, and then six feet at mean low water, we can do so and so and get to some other point, and appropriations will not diminish for this stream.

I desire to call the attention of this committee to the fact that this country is being taxed by a system of internal taxation that is exceedingly onerous to the people. This Congress is about to expire, and nothing has been done to take these internal-revenue taxes from the people. We sit here and propose to peddle out little sums to these impracticable creeks, not to make a sweeping bill, not to satisfy the whole country, but simply enough to carry the bill through and so to mollify the metropolitan press.

I say, sir, we had better vote down this bill, we had better adjourn and do nothing, than pass this bill and leave the taxes on tobacco where they are, on bank checks where they are, and on other matters that are now taxed. All internal taxes, I should say, except on whisky, should be repealed.

If we are going to have this system of peddling out the money and leaving those taxes, the Republican party will have another load to carry at the next election. I would like to see them delivered from it. They are making a mistake. The President has pointed out the way. He says, "Repeal all the taxes on tobacco; let your river and harbor bill alone; you appropriated more money last year than we know what to do with."

[Here the hammer fell.]

The question being taken on the amendment, it was not agreed to.

The Clerk read lines 252 and 253, as follows:

Constructing pier in Delaware Bay, near Lewes, Delaware: Continuing construction, $2,000.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move to amend by striking out the lines just read.

I have looked in the estimates of the engineers and can find no reference to this amendment whatever. I would like gentlemen either to explain why the item is in this bill or else to strike it out. There is nothing in the reports of the engineers to sustain it.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read lines 257 and 258, as follows:

Improving Corsica Creek, Maryland: Continuing improvement, $5,000.

Mr. ANDERSON. I move to strike out the lines just read. I would like to get a little information about this item. I would like to know how many thousand tons of importations from the other continents enter at this port.

Mr. PAGE. The gentleman will find the information he desires on page 844 of the report of the Chief of Engineers.

Mr. ANDERSON. The gentleman has it before him; let him read it.

Mr. PAGE. I have not time to read it.

Mr. ANDERSON. I am waiting for information. I am asked to vote $5,000 for the improvement of that creek, and I want to know something about it. Furthermore, I question whether I am properly discharging my duty in permitting this House to vote millions of money without a quorum.

Mr. PAGE. I read this from the engineer's report:

There is a good shipping business done to and from this stream. At Centreville Landing there are good wharves and several large warehouses. It is stated on good authority that the shipments of grain amount to 300,000 bushels per annum and are increasing, with large quantities of shells, lime, and general merchandise freighted to the creek.

I have not time to read it all.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Kansas insist on his motion to strike out the paragraph? The Chair understands the gentleman to withdraw it.

Mr. ANDERSON. I have not withdrawn it. I simply sat down, desiring a vote to be taken.

The question being taken on Mr. ANDERSON'S amendment, it was not agreed to.

The Clerk read lines 269 and 270, as follows:

Improving James River, Virginia: Continuing improvement, $50,000.

Mr. WISE, of Virginia. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

Mr. PAGE. Oh, don't!

Mr. WISE, of Virginia. Yes, I must. This, I think, is an amendment to which the chairman of the committee will not object.

The Clerk read the proposed amendment, as follows:

After the word "dollars," in line 270, insert the following:
"On the plan for deepening the channel twenty-two feet at mean low tide."

Mr. WISE, of Virginia. I wish to say——

Mr. PAGE. That does not involve any increase of expenditure. I have no objection to it.

Mr. WISE, of Virginia. That is according to the report of the engineers.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I desire to be heard on the amendment. And first of all I call for order.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I want to be able to hear the Chair and I want the Chair to hear me. There is such confusion in the House that nothing can be heard.

This amendment dictates to the engineers what they shall do. The War Department will carry on this improvement just as it has been carried on. It is not necessary to limit it. For aught I know this may change the entire character of the improvement. I think the amendment ought not to be adopted.

Mr. WISE, of Virginia. I do not think it necessary to answer the gentleman.

The question being taken on the amendment, it was agreed to.

The Clerk read lines 279 to 281, as follows:

Improving Great Kanawha River, West Virginia: Continuing improvement, $120,000.

Mr. KENNA. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the chairman of the committee to the fact that on page 24 of this bill the levying of tolls for operating the work is prohibited, and that the clause making an appropriation for the continuance of the work omits—accidentally, I have no doubt—the language of the bill of last year.

Mr. PAGE. It was an oversight; that should have been inserted.

Mr. KENNA. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 280, after the word "improvement," insert "and operations of the work."

Mr. KENNA. Otherwise the navigation would be prohibited.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON. I desire to offer a further amendment. I send it to the Clerk's desk that it may be read, and upon that I desire to make a statement.

Mr. PAGE. We have not reached your improvement yet.

Mr. WILSON. Mine is not in this bill at all. [Laughter.] You never will reach it.

The Clerk read the proposed amendment, as follows:

Insert after line 281 the following:
"For continuing the improvement of the Little Kanawha River in West Virginia to complete lock and dam as estimated for by engineers, $31,000: Provided, That no part of this amount shall be expended until the Little Kanawha Improvement Company shall have filed with the Secretary of War its agreement not to charge in any manner any tolls for its improved navigation: And provided further, That this appropriation shall be in lieu of the $31,000 appropriated for this work by the last session of Congress.

Mr. WILSON. I desire to get the attention of the Committee on Commerce and more particularly that of the chairman of that committee. At the last session of Congress an appropriation was made of $31,000 for the improvement of this river. The Senate inserted the provision which I have just sent to the Clerk's desk. That amendment passed the Senate. The bill afterward went to a committee of conference, and I have the word of the chairman of the Committee on Commerce that he failed to find that amendment as written, and gave it from his recollection, appropriating $31,000; but in doing so he made a mistake and imposed conditions that the navigation company could not accept.

The lower part of this river has locks and dams upon it. The amendment of the committee of conference provided that no toll at all should be charged upon any part of that river, when in point of fact the object of the Senate provision was that no additional toll should be charged by reason of this improvement.

The Government has already appropriated $50,000 for this work, and $31,000 more will complete it entirely. The $50,000 already appropriated will be lost to the Government unless $31,000 more shall be appropriated.

It was a clear mistake of the committee of conference. I will not repeat what has been stated on the floor of this House so often that there is no part of the United States where there is more valuable timber, in proportion to area of country, than in that Little Kanawha section. I have before me the maps of West Virginia issued by the Census Bureau showing the timber regions of the State. There is a larger area of valuable timber and nearer water transportation in that section than in any other section that I know of.

That timber goes eastward and westward, to New York and to New Orleans. A large amount of the hard wood is shipped all the way by rail to Baltimore, and from there it goes to Europe where it finds a ready sale.

I hope the committee will give this $31,000, heretofore appropriated at the last session of Congress, so that it can be made available. I have expressly provided in my amendment that it shall be in lieu of the $31,000 appropriated at the last session, and that no increased toll shall be charged because of this improvement by the existing improvement company of that river.

Mr. WHITE. I desire to ask a question of the gentleman who offers this amendment. I desire to know whether any money has been already expended to make this improvement, and whether at the last session of Congress any appropriation was made?

Mr. WILSON. Thirty-one thousand dollars was appropriated.

Mr. WHITE. When? At the last session?

Mr. WILSON. Yes.

Mr. WHITE. For this improvement?

Mr. WILSON. For this improvement. I simply desire to apply that same money now; to utilize the $31,000 which was so appropriated, but the navigation company could not comply with the unreasonable requirement and agree to charge no toll on its locks and dams. It is willing to charge no additional toll on account of the improvement the Government may make.

Mr. KENNA. I desire to add only one word to what has been submitted by my colleague [Mr. WILSON.] The work in progress on the Little Kanawha River—and its commercial importance has never been denied on this floor—is of such a character that its discontinuance will necessarily cause an absolute loss to the Government of the money which has already been appropriated. If that work is not completed the money already appropriated will be lost entirely. The sum of $50,000 has been expended upon this river in the construction of locks and dams. The sum of $31,000 more, the amount necessary for the completion of this work, was appropriated at the last session of Congress, but with a condition which prevented its expenditure.

Now, I submit to the House, and especially to the Committee on Commerce, that a modification of that condition, so far as to allow no tolls to be charged on that part of the river made available by virtue of this appropriation, ought under the circumstances to answer every reasonable demand. I hope the amendment will be allowed to go into the bill.

Mr. HEPBURN. Allow me to call attention to the provision in the appropriation bill of last year. It was in this language:

Provided, That no part of this amount shall be expended until the Little Kanawha Improvement Company shall have filed with the Secretary of War, to be approved by him, its agreement not to charge, in any manner, any tolls on the Little Kanawha River.

It will be seen that the proviso in the amendment now offered by the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. WILSON] changes very materially the character of the provision in the bill of last year. It puts before the House and before the country this proposition: that there shall be appropriated $81,000 of the money of the United States to aid a private corporation, the Little Kanawha Improvement Company, to carry on its work.

Mr. WILSON. No, sir.

Mr. HEPBURN. It seems to me that is most unjust; that there can be no proper claim that money should be appropriated out of the Treasury of the United States to aid a private corporation, or that that corporation should be permitted to charge tolls upon this improvement. The sum of $81,000 is a large appropriation, and that is the entire cost of this improvement.

We are asked now, after having voted the public money for this improvement, to permit this private corporation to tax the public commerce on this river; a most unjust and it seems to me iniquitous proposition.

Many MEMBERS. Vote! Vote!

Mr. KENNA. I desire to say in reply to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN], and it seems to be proper that I should do so, that the question which he raises and submits to the House at this time is one that ought to have been submitted and determined by the House, and it was submitted when this work was undertaken.

Now, the sum of $50,000 has been expended upon this improvement, and that amount will be entirely lost to the Government unless the additional sum of $31,000, necessary to complete the work, shall be given. I hope the House will not put itself in the attitude of expending $50,000 on this work uselessly and to no purpose.

Mr. WILSON. One word. I desire to say to the gentleman that he is laboring under a misapprehension. This question was discussed fully in Congress six years ago, and the appropriation was made with all the facts before it in an elaborate and ample report of the Secretary of War.

It was agreed that the work should go on. When I read the clause which had been inserted in the bill I saw that there had been a mistake, and so stated to the chairman of the committee, who told me that he had mislaid the Senate provision and had inserted the provision of the bill from recollection, supposing it was given accurately. But it turned out that it was a mistake.

Mr. HEPBURN. I wish to inquire whether it is not necessary that the commerce of this river should pass through tolled locks in order to reach the portion now in question; and is there any limitation upon the tolls that this company may charge? Is it not true that, although a part of the navigation of the river is free, tolls may be charged without limitation upon the other portion?

Mr. WILSON. There are limitations, strict limitations.

Mr. HEPBURN. What are they? Is the company limited in its charges?

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted.

Mr. HEPBURN. I hope the chairman of the committee will explain this matter.

Mr. WILSON. To-day a proposition was made to appropriate money for a harbor in Michigan where there was, as I understand, a private corporation——

Mr. HORR. No, sir; there is no such item in the bill, nor any that approaches it.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted.

Mr. WHITE. I move to strike out the last word.

In conformity with the provisions of the river and harbor act of August 2, 1882, no part of the appropriations therein made can be expended until the Little Kanawha Improvement Company shall have filed an agreement not to charge in any manner any toll on the Little Kanawha River. This agreement has not yet been filed. Now, while these parties can charge toll the Government ought not to undertake to appropriate money for the improvement of the river.

Mr. WILSON. I have explained that in regard to the provision of last year there was a mistake; the provision which was intended to be inserted was mislaid, and the provision of the bill as it became a law was inserted by the chairman of the committee under a misapprehension.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. WILSON, there were—ayes 11, noes 28.

So the amendment was not agreed to. [Cries of "No quorum!"]

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill.

Mr. WILSON. The point of "no quorum" was made on the last amendment, before the Clerk commenced to read. I understand the gentleman from New York [Mr. VAN VOORHIS] raised the point.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is capable of speaking for himself.

Mr. ANDERSON. I move to amend by striking out in lines 280 and 281 "$120,000" and inserting "$60,000."

The CHAIRMAN. That clause has been passed.

Mr. ANDERSON. But I rose to make this motion when the gentleman from West Virginia rose, and I addressed the Chair to the best of my ability. I rose in time.

Mr. KENNA. I rise to a point of order. I submit that it is too late for the gentleman to make this motion. A gentleman can not sit in his seat pending a proposition and discussion here for an indefinite time, and then say that he rose in time. If he did rise in time, he should have enforced his rights at the time.

Mr. ANDERSON. But the amendment of the gentleman from West Virginia was to perfect the text.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that the point of order is well taken, and the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANDERSON] is too late.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Trent River, North Carolina: Continuing improvement, $5,000.

Mr. HUBBS. I move to amend the clause just read by striking out "$5,000" and inserting "$10,000."

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. VANCE. I move to amend by inserting after the pending clause the following:

Improving French Broad River, North Carolina: Continuing improvement above Smith's Bridge, $3,000.

I appreciate the importance of not detaining the Committee of the Whole, but for some reason the Committee on Commerce has left out the provision for this river. The work is already begun on the French Broad, and about $35,000 have been spent in improving that river. It has been improved from the town of Brevard to Buck Shoals. Work has been ordered below the shoals, from Smith's Bridge, at Asheville, near the railroad depot, to the shoals above. Now, if the Committee of the Whole will agree to this appropriation of $3,000, it will enable us to go up to the shoals; and then we will be willing to wait another year before asking for money to enable us to go through the shoals.

I think this work ought not to be abandoned. It is a modest amount. I ask only $3,000; $38,000 have already been appropriated. I hope there will be no objection to the amount I ask. It will enable boats to connect with the railroads at two points above Ashville, where there are enormous forests of walnut and locust. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from California [Mr. PAGE] interrupts me to say there is an amount of $5,000 already on hand. The gentleman is mistaken. There are only $3,800 of it on hand. I ask the small sum be given to a modest man for a modest country. [Applause.]

Mr. WILSON. I move to strike out the last word. If the other side be disposed for partisan purposes to shape legislation in such a way as to aid and assist the destruction of any Democrat and to break down the Democratic party and to build up the Republican party, I have never seen a more clear instance of that kind than was exhibited a few moments ago. [Cries of "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection, and the pro forma amendment is withdrawn.

The question recurred on Mr. VANCE's amendment.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 26, noes 81.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. No quorum has voted.

Mr. VANCE. I do not make the point of no quorum myself, and I hope the gentleman from New York will not insist on it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from North Carolina as having control of his own amendment, and the Clerk will proceed to read.

The Clerk proceeded with the reading of the bill.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I have made the point of no quorum, and I demand a vote.

Mr. VANCE. I withdraw my amendment, to save further trouble.

The Clerk proceeded with the reading of the bill.

Mr. WHITE. The Clerk has continued reading, although I have shouted at the top of my voice claiming the attention of the Chair. The Clerk began on line 292, and there is where we are now.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I wish the Clerk would be a little more deliberate in his reading. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. WHITE. I desire to move to strike out, in lines 292 and 293, the following words:

Improving Great Pedee River, South Carolina: Continuing improvement, $2,000.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. We do not wish to put this thing through with lightning speed. We wish to know what is going on. [Laughter.]

A MEMBER. You were struck with lightning last fall; enough to satisfy you.

Mr. WHITE. I wish to be heard on my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky will proceed.

Mr. WHITE. I wish to read from the message of the President of the United States. [Laughter and applause].

Mr. ANDERSON. I call for order. I wish to hear the President's message.

Mr. WHITE. The President has told you in his annual message as follows:

But I renew the expression of my conviction that such rapid extinguishment of the national indebtedness as is now taking place is by no means a cause for congratulation; it is a cause rather for serious apprehension.

[Cries of "Vote!"]

Gentlemen do not seem to pay attention to this recommendation of the President. They did not pay attention to his advice last fall, and the gentleman from New York found it out to his sorrow.

Let me proceed with the reading of the message of the President:

It was made apparent in the course of the animated discussions which this question aroused at the last session of Congress that the policy of diminishing the revenue by reducing taxation commanded the general approval of the members of both Houses.

I regret that because of conflicting views as to the best methods by which that policy should be made operative none of its benefits have as yet been reaped.

In fulfillment of what I deem my constitutional duty, but with little hope that I can make valuable contribution to this vexed question, I shall proceed to intimate briefly my own views in relation to it.

Upon the showing of our financial condition at the close of the last fiscal year, I felt justified in recommending to Congress the abolition of all internal-revenue taxes except those upon tobacco in its various forms, and upon distilled spirits and fermented liquors; and except also the special tax upon the manufacturers of and dealers in such articles.

I venture now to suggest that, unless it shall be ascertained that the probable expenditures of the Government for the coming year have been underestimated, all internal taxes, save those which relate to distilled spirits, can be prudently abrogated.

Such a course, if accompanied by a simplification of the machinery of collection, which would then be easy of accomplishment, might reasonably be expected to result in diminishing the cost of such collection by at least two millions and a half of dollars, and in the retirement from office of from fifteen hundred to two thousand persons.

The system of excise duties has never commended itself to the favor of the American people, and has never been resorted to except for supplying deficiencies in the Treasury when, by reason of special exigencies, the duties on imports have proved inadequate for the needs of the Government. The sentiment of the country doubtless demands that the present excise tax shall be abolished as soon as such a course can be safely pursued.

It seems to me, however, that, for various reasons, so sweeping a measure as the total abolition of internal taxes would for the present be an unwise step.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. PAGE. Now let us have a vote.

Mr. WHITE's amendment was rejected.

Mr. WHITE. I move now to strike out "$2,000" and insert "$1,000;" and I propose to read further from this interesting document. [Laughter and applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is inclined to give the widest latitude for legitimate debate.

Mr. WHITE. It is impossible for me to hear the Chair unless gentlemen will keep quiet.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky will hear the Chair.

Mr. WHITE. I am entitled to be heard on my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is willing, as no doubt the committee is, to give the widest range to legitimate debate, but the gentleman from Kentucky is not discussing the question before the committee.

Mr. WHITE. I desire, with all due respect, to say——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky is out of order, and must confine himself to the question before the committee.

Mr. WHITE. I rise to state, with all due respect to the Chair, that if I had been permitted to conclude the passage from the message of the President I would have made this remark about that little appropriation to North Carolina: that it is more important to the people down there that Congress should wipe out the tax on tobacco than to give them $2,000 to be squandered by the Chief Engineer's agent down there. [Cries of "Vote!"]

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 5, noes 90.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. No quorum has voted, and I demand tellers.

Mr. WHITE. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I object to the withdrawal of the amendment. It was my amendment to strike out that section.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky has withdrawn his amendment.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I move an amendment to strike out the entire section.

The CHAIRMAN. That has been already voted down.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I call for a division.

The CHAIRMAN. That amendment was rejected.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. Who made it?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I now move to reduce the amount to $200; and on that I call for a vote.

The question was taken on the amendment of Mr. VAN VOORHIS; and the Chair announced that it was disagreed to.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I demand a division.

Mr. HAZELTON. I make the point of order that a gentleman addressing the Chair must address him from his seat.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I want the Chair to hear me, and I am going to make him hear me.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 8, noes 110.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order being that no quorum has voted, the Chair will appoint tellers.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS and Mr. GUENTHER were appointed tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 9, noes 138.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Saint John's River, Florida: Continuing improvement, $100,000.

Mr. BISBEE. In lines 317 and 318 I move to amend by striking out "100,000" and inserting "150,000."

I am aware, Mr. Chairman, that gentlemen are anxious to come to a vote on this bill. But I have been appealed to and besought by letters, telegrams, and memorials from the merchants, bankers, and other business men of the city of Jacksonville to endeavor to get this Congress to make an increase of appropriations. The estimated cost of this work when completed at the mouth of the Saint John's River is $1,300,000. The work commenced in December, 1880, and at the end of the fiscal year 1882 there had been an increased depth of water obtained on the bar of from three to four and one-half feet with an expenditure of but $225,000. There is no public improvement of the kind in this country, anywhere, so greatly beneficial to commerce, or where such results have been obtained by the expenditure of so small an amount, as have been obtained at the mouth of this river where the work is going on. What is it? It is simply putting in jetties at the mouth of the river to confine the water within its interior limits down to deep water. What do we want? We simply ask for money enough to continue the work without interruption. And on this subject, as it speaks better than I can, I desire to have read so much of this memorial, which I send to the desk, from the business men of Jacksonville as I have marked.

The Clerk read as follows:

Second. In December of 1880, when the work was commenced, the depth of water on the bar was eleven feet. In June of 1882, with an aggregate expenditure of $225,000, the sounding showed from fourteen to fifteen feet, with a much shorter and more direct outlet to deep-sea water.

Third. The cessation of work from June to November of 1882, caused by lack of funds, as shown by the recent report of Captain Post of the engineers, resulted in a subsidence of the shore end of the south jetty and the re-establishment of cross-currents which had been brought under control, thus seriously damaging the jetties and making it necessary to use a large portion of the last appropriation to repair the damage. Captain Post in his report of January 11, 1883, says: "Had additional money been available so as to have prevented the long period of suspension of operations nearly, if not all, of this settlement could have been prevented."

Fourth. There is but one opinion among those who from long experience and practical observation are best able to judge as to the results of the jetties at the entrance of the Saint John's when completed, and that is that they will prove a complete success and assure a depth of water on the bar which will fully meet the expectations of the engineers and prove of incalculable benefit to commerce.

Fifth. It is equally evident and capable of plain and palpable demonstration that until the work is completed and thoroughly secure, if the money already expended is to be preserved and the jetties successfully and economically completed, there must be no interval in the vigorous and vigilant conduct of the work.

Sixth. To illustrate the effect of the hiatus last summer and fall, not only must a large portion of the appropriation of 1882 be expended in repairing the damage caused thereby, but the water has shoaled down from fourteen to twelve feet, where it now stands.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Florida.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I move to strike out in this paragraph "one hundred thousand" and insert "forty thousand."

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 3, noes 146.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. Has a quorum voted? I raise the question and ask that the Chair please to state how many are recorded in the negative.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Pascagoula River, Mississippi: Continuing improvement, $3,000.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I move to strike out "$3,000" in line 329, in order to be able to ask a question of the Chair, whether the Chair intends to show any fair play to the opponents of the bill?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair declines to answer any such question. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. TUCKER. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TUCKER. Without favoring the motion of the gentleman from New York, I think the gentleman is entitled to make the motion which he unquestionably made upon the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to say that he wishes to treat every gentleman fairly; but when a gentleman rises in his place ostensibly to make a motion and then undertakes under cover of the motion to impeach the Chair, the Chair will not recognize that motion any further. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Pearl River, Mississippi, $8,000.

Mr. MANNING. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "dollars," in line 333, insert "$2,000 of which sum to be expended between Batesville and the mouth of the Coldwater."

Mr. McLANE. That is all right.

Mr. MANNING. It does not ask an increase of the amount appropriated, but simply provides how a portion of it shall be expended.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MONEY. I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Noxubee River, Mississippi: Continuing improvement, $8,000.

Mr. MONEY. I wish to say a word on this amendment, without detaining the committee. This appropriation is a continuing one for the improvement of that river. Thirty-five thousand dollars have been already expended with excellent results. I suppose that this was left out of the bill by inadvertence in making it up, or possibly by a typographical or clerical error. This is the only thing I have asked in the whole bill. It is a matter of importance to that section of the country, and I hope the committee will agree to the amendment.

Mr. PAGE. The committee has no authority to accept the amendment.

Mr. MONEY. It is a very important stream. I presume, as I have said, that the committee passed it over inadvertently. I know they could not properly have failed to make the appropriation if attention had been called to it. I ask a vote upon the amendment.

The question was taken.

Mr. MONEY. I demand a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 42, noes 79.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I make the point that no quorum has voted.

Mr. PAGE. I hope the gentleman will not insist upon that point.

Several MEMBERS. Withdraw the amendment.

Mr. MONEY. In order to save the time of the committee, as the amendment has been rejected, I withdraw it.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. CANNON). The gentleman from New York will state it.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I raise the point that after a motion has been voted on it can not be withdrawn except by unanimous consent.

The CHAIRMAN. When the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY] asked leave to withdraw his amendment, there was no objection. An objection would come too late.

The Clerk read the amendment proposed by Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi, as follows:

After line 335 insert the following:
"Improving Tchula Lake, Mississippi: Continuing improvement, $1,500."

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. Tchula Lake is supposed to be the old bay of the Yazoo River. It runs out of the Yazoo almost parallel with it for about one hundred miles and then empties into it again. Twenty thousand bales of cotton are raised on the banks of that river—so says the engineer—10,000 bales of which are carried out through Tchula Lake since the improvement that has been made there. With an appropriation of $4,500 more the whole of those 20,000 bales of cotton would go out through the lake, and not have to be hauled to the Yazoo River through an overflowed swamp in the winter season. And those 20,000 bales of cotton, let it be remembered, are worth $1,000,000, to say nothing of the cotton-seed that is carried out and the freight that is carried back. We have no railroads there, and the water transportation is our only chance to get cotton to market. I only ask for $1,500, conforming myself to the principle established by the Committee on Commerce of giving only one-third of the amount recommended by the engineers in charge. We want you to give us this small sum of money to continue the improvement of this Lake Tchula.

Mr. BROWNE. Does the gentleman's statement include also the value of the cotton-ties?

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. That is a question to be considered hereafter.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Ohio. The engineers are all honest fellows and everybody knows they never make an estimate above the amount of money they ought to have. That is characteristic of them. It is part of their profession. I suggest we make the amount $4,500 that the estimate of the engineers may be fully complied with.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio offer this as an amendment?

Mr. ROBINSON, of Ohio. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Mississippi accept that amendment as a modification of his amendment?

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. I will accept it if it does not endanger the passage of my amendment. If the House chooses to vote that I will not object.

The question being taken on the amendment proposed by Mr. ROBINSON, of Ohio, to the amendment, it was not agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SINGLETON].

Mr. ANDERSON. It seems to me that is a case which ought to recommend itself favorably to the committee. I should like to say a word in favor of the amendment of the gentleman from Mississippi.

Now here is a case in which there are no railroads near at hand; where there is a large agricultural population, where there is a large cotton crop to be moved, and we all know very well that some of the men growing that crop are men who enlist the sympathies certainly of this side of the House as well as that.

It so happens, Mr. Chairman, that the committee did not attend to this particular case. It so happens that there are some of the weak ones of God Almighty who happen to be down there. Here is an opportunity of benefiting them.

Mr. HORR. To whom do you refer?

Mr. ANDERSON. The gentleman knows very well to whom I refer. I refer to the freedmen there. Here is a chance for the committee to do a little bit of generosity and justice. I ask the committee to let this drop in for the benefit of these men. I do very much hope the amendment of the gentleman from Mississippi will be adopted.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi, there were—ayes 65, noes 83.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read lines 336 to 340, as follows:

Improving Red River, Louisiana: Continuing improvement from the Atchafalaya to Fulton, Arkansas, including its tributaries above Black River, and for closing the outlet of the river known as "Sale and Murpli's Canal," $50,000.

Mr. WHITE. I move to strike out all after the word "for," in line 338, and to insert "conveying the waters of the Red River into the Atchafalaya, $50,000;" so that it will read:

Improving Red River, Louisiana: Continuing the improvement from the Atchafalaya to Fulton, Arkansas, including its tributaries above Black River, and for conveying the waters of the Red River into the Atchafalaya, $50,000.

Now, Mr. Chairman, all that region of country around the Grand Lake and along the waters of the Atchafalaya is practically a swamp, except so much of it as is permanently above high water. The Red River, however, in emptying itself into the Mississippi River causes destructive floods below the mouth of the Red River. This is the only way of removing that difficulty. If it were not for this engineering to make the Red River empty itself into the Mississippi it would naturally empty itself through the Têche or the Atchafalaya into the Gulf.

Now, sir, if we are going to legislate to change the topography of the country, if we are going to legislate and determine in this bill which way the river ought to flow, what we are going to stop up, and what we are to leave open, I propose to put my views on record now; that if we are ever to stop the overflow in the Mississippi River Valley it will be by leaving the Arkansas River, the Red River, and all the rivers west of the Mississippi and south of the Saint Francis to run in one or two or three, if need be, principal channels into the Gulf of Mexico.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The question being taken on Mr. WHITE's amendment, it was not agreed to.

The Clerk read the following:

Improving Buffalo Bayou, Texas: Continuing improvement, $30,000.

Mr. JONES, of Texas. I move to amend by inserting after the clause just read that which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Matagorda Bay at the mouth of Saint Mary's Bayou, near the town of Matagorda, Texas, $10,000.

Mr. JONES, of Texas. I shall occupy the attention of the committee for but a moment. This proposed improvement was thoroughly considered by the Committee on Commerce and was not favorably reported only because it was a new work.

Mr. PAGE. That is all.

Mr. JONES, of Texas. Its importance was conceded, but the committee felt unwilling to incorporate into the present bill any new work, and for that reason only the appropriation was not included in this bill. Now, I desire to say that past neglect is a very poor excuse for continuing it. In support of this proposition as to the importance of the work I read from the engineers' report:

Matagorda is a town of five hundred inhabitants, is situated on the left bank of Saint Mary's Bayou at its mouth, and is the county seat of Matagorda County. According to the statements of its citizens it was once a thriving town, with a depth of channel across the bar of three and a half or four feet, but during the gradual shoaling of the entrance of the bayou has dwindled into insignificance. The soil of Matagorda County is black and red loam, and is very fertile. It is principally a cotton-growing and cattle-raising county and produced last year 12,000 bales of cotton, which, on account of the shoal water on the bar, was carried by rail to market.

The estimate by the engineer for the effectual accomplishment of the work proposed is the small sum of $10,000, and I hope the amendment will be adopted.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read the following:

Improving Arkansas River, Arkansas: Continuing improvement at Pine Bluff, $15,000.

Mr. ANDERSON. I move to amend by inserting after the clause just read the following:

Improving Kansas River, $25,000.

That stream is one hundred and twenty miles long. It has been neglected.

Mr. DUNN. The paragraph just read relates to the Arkansas River. Is the Kansas a tributary of the Arkansas?

Mr. ANDERSON. No, sir.

Mr. DUNN. What does it run into?

Mr. ANDERSON. It runs into the Missouri River at Kansas City. It drains the Kansas Valley.

Mr. PAGE. It is not in the estimates.

Mr. ANDERSON. That may be; but it has been surveyed. I am very frank to say that if the money was mine, I would not expend any $25,000 in trying to make this a navigable stream. I do not wish to mislead the committee in any regard as to my opinion about it.

Mr. BAYNE. Will the gentleman permit me——

Mr. ANDERSON. Not now. There is a great deal more water in this stream, it has a finer capacity for improvement, than very many of the streams for which appropriations are made in this bill.

More than that, if it were improved as the Kanawha River has been so as to make it a navigable stream by the use of dams and locks, so as to have still-water navigation, it would afford a competitive check on the Kansas Pacific Railroad and on the Atchinson, Topeka and Santa Fé Railway.

I do not urge it on the ground that in my judgment it would be advisable for the United States Government to attempt the improvement of the Kansas River, unless it should expend about a million of dollars. But when this bill is made up for the purpose of distributing money among the different States, I should think that upon that principle it was entirely proper and fair that this initial appropriation should be given to the great State of Kansas. That is the only ground upon which I place the amendment.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read the following:

Improving Fourche Le Fevre River, Arkansas: Continuing improvement, $3,000.

Mr. WILSON. I desire to offer an amendment, and before I send it up I desire to say—and I want to get particularly the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Commerce—it is the same proposition which I before offered, except that I have reduced the amount of the appropriation from $31,000 to $25,000.

It was charged by a gentleman a while ago that no improvement had been made upon any river which had locks and dams upon it. Now, I desire to say that there are two rivers, one entirely in West Virginia, the Little Kanawha, and the other partly in West Virginia and partly in Pennsylvania, the Monongahela River, both of which streams have locks and dams on the lower parts of the streams. They are exactly of the same character of improvement, and in the same condition before Congress and the country except this; there was an arrangement made between the Monongahela Improvement Company and the Government that they should build alternate locks and dams.

I ask the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Commerce [Mr. PAGE] to what I am stating. I say that these two rivers occupy the same relation, both having locks and dams on the lower parts of the rivers. Congress at the last session made an appropriation for the Monongahela River, and reported an appropriation for the Little Kanawha River.

As I stated awhile ago, I was told by the chairman of the Committee on Commerce that they did not insert the Senate provision in the bill because when they came to confer upon the subject that provision had been mislaid or lost; but he gave it from recollection, and believed that he gave the substance of the Senate amendment.

Mr. PAGE. I do not remember that.

Mr. WILSON. That was the assurance given to me by the gentleman from California who now has the honor to preside over the Committee on Commerce.

Here are two improvements. Congress gave to the Monongahela River $25,000; I have the law before me. And now I claim that in lieu of the $31,000, which Congress last year appropriated to the Little Kanawha, we ought now at least to have $25,000. Understand that I do not ask to take another dollar out of the Treasury, except $25,000 of the $31,000 that was appropriated last year.

Now, if the House shall determine not to do that it will be a discrimination in favor of other streams and against the Little Kanawha.

I therefore offer the following amendment:

Continuing the improvement of the Little Kanawha River, in West Virginia: To complete lock and dam, as estimated for by engineers, $25,000: Provided, That no part of this amount shall be expended until the Little Kanawha Improvement Company shall have filed with the Secretary of War, to be approved by him, its agreement not to charge, in any manner, any tolls for this improved navigation: Provided further, That this appropriation shall be in lieu of the $31,000 appropriated for this work at the last session of Congress.

This amendment is the provision which was intended to be inserted in the bill of last year, but the amount is curtailed from $31,000 to $25,000.

The amendment of Mr. WILSON was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Cumberland River, Tennessee: Continuing improvement above Nashville, $18,000; continuing improvement below Nashville, $5,000.

Mr. HOUSE. I move to amend the clause just read by striking out "$5,000" and inserting "$16,000." This additional appropriation of $11,000 for continuing improvement below Nashville will entirely complete this work. If it be not given now the work will hardly be commenced before it must be stopped. I hope the Committee on Commerce will not object to this amendment. When the last river and harbor bill was under consideration in this House the committee promised that on the next bill a sufficient amount would be given to complete this work.

The amendment was agreed to; there being—ayes 53, noes 49.

Mr. McMILLIN. I move to amend by striking out "$18,000" and inserting "$52,000" for continuing the improvement above Nashville. It will require only $52,000 to complete the work according to the plan heretofore adopted.

Mr. STEELE. I make a point of order on that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. SIMONTON. I move to amend by inserting the following paragraph:

Improving the Big Hatchie River, Tennessee: Continuing improvement, $5,000.

The amount estimated for the improvement of this stream is $30,000. About $16,500 have been expended, opening the river for navigation for two hundred and thirteen miles. The estimate for the next year is $10,000. My amendment asks for an appropriation of $5,000. I am inclined to think, from the votes given, that there may be some hesitation on the part of the committee in voting for this amendment——

Mr. PAGE. Let us have a vote.

Mr. SIMONTON. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Ohio River: Continuing improvement, $250,000.

Mr. MOREY. I move to amend by inserting after the clause just read the following:

Provided, however, That not more than $40,000 of this appropriation shall be expended on the Davis Island dam.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. This amendment I understand the committee agreed to accept.

Mr. MOREY. This is the official estimate.

Mr. BAYNE. I believe that later estimates have been put in. Let the amendment be modified so as to provide that the amount appropriated for this work shall be in accordance with the estimates.

Mr. KENNA. The amount should be definitely stated.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I ask my colleague [Mr. MOREY] whether the amendment does not name the amount estimated?

Mr. MOREY. Yes, sir; the estimate is $40,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WHITE. I move the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the following (lines 369 and 370):
"Improving Kentucky River, Kentucky: Continuing improvement, $50,000."

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Chairman, I read from page 257 of the report of the Secretary of War:

Improvement of Kentucky River and of Tradewater River, Kentucky; of Big Sandy River, Kentucky and West Virginia; and of Guyandotte and Little Kanawha Rivers, West Virginia.

Officer in charge, Major James W. Cuyler, Corps of Engineers.

1. Kentucky River, Kentucky.—The present project for this improvement is to reconstruct the old State slackwater works in the lower one hundred miles of river, and to continue the slackwater system of navigation to the "Three Forks," one hundred and fifty-eight miles farther up, by the construction of entirely new works. This project has been so far carried into execution as to reopen to navigation, by the operations of the year just closed, the four lower old works, thus improving the lower eighty-two miles of river.

This leaves one hundred and seventy-five miles of the river. Now the engineer says that this work is entire and permanent.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. I rise to a question of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. It is this: we have passed from that appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order comes too late. Beside that, the gentleman from Kentucky reserved the right to offer this amendment stating he rose in time.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. I make the point of order that the gentleman from Kentucky can not reserve any right to go back in the bill, and we had gone beyond this point.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois will give his attention to the Chair. The gentleman from Kentucky stated he rose and addressed the Chair in time.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. But the committee had gone beyond that point.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky made that statement, and after his amendment had been offered he proceeded to debate it. The point of order therefore comes too late.

Mr. WHITE. I hope this will not come out of my time.

Major Cuyler, who has charge of this work, lives in Cincinnati. The money in my opinion is being squandered on that river. The attention of the Engineer Corps has been called to that fact, but it does no good. This $50,000 to continue a work where there is one hundred and seventy-six miles yet to be completed, is a mere drop in the bucket. It had better stop entirely than to continue the force there and allow such an error or such a disastrous waste of money as the proof abundantly shows occurred the year before last and last year, and I therefore move, although it is in my own State, to strike it out.

Mr. WHITE'S motion was agreed to.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I now renew my motion that the committee rise.

Mr. PAGE. I hope not.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I hope they will.

Mr. PAGE. I hope they will vote it down.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 48, noes 68.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I make the point that no quorum has voted.

The CHAIRMAN. No quorum is required on the motion to rise.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Ohio River: Continuing improvement, $250,000.

Mr. WILLIS. I move to add the following:

Of which amount not exceeding $40,000 may be used for continuing the improvement of the Indiana Chute Falls of the Ohio.

I desire to say this amendment does not involve the increase of the bill a single dollar. It only asks in the discretion of the engineer this amount may be used upon one of the most important points on the Ohio River.

I could elaborate and give the facts connected with this improvement, but I do not wish to take up the time of the committee. As it does not involve an increase and as it leaves the whole matter to the discretion of the engineer, I hope the amendment will be accepted.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. The engineer could now use $100,000 there if he sees fit. He will use it in his discretion, and I agree that that is a point of importance.

Mr. WILLIS. I have just received a letter from Colonel Merrill that under this bill he does not think he has discretion, for the reason that this Ohio Falls improvement is in a separate part of the estimates. As this covers the Ohio River in generic terms, he thinks without some further legislation he will not be allowed to use his discretion.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I will say to my friend it is the first time he has ever put that construction on it. We had a controversy over this last year and the year before, and it was then agreed he could in his discretion use what he pleased on the Indiana chute.

Mr. DAWES. He can use the whole amount there now if he chooses to do so, but this designation is injustice to twenty or thirty other places on the Ohio River. [Cries of "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair suggests the gentleman had better make his amendment in the shape of a further proviso, as this has been already amended on the motion of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MOREY].

Mr. WILLIS. I will modify my amendment so as to insert, at the end of line 372, as follows:

And provided further, An amount not exceeding $40,000 may be used for continuing the improvement of the Indiana Chute Falls in the Ohio.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I ask for a division.

The CHAIRMAN. The noes have it.

Mr. WILLIS. I do not wish to take up the time of the committee.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky. I move the following amendment:

After the word "dollars," in line 372, add "$50,000 of said $250,000 to be expended at the Grand Chain, or so much thereof as may be necessary to provide five feet of water at low-water mark."

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky, addressed the committee. [See Appendix.]

Mr. DAWES. Mr. Chairman, I want to protest against the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky. It is a discrimination in favor of any part of the Ohio River. There is more water now over the Grand Chain than there is over three or four hundred miles of the Ohio River above.

Mr. THOMAS. I desire to be heard for a moment in support of this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted.

Mr. THOMAS. Then I move to strike out the last word.

As the gentleman from Kentucky states, the Grand Chain is an obstruction in the shape of a chain of rocks extending entirely across the Ohio River from seventeen miles above its mouth to about twenty-three miles above its mouth. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. DAWES] states that there is more water over the Grand Chain than there is over points in the river one hundred miles above.

Mr. DAWES. I refer to that part of the river above Cincinnati.

Mr. THOMAS. That may be very true. But below Cincinnati are some of the largest tributaries of the river.

Mr. DAWES. But we have more commerce above than below.

Mr. THOMAS. No, you have not. That is a mistake. We have three times as much below as you have above. All the commerce of the Tennessee River, all of the Cumberland River, all the commerce of the Green River, of the Wabash River, and the Ohio, seeking an outlet into the Mississippi River, has to pass over this dangerous reef of rocks known as the Grand Chain.

There have been $250,000 spent on the work, which is yet incomplete. Fifty thousand dollars more will give six feet of water over that dangerous shoal. The most of the work has been done. It has run down until there is but a very small portion remaining to be removed, but that portion of the obstruction is as complete and perfect an obstruction to the navigation of the river as if the whole chain remained there and not a dollar had been spent upon it. I shall be glad, if it meets the approval of this committee, and I think common justice demands it, that a part of this appropriation should be designated specially to complete this great work. Gentlemen talk about the commerce of the river. There was $768,000,000 of commerce on the Ohio River last year that had to pass over these dangerous rocks, where millions of dollars in steamboat and flat-boat property and produce of all kinds floated on the waters of that river has been wrecked and destroyed. It is absolutely important to the navigation of the river that this work should be done promptly. I hope the amendment will be agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Kentucky.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 56, noes 43.

Mr. DAWES. No quorum has voted.

Mr. BAYNE. I could have raised that question if I had chosen on the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio. I hope it will not now be insisted upon.

Mr. KENNA. I hope the gentleman will withdraw the point of order. He does not want to defeat the bill.

Mr. DAWES. There is $50,000 taken away here from the improvement of the river for this specific point; I object to it.

Mr. KENNA. But you will defeat the whole bill.

Mr. McCOOK. If in order I would move that the committee rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The point being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will order tellers.

Mr. DAWES. If it can be distinctly understood that we may take a separate vote on this amendment in the House I will withdraw the point.

Mr. BRIGGS. I make the point that no quorum has voted.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will appoint tellers.

Mr. BRIGGS, and Mr. TURNER of Kentucky, were appointed tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 75, noes 39.

Mr. BRIGGS. No quorum.

Mr. PAGE. I hope the gentleman will not insist upon that point.

Mr. BRIGGS. I do not propose that this bill shall pass this House, after the proceedings that I have witnessed here, unless it passes by a quorum.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I move that the committee rise.

Mr. PAGE. Pending that I ask the Clerk to call the roll.

Several MEMBERS. Regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan submits a privileged motion, and is in order.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 86, noes 57.

Mr. PAGE. Tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. PAGE, and Mr. BURROWS of Michigan, were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 60, noes 65.

So the motion that the committee rise was not agreed to.

Mr. PAGE. I now ask the Clerk to call the roll.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. The point of no quorum is still pending.

Mr. PAGE. I would like to ask the gentleman from Michigan if he would consent that we may take a recess until 10 o'clock to-morrow, in order to facilitate business?

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I have no objection.

Mr. PAGE. With the understanding that when the House meets again at that hour we go at once into Committee of the Whole on this bill. If unanimous consent can be given in the committee that this proceeding shall be had in the House, I will make the motion that the committee rise now.

Mr. KENNA. I hope that will be done.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not competent for the committee to make an agreement of that kind. It can only be made in the House.

Mr. KENNA. An agreement may be made in the committee which will be carried out in the House. It is all a matter of understanding.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I suggest that there will not be a quorum here in the morning.

The CHAIRMAN. The point being made that no quorum has voted, and the committee having refused to rise, there is only one thing in order under the rule—a call of the roll.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I hope the proposition of the gentleman from California will be agreed to. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order. There is nothing in order under the rule except to call the roll.

Mr. KENNA. I ask unanimous consent to make a statement.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection to the gentleman from West Virginia making a suggestion.

Mr. KENNA. If this roll-call commences, it is in accordance with the experience of every gentleman here that in the end it accomplishes no practical purpose. It results in keeping us here all night. The friends of the bill do not want to abandon it, and they do not desire that it shall stand in the way of the other business of the session. Can it not then be agreed that a recess shall be taken till 10 o'clock; and when we convene any gentleman will then have the same privilege of raising the question of a quorum?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would suggest again to the gentleman that it is not competent for the committee to make any agreement touching the matter.

Mr. KENNA. I understand that. But an understanding might be arrived at here which would be carried out in the House.

Mr. HISCOCK. If I may be allowed, I desire to make a single suggestion that I think will solve the difficulty. It is that we take a recess until to-morrow morning at 10 o'clock, with the understanding that there shall be an adjournment at 5 minutes before 11.

Mr. BRAGG. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not competent for the committee to make such an agreement, and if it were the gentleman from Wisconsin objects.

Mr. TALBOTT. What is the regular order?

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is to call the roll.

The Clerk proceeded to call the roll; when the following-named members failed to answer:

Armfield,	Browne,	Cornell,	Dowd,
Atherton,	Brumm,	Cox, Samuel S.	Dugro,
Atkins,	Buck,	Cox, William R.	Ermentrout,
Barbour,	Buckner,	Crapo,	Farwell, Chas. B.

Lewis,	Pacheco,	Speer,	Wood, Benjamin
Lindsey,	Parker,	Stone,	Wood, Walter A.
Mackey,	Pettibone,	Taylor, Ezra B.	Young.

The committee rose; and Mr. CALKINS having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. CANNON reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union having under consideration the river and harbor appropriation bill found itself without a quorum, whereupon he caused the roll to be called, and he now reported the names of the absentees to the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union reports that that committee having found itself without a quorum he caused the roll to be called and certain members failed to respond to their names. Under the rule those names will be entered on the Journal.

Mr. WHITE. I ask that Mr. JOYCE, and Mr. HARRIS of Massachusetts, be excused on account of——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That request is not now in order.

Mr. ELLIS. Does the roll-call show a quorum?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that 158 members answered to their names.

Mr. KENNA. I rise to a question of order.

LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA] is recognized for the question of order. But pending that, the Chair desires to make an announcement.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. O'NEILL] withdraws from further service on the committee of conference upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7482), the legislative appropriation bill. The Chair appoints the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] in his place.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PAGE. The roll-call having disclosed a quorum——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA] is recognized.

Mr. KENNA. I rise for the purpose of making an inquiry to ascertain the regularity of our proceedings. I understood the Chair to announce that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union found itself without a quorum. I desire to ascertain the manner or method by which that statement can be justified when the roll-call shows the committee found itself with a quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA] that under the rule, when the roll has been called in Committee of the Whole, even though it discloses the presence of a quorum, the announcement must be made in the House by the chairman of the Committee of the Whole. And the rule provides that in that case the House shall immediately return into Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. Would a motion to adjourn be now in order?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A motion to adjourn would now be in order.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I make that motion.

Mr. KENNA. I make the point of order that the Chair can not recognize anybody but the chairman of the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HAZELTON (to Mr. KENNA). You were recognized yourself a moment ago.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No debate is necessary on the point of order, for it has been decided several times. The Speaker of the House has always held that a motion to adjourn, being a motion of the highest privilege, is in order, even though the Committee of the Whole may have risen informally. The Chair entertains the motion.

Mr. PAGE. I ask the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] to withdraw his motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman from California [Mr. PAGE] rise?

Mr. PAGE. It is for the purpose of asking the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] to withdraw his motion that the House now adjourn. There are only seven or eight pages of the bill left to be read through. There is a quorum here, and I ask that we be allowed to go on and read through the bill, and then we will adjourn without calling the previous question on the bill or taking any vote on the bill until to-morrow.

Several MEMBERS. Regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order being demanded, the House will be in order. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] moves that the House now adjourn.

Mr. BAYNE. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. BAYNE. I desire to move that the House now take a recess until to-morrow morning at 10 o'clock.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That motion is not now in order. The regular order being called for, the Chair must put the question on a motion to adjourn.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 56, noes 84.

Before the result of the vote was announced,

Mr. BRAGG called for the yeas and nays.

Mr. WASHBURN. I hope the gentleman will withdraw the call for the yeas and nays; and I would like to make a motion that the House take a recess until to-morrow morning at 10 o'clock.

Mr. HEPBURN. I desire to raise the question whether a quorum voted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A quorum is not necessary on a motion to adjourn. The question is on ordering the yeas and nays on the motion to adjourn.

The question was taken; and there were 11 in the affirmative—not one-fifth of the last vote.

Mr. BRAGG. I call for tellers on ordering the yeas and nays.

The question was taken on ordering tellers; and there were but 5 in the affirmative—not one-fifth of a quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Tellers are refused, the yeas and nays are refused, and the motion to adjourn is not agreed to. Under the rule the House will now go into Committee of the Whole, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] will resume the chair.

The Committee of the Whole accordingly resumed its session, Mr. CANNON in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. TURNER]. On the last vote on that amendment by tellers no quorum voted. The vote will be again taken, and the tellers will resume their places.

Mr. BRIGGS, and Mr. TURNER of Kentucky, resumed their places as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 43, noes 44.

Mr. BRAGG. No quorum has voted.

Mr. PAGE. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. CALKINS having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. CANNON reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 7631) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. PAGE. I move that the House now adjourn.

Mr. HARRIS, of New Jersey. Before that motion is put I desire to ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD some additional remarks on the river and harbor bill.

There was no objection, and leave was granted accordingly. [See Appendix.]

The motion of Mr. PAGE was then agreed to; and accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 15 minutes a. m., Thursday, March 1) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By the SPEAKER: The petition of the Bookbinders Protection Association of the city of New York and vicinity, against a reduction of the tariff on books—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. CASSIDY: Memorial of the Legislature of Nevada, asking for an appropriation for the sinking of artesian wells in that State—to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. W. R. COX: The petition of citizens of North Carolina, for establishing a post-office at Wall's Cross-Roads, Franklin County, North Carolina—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. McKINLEY: The resolutions adopted by Youngstown (Ohio) Lodge No. 14, Amalgamated Association of Iron and Steel Workers, in favor of a protective tariff and against the Senate bill—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. REED: The petition of citizens of Maine, protesting against the transfer of the revenue-marine service to the Navy Department—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. J. B. RICE: The petition of ship-owners and masters of vessels of Sandusky; of keeper and crew of life-boat station No. 9, Point Marblehead; and of citizens of Ottowa County, Ohio, protesting against the transfer of the revenue-marine service to the Navy Department—severally to the same committee.

Also, the petition of the citizens of Huron, Ohio, asking for an appropriation for the improvement of the harbor at that place—to the same committee.

By Mr. STEELE: The petition of P. H. Goodlander and H. E. Wallace, officers of Glen Grange, Wabash, Indiana, against any increase of postage on fourth-class matter—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, March 1, 1883.

The Senate met at 10 o'clock a. m.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury transmitting a copy of a letter addressed to the Secretary of the Navy of the 21st ultimo, respecting the propriety of selling the naval and marine hospitals and grounds at Chelsea, Massachusetts; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

COURT OF CLAIMS JUDGMENTS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following letter from the Clerk of the Court of Claims; which was ordered to lie on the table:

UNITED STATES COURT OF CLAIMS, CLERK'S OFFICE,
Washington, February 28, 1883.

SIR: I beg leave to substitute the inclosed statement of judgments of the Court of Claims for the year ending December 3, 1882, for the one sent to you at the beginning of the present session, which I am informed was for the previous year.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

ARCHIBALD HOPKINS,
Chief Clerk.

To the PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a telegram in the nature of a memorial from the Legislature of California, which will be read:

The memorial was read, as follows:

SACRAMENTO, CAL., February 28, 1883.

The President pro tempore of the United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Assembly concurrent resolution No. 47.

Whereas the line of mail steamships now covering the route between San Francisco, New Zeland, and Sydney, New South Wales, via Honolulu, has been of great advantage to our country, and especially so to the Pacific coast thereof; and

Whereas this steamship line has been maintained mostly by the assistance of payments made by the above-named colonies for carrying the mails, the contracts for such payments terminating in November next: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That this Legislature urges upon Congress the necessity in the interest of American commerce and as matter of equity to our colonial neighbors, who have thus far borne the expense of this mutually beneficial mail service, of assisting in its maintenance by such liberal payment for the carriage of the New Zeland and Australia mails as their wisdom may suggest, having in view the benefit we receive from the regular commercial intercourse afforded thereby as well as by the increasing tide of travel from the colonies through our country to Europe.

Resolved, That his excellency the governor be requested to forward by telegraph to the President pro tempore of the United States Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives a copy of the foregoing resolution, with the request that they consider and take action upon the same immediately.

E. L. THOMPSON,
Secretary of State of California.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I move that the memorial be referred to the Committee on Appropriations. I propose to ask for an appropriation in the deficiency bill for the purpose of carrying it out.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. I present a joint resolution of the General Assembly of the State of Missouri, in which it is—

Resolved by the General Assembly of the State of Missouri, That the improvement of the Mississippi River, with navigable tributaries, in the interests of commerce and cheap transportation, is of such vast importance to all the people of the Mississippi Valley that every honorable means should be used to obtain such appropriations from the National Government as will be necessary to vigorously continue the work commenced; and to this end our Senators and Representatives in Congress are respectfully requested to use their best endeavors to secure the appropriations for the next fiscal year which are recommended by the Mississippi River Commission and by the United States engineers in charge of the several works which are now being carried forward.

Introduced in the Senate and passed by a unanimous vote, February 26, 1883.

R. A. CAMPBELL,
President Senate.

H. A. NEWMAN,
Assistant Secretary Senate.

Introduced in the House and passed by a unanimous vote, February 26, 1883.

J. S. RICHARDSON, Speaker.
JOHN A. HANNAY, Chief Clerk.

The resolution was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a memorial of the Legislature of the Territory of Arizona favoring the appointment of a commissioner to investigate matters at Papago reservation; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HALE. It is very important that the appropriation bills should be pushed along, and I should be glad to call up the sundry civil bill in order to proceed with it at once.

Mr. INGALLS and others. That is right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine asks unanimous consent to dispense with the morning business with a view of calling up the sundry civil appropriation bill. Does the Chair hear any objection? The Chair hearing none, the question is, Will the Senate take up the sundry civil appropriation bill?

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 7595) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes.

Mr. HALE. I ask that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read and the amendments of the Committee on Appropriations will be first acted on before general amendments are received. That will be the order if there be no objection.

Mr. EDMUNDS. All questions of order are reserved about all the amendments. I suppose any such thing it is not necessary to state.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No, it is not necessary; but all questions of order are reserved.

The Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, I rise to a question of privilege to make a personal statement. February 27 I was appointed by the Chair a member of the committee of conference upon the bill (H. R. 5538) to reduce internal revenue taxation——

Mr. EDMUNDS. I appeal to the Senator to suspend a moment until the chairman of the Committee on Finance can come in.

Mr. BAYARD. I would greatly prefer it, but seeing an appropriation bill of some length taken up I thought it better that I should make a statement before the Senate. I would not object to waiting a short while. I wish to make the statement as early as I can.

Mr. INGALLS. The chairman of the Committee on Finance has been sent for.

Mr. EDMUNDS. He will be here in a moment.

Mr. HALE. We can proceed with the appropriation bill until he comes in.

Mr. BAYARD. I will delay with great pleasure until he is here.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The first amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations was, in the appropriations "Under the State Department," in line 18, after the word "employés," to strike out "5,000" and insert "7,500;" so as to make the clause read:

For international exchanges, Smithsonian Institution: For expenses of the international exchanges between the United States and foreign countries, in accordance with the Paris convention of 1877, including salaries and compensation of all necessary employés, $7,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 20, before the word "hundred," to strike out "four" and insert "five;" and in line 22, after "thousand," to insert "five hundred;" so as to make the clause read:

For salary of the secretary of legation at Vienna, $1,500; and the salary of the consul-general at Vienna for the fiscal year 1884 shall be only $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to line 30.

INTERNAL-REVENUE AND TARIFF DUTIES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair informs the Senator from Delaware that the chairman of the Committee on Finance is now present in the Chamber.

Mr. BAYARD. I observe that the chairman of the Committee on Finance and the other members of the committee of conference on which I was appointed are now present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Delaware rises to a question of privilege.

Mr. BAYARD. I desire to state that on the 27th of February I was appointed a member of a committee of conference upon the tax and tariff measure, and held myself ready at once to proceed with the objects of the conference. For that purpose I and my associate upon the committee, the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK], remained in the Capitol until 10 o'clock at night on Tuesday, when the Senate conferees adjourned because of the absence of the House conferees, the chairman of which could not then be found.

We met by appointment at 10 o'clock yesterday morning. At that time the House had not refilled its complement of conferees, and we adjourned subject to the call of the chairman. We met again yesterday at 4 o'clock and adjourned until half past 7, and meeting then continued in session until half past 10, when the Senator from Kentucky and I, obeying as we believed the instruction of the resolution of the Senate adopted yesterday, retired from the conference. I propose individually, and not representing a majority of the committee, to make a statement why we did so. The Senate will perceive that by the resolution of yesterday it was—

Resolved, That it is the opinion of the Senate that the conference on House bill No. 5538 should be full and free, and that if the Senate conferees become advised that any limitation has been placed by the House upon the action of their conferees——

Mr. SHERMAN. I rise to a question of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio will state his question of order.

Mr. SHERMAN. I respectfully submit to the Chair whether the Senator, unless he appears on behalf of a committee of the body, has a right to make this question or present this matter to the Senate. A minority of a committee have no right to make a report. Unless the Senator can say that he appears——

Mr. BAYARD. The Senator is mistaken. I am not proposing to make a report; I am merely proposing as a personal question and as a matter of privilege to report to the Senate why I am in the Senate and not in session upon the committee of conference, a matter personal to myself, a matter of privilege. I am not arraigning the conference committee; I am only stating my own share in this transaction.

Mr. SHERMAN. I desire to say, then, that if it is merely a personal explanation——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is what the Senator from Delaware stated when he rose.

Mr. SHERMAN. Then I have no desire to interfere with him at all.

Mr. BAYARD. That is all. I am not professing to speak for the committee. On the contrary, I expressly excluded that idea. I was reading, when interupted by the Senator from Ohio, the resolution of the Senate to the effect—

That if the Senate conferees become advised that any limitation has been placed by the House upon the action of their conferees, the Senate conferees shall retire and report to the Senate for its consideration.

The Senator from Kentucky and myself were unable under the information brought before that conference by the House conferees to come to any other conclusion than that it was not a free and full conference upon the part of the House conferees; but that they were bound by the action of the body that sent them there, and that they could not confer fully and freely with us in relation to the amendments adopted by the Senate.

Our reasons for that are properly brought before the Senate in a resolution of the House, passed on the 27th day of February, and which was brought into the conference committee by the House conferees last night about 9 o'clock.

It was not, I may say not improperly here, upon any question connected with the internal-revenue features of the bill, but it was in respect of the tariff features of the bill that the question of the jurisdiction of the Senate was not only raised by the House of Representatives, but decided by the House positively and adversely to the existence of any power in the Senate. Before the conference committee was laid this resolution of the House of Representatives, adopted February 27:

Whereas House bill No. 5538, entitled "An act to reduce internal-revenue taxation, and for other purposes," under the form of an amendment in the Senate to title 33 of the Revised Statutes, which provides for duties on imports, has been so modified and changed by the introduction of new provisions containing, among other things, a general revision of the statutes referred to as both to increase and reduce duties on imports and in many instances to repeal and in others to amend the laws imposing import duties; and

Whereas in the opinion of the House it is believed that such changes and alterations are in conflict with the true intent and purpose of the Constitution, which requires that all bills for raising revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives: Therefore,

Resolved, That, if this bill shall be referred to a committee of conference, it shall be the duty of the conferees on the part of the House on said committee to consider fully the constitutional objections to said bill as amended by the Senate and herein referred to, and to bring the same, together with the opinion of the House in regard thereto, before said conference, and if necessary in their opinion, after having conferred with the Senate conferees, said conferees on said committee may make report to the House in regard to the objections to said bill herein referred to.

And on the same day after the adoption of that resolution Mr. KELLEY, now the chairman of the committee of conference on the part of the House, under a rule adopted on the same day by the House, moved to suspend the rules and take from the Speaker's table House bill No. 5538, with the Senate amendment thereto, entitled "A bill to reduce internal-revenue taxation" and "to declare a disagreement with the Senate amendments to the same, and to ask for a committee of conference thereon, to be composed of five members on the part of the House." That also was adopted by the House, and a message containing an announcement of that fact was laid on the 27th of February before the Senate. Therefore the contingency contemplated by the resolution of the House of the 27th of February had come to pass. The bill had been referred to a committee of conference, and the House conferees were directed to bring this opinion of the House before the conference; it was in fact part of the resolution creating the committee of conference and empowering them to meet a committee of the Senate. Therefore, sir, it was clear to my mind and to the mind of the honorable Senator from Kentucky that, to use the language of the Senate resolution of yesterday, the conferees on the part of the Senate had become advised that a limitation had been placed by the House upon the action and the powers of their conferees.

I do not think the question is open or arguable that if it was the deliberate opinion of the House of Representatives, not of the conferees appointed by them, the five intelligent and respectable gentlemen who met us, but that being thus possessed of the deliberate judgment of the House that the action of the Senate was void and of no effect, because it was, in the opinion of the House, in contravention of the constitutional powers of the Senate—if that was so, then the conference was ended almost before it began, and it was impossible that the question of the judgment of the House of Representatives should be subject to the discretion of five of its members. It could not be the House conferees carried with them into that conference chamber their measure of power, and the statement of the House's opinion as set forth in their formal resolution was inconsistent with any discretion on the part of the members to accept or to reject at will such features of tariff legislation as they might see fit to approve. For the House, in advance of their appointment, had denied the constitutionality of any and all such amendments, and their conferees had no power to deny the full force and effect of that declaration, and the obvious limitation it contained upon their action.

Mr. President, it is from a profound sense of what is due to this Senate, it is from an equally just sense of what is due to the co-ordinate branch of this Legislature, that I and my associate, the Senator from Kentucky, obeyed that which we believed was the clear intent and the clear and positive instruction of the Senate of the United States in retiring from that conference and making known as best we could to the Senate our reasons for so doing.

Sir, the privileges and the constitutional rights of the Senate to possess and exercise a full, equal, and co-ordinate share in the legislative powers of this Government should never be and never can be subject to the individual judgment of five members of the House, nor of the House itself. I am not here to make an argument that when the House, by a formal, unambiguous declaration of its opinion, declared that the Senate had no constitutional power to ingraft features of tariff legislation upon a bill originating in the House affecting the collection of excise taxes, that resolved opinion precluded all discretion upon the part of the conferees on the part of the House to change at their will the emphatic, clear expression of the House itself. It can not be, sir, that the Senate is to legislate or that the conferees on the part of the Senate are delegated to discuss legislation under such tentative and capricious conditions.

We are dealing with a grave subject, none graver, none more important; for not only does it touch the constitutional powers and prerogatives of this body, but it touches the gravest questions of public interest through the manifold and multifarious system of external and internal taxation to which the bill relates.

And therefore it is that the Senator from Kentucky and I desired to submit to the Senate, and I may say now that it was in our judgment the duty of the conferees on the part of the Senate to have submitted to the Senate, this expression of opinion contained in the resolution of the House which was laid before the committee of conference.

Mr. SHERMAN. I rise to a point of order again.

Mr. BAYARD. If I am not interrupted——

Mr. SHERMAN. I rise to a point of order. I say the Senator from Delaware has no right to arraign the committee of which he is a member under the head of a personal privilege. It is a violation of the etiquette, courtesy, and dignity of this body.

Mr. BAYARD. I have not said one word of what occurred in committee, but I am stating the right and duty of a minority in this case. I have not spoken a word of what the Senator said.

Mr. SHERMAN. I rise to a question of order. The Senator is endeavoring to explain a matter which he can not properly under the rules of the Senate explain without violating the rules of order of the Senate. He has no right to speak of the conduct of the committee of which he is a member until the matter is presented in a formal way. He should wait until the committee, of which he is in a minority, present their report, and then he can submit his views.

My friend from Delaware will understand that I do this with the utmost respect for him personally; but it seems to me that this throwing in a matter of this kind before it can be presented in a formal way is in violation of the ordinary rules of the Senate, and it becomes my duty as a member of the committee to call the attention of the Senate to it.

Mr. BAYARD. Will the Chair decide the question of order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point was well taken, because of course referring to what was done in a committee is not proper. Shall the Senator from Delaware have leave to proceed in order?

Mr. BAYARD. The Chair will understand me that I have not referred to anything that was done in committee except that which was laid before us by the House conferees.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator said that the majority of the committee ought to have withdrawn.

Mr. SHERMAN. He was criticising the conduct of the committee that has no right to be heard, no chance to be heard; and this interrupts in the last hours of the session the progress of an appropriation bill.

Mr. BAYARD. I was not referring to the action of the majority either in terms of censure or of condemnation. I am simply speaking of the part borne individually by my associate from Kentucky and myself. I say that we felt and believed it had become our obvious duty under the instruction of the Senate to refer this question back to them for their decision, that they might judge whether under the action of the House there was a free, unfettered conference. It was free and unfettered on the part of the Senate, and it was for the Senate to determine whether it was equally free and unfettered on the part of the House; and I say that the House coupled their appointment of a conference committee with the distinct statement that in the opinion of that House, which was commanded to be laid before the conference committee, the action of the Senate was in contravention of the Constitution and therefore void. Of course there could be no legislation under such circumstances.

Then after that what was to be done? I have been as zealous an advocate for tariff reform as any man in this Chamber. I have been as earnest in my endeavors early and late to see some reformation of the tariff law and some reduction of the burdens of taxation, and voted for this bill. But acting as I and my associate from Kentucky did under the instruction of the Senate resolution, it would have been, in my judgment, a breach of duty had we remained to confer with a committee appointed on the part of the House, a question whether the Senate of the United States had or had not the constitutional power to ingraft tariff legislation upon an internal-revenue bill, or, in other words, to abnegate and relinquish the clear, manifest power given by the Constitution in the same association of words, of equal breadth, strength, and force, to amend revenue bills by the Senate as to originate those bills in the House of Representatives:

> All bills for raising revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives, but the Senate may propose or concur with amendments as on other bills.

It is this clear grant of power to amend revenue bills which the House resolution denies and which it behooves the Senate to see is fully and at all times maintained.

No more profound question can engage the attention of the Senate, and I say that wherever a doubt is thrown upon it, much less the clear and emphatic denial on the part of the House, we should be, in my judgment, unworthy members of this body if we did not jealously consider and maintain our constitutional prerogative; and I submit to the Senate, whose conferees we were, whether we had not become advised that there were limitations upon the action of the House conferees imposed by the resolution referred to.

Sir, under a government controlled by a written constitution, that every legislator is sworn to support, can you state a limitation more far-reaching and profound than is contained in the resolved opinion of the co-ordinate branch that this Senate had no right whatever to adopt amendments to a revenue bill relating to the tariff system, for such is the doctrine of the House it formally made known to us? You can not lessen the force of that by the individual opinion of the conferees; you can not lessen its force; you must take it in its full and fair and obvious meaning. I believe we do take it so, and I believe the Senate will decide, unless eyes and ears shall be closed to the obvious meaning of the English language, that it must consider that in the action of the House there has been a limitation of powers and preclusion of judgment upon its conferees; that no report that they might make concurring in any Senate amendment can be acted upon favorably in the House until there shall have been a repeal and a reversal of the judgment as expressed in the resolution laid before the conference. When that is done, then I believe we can have a full and a free conference on the part of the House on this bill; but with that resolution of February 27, which I have just read and which was communicated to us last night—with that resolution standing unrepealed before us it is idle to talk of the conferees of that House not being bound by it; and if they are bound by it they are limited in their conference, they are not free, and they are not at liberty authoritatively to meet the committee of the Senate and to pass upon the question not of the constitutionality but of the advisability and expediency of the action of the Senate in regard to this bill and its amendments. They can not stipulate for anything in relation to amendments by the Senate which the House in advance has declared to be without constitutional warrant. They could as well stipulate that a minority vote in the House should pass a bill as to set up the individual opinions of five conferees against the declared opinion of the House itself. They are wholly deprived of the power to concur in our amendments.

I hope, Mr. President, that the Senate will take this view and see that it is no matter affecting simply the success or failure of this measure, important though it may be. It goes far deeper than that. It would result in an utter derangement of the whole balance of the powers of this Government, and it would place the Senate, where I trust in God it will never consent to place itself, upon a position of legislative inferiority to the other branch of Congress.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to make a personal explanation, as well as the Senator from Delaware.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will proceed.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President, I must express my profound regret that two Senators as experienced as the Senator from Delaware and the Senator from Kentucky should have felt it to be their duty to make this technical objection to the committee of conference, as, whether designed or not, it is well calculated to defeat all possibility of any reduction of taxation at the present session.

In my judgment we are only bound, so far as the Senate is concerned, to consider what the House has sent us, and that is this resolution:

> Resolved, That the House non-concur in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5538) to reduce internal-revenue taxation, and ask a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, to be composed on the part of this House of five members.

What does it matter as to what the opinions of the House may be on constitutional questions or on theological questions? They have presented, according to the reading of the Senator from Delaware, a resolution encumbered with a great many hypothetical "ifs." But suppose their opinion had been at that time as represented by the Senator from Delaware; their latest action is that the Senate amendments to House bill 5538 should be non-concurred in and a committee of conference asked upon the disagreeing votes.

Under these circumstances it seems to me that the Senate can have no knowledge of any limitation, and I may frankly say that so far as the committee of conference is concerned we found no obstruction whatever upon that subject. It was a free and full conference upon every part of the bill. Therefore, Mr. President, I do not see how this matter can be brought before the Senate at all in any form by a Senator rising to a personal explanation; and certainly so far as the record or our experience in committee is concerned, the conference committee is as free as any conference committee I have ever had the honor of being a member of.

Mr. BAYARD. May I just say one word? I have brought this matter before the Senate because I desired to take my full share of the responsibility for my own action, and to inform the Senate as early as I could what that had been, in order that if there should be disapproval of what I had done the Senate could appoint some one else in my place on that committee and carry on the conference. I can not stultify myself, and I will not, here or anywhere, in respect of anything, and when I read the English language as I have in this case, and look at the consequences of permitting this to be called a free conference on the part of the House when they come in there tied hand and foot to declare that the Senate's action upon this bill has been void for want of constitutional authority, it is idle, in my judgment, to speak of it as a free and a full conference. The conference was ended on the part of the House before it was begun, so far as the tariff legislation was concerned.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President——

Mr. SHERMAN. Now, Mr. President, I object to further debate on this matter.

Mr. HOAR. Regular order.

Mr. BECK. I only desire a moment.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not see how this question can be forced into debate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kentucky rises to a personal explanation.

Mr. SHERMAN. Well, Mr. President, I make objection, so that the Senate shall proceed with its regular order of business, and I do it now after both sides have been heard. I wish to say nothing about this matter and I do not wish to do anything against my friend from Kentucky, but I think as the Senator from Delaware and as the Senator from Vermont have been heard the matter ought to rest there.

Mr. BECK. I will ask the Senate to allow me only five minutes; that is all. I will not occupy the Senate longer than that.

Mr. MORRILL. I think no objection will be made to the Senator from Kentucky occupying five minutes.

Mr. HOAR and others. No objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kentucky will proceed.

Mr. BECK. Understanding that there is objection to my saying anything, I only ask for five minutes to explain my position in regard to this matter. As the Senator from Delaware has covered the ground relative to my action as well as his own, I desire to say that I would not have left the conference because of any technical objection to any action taken, as it is suggested by the Senator from Vermont that we did. I think the reasons set forth by the Senator from Delaware, based on the resolution of the House, are substantial and not technical reasons. The House, as has been stated by the Senator from Delaware, had announced in advance of any action on the amendments to the bill that we had sent back to them that in their opinion the action of the Senate was "in conflict with the true intent and purpose of the Constitution, which requires that all bills for raising revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives," and they had solemnly resolved on a call of the yeas and nays, by a vote of 139 to 122, that "the conferees on the part of the House" should bring the question, "together with the opinion of the House in regard thereto, before said conference, and if necessary in their opinion, after having conferred with the Senate conferees, said conferees on said committee may make report to the House in regard to the objections to said bill herein referred to."

So that the Senator from Vermont is wrong in saying that the only message the House sent to us was notice of the disagreement to our amendments and the request for a conference. They sent us their solemn protest against our constitutional right to amend the bill as we had done, and demanded that their action should be laid before us. It was so laid by the chairman of the House committee. They had no bill of their own to present or confer about; they did not pretend that they had even read our amendments to their original bill in the House before disagreeing with us; they disagreed to what we had done presumably, as their preamble and resolution indicates. They certainly suggest no other rates of taxation on any paragraph or any schedule upon the ground of the want of constitutional authority on our part to act on the subject-matter at all, and they so advised us, presenting no disagreement of their own to any rate of taxation proposed by us, no amendment to any of our amendments; they presented no proposition that we could agree to. They did not pretend that there was, in fact, any disagreeing votes between the two Houses that a conference could adjust so as to be satisfactory to either or in accord with their action; they could not say that the House would agree to any different rates of tariff taxation even if we yield to the wishes of the House conferees on any article on any paragraph in any schedule. They simply met us with a constitutional objection, and a protest against our right to amend their bill as we did when that position was developed, under the resolution passed by the Senate yesterday requiring us if there were limitations on their part, so that the conference could not be fair, free, and equal to report the facts back to the Senate, we felt that to be our duty, as has been stated by the Senator from Delaware. I agree with him in believing that it was our duty to do so. I speak only for myself; I do not seek to reflect on the action of the other members of the committee because of their refusal to report back the facts and lay the House resolution before the Senate.

The House by its vote to non-concur said it would not agree to our amendments. They have presented no propositions of their own; they offer nothing but a protest against our constitutional power to act at all; so that nothing was left except to abandon the bill of the Senate and to give them such a bill as four or five of their protectionist leaders see fit to demand. To get anything in the shape of a bill we must abandon all that we have done that the House conferees do not like, with nothing offered by the House in the way of perfecting our amendments; but if we abandon what we have done and give them what their conferees demand to suit their individual views they will, I doubt not, advise the House to waive the constitutional question, otherwise not.

I do not regard that condition of things as presenting a case for a conference at all.

I rose, therefore, principally to unite with the Senator from Delaware in saying that under these circumstances I can be no longer a conferee, and hope that some one will be appointed who can act consistently with his sense of duty; I can not, and therefore I ask to be excused.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kentucky asks to be excused from service on the committee of conference. Was that request preferred?

Mr. BECK. Yes, sir.

Mr. GARLAND. Do I understand the Senator from Delaware to make the same request?

Mr. BAYARD. I stated distinctly that my object in bringing this question before the Senate was that they might understand the true action of the Senator from Kentucky and myself and that we might be excused from further service.

Mr. MORRILL. I hope the Senators will not ask that that be done. They very well understand that they are the proper Senators to be appointed from that side of the Chamber, and we should be very glad if they would reconsider their opinion and continue in service.

Mr. BECK. We understand that we are proper Senators, but we understand that we are not in a free conference.

Mr. GARLAND. This proposition to excuse two members of the committee of conference is one for which I wish to offer a substitute, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That the conferees on the part of the Senate on House bill No. 5538, be, and they are hereby, instructed to withdraw from the conference heretofore agreed to touching such bill.

Mr. ALLISON. Is that in order? I understand all this proceeds by unanimous consent. I call for the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks the request of the Senators from Delaware and Kentucky for leave to be excused is in order.

Mr. GARLAND. The two Senators rose to a question of high privilege and asked to be excused from serving on the committee. I offer as a substitute for the motion made by those Senators that the entire five be discharged from further service. That resolution is in order. It is in reference to the action of a committee appointed by the Senate, and I ask to be heard on that question.

Mr. ALLISON. I should like to see that resolution in print. I have a right to that, and I object to its consideration this morning.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa objects to the consideration of the resolution.

Mr. GARLAND. Does the Senator object to the consideration of the resolution?

Mr. ALLISON. I certainly do. It is absolutely important, I will say to the Senator from Arkansas, that we go on with the sundry civil bill if we are to finish the appropriation bills at this session, and this is a matter that ought to be adjusted among the gentlemen themselves.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The objection takes the resolution over without any debate.

Mr. GARLAND. I appeal from the decision of the Chair. Now, Mr. President, I must ask the Senator from Iowa to settle the question in regard to the appropriation bill in its own time.

Mr. SHERMAN. I again rise to a question of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What is the point of order?

Mr. SHERMAN. The question of order is this: The Senators from Delaware and Kentucky rose to personal explanations, and when they were through they sat down, pending the consideration of an appropriation bill. Now, can that be displaced at the pleasure of any one Senator in this body?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. GARLAND] introduced a resolution; the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] made the point that it must lie over until to-morrow, and the Chair decided that that point was well taken. There is an appeal from that decision.

Mr. SHERMAN. And is that appeal debatable?

Mr. GARLAND. I have made the appeal and have the floor upon it.

Mr. SHERMAN. Is that in order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Of course.

Mr. SHERMAN. If it is in order, then any one Senator can do the same thing any day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is an appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. GARLAND. The Senator from Ohio is going too rapidly. Two Senators have risen to a question of personal privilege on this floor; that is, to be excused from service upon a committee appointed by this body. That is laid down by the text-books as one of the very highest questions of privilege; and when a question of that character comes up everything else must give way. The pending subject is suspended, says the same authority. I offer a resolution, not only that those two Senators be excused but the entire five be relieved from further duty on the committee. The Chair has decided, on the suggestion of the Senator from Iowa, that this is out of order. From that I appeal.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair did not decide on the suggestion of the Senator from Iowa. The point was taken.

Mr. GARLAND. The Chair decided that it was not in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair decided so, but not upon any suggestion.

Mr. GARLAND. We have appointed a committee of five who, like the King of France, charged up the hill and then marched down again. They are confronted by the objection now made by the Senator from Delaware as well as the Senator from Kentucky. If the House is right, we have been engaged in child's play for forty days past here, doing something we had no authority to do. As I stated yesterday, it is now made apparent that the conferees are handicapped in advance by the House. The very first rule laid down by the authority I hold in my hand is that when one House sends a message to the other asking a conference it must disclose its entire proceeding in reference to that matter.

We find now that this essential part of the whole business was violated in this case; and two Senators here say that the privileges of this House have been invaded in that particular, and they ask leave to be discharged. Of course their request amounts to nothing till the Senate acts on it.

Mr. HOAR. I rise to a question of order, and that is that this appeal is not debatable. I will state my question of order, with the leave of the Chair. The question pending was, Shall this matter go over until to-morrow? That is not debatable under our rules, but is always decided by the Chair without debate. Now, the forty-first rule is this:

> All appeals taken when a proposition not debatable is pending shall also be decided without debate.

That is the point I make. This appeal is not debatable.

Mr. GARLAND. As I understand the point of the Senator from Massachusetts—I may have misunderstood him—it is that the original proposition under the forty-first rule not being debatable, this appeal is not.

Mr. HOAR. That is it.

Mr. GARLAND. The question of excusing a member of a committee of conference is debatable.

Mr. HOAR. But that is not the question. As I understand it, the two Senators who were permitted to make a personal explanation were not recognized as making any questions of privilege. Then the regular order was called. Then the Senator from Arkansas offered a resolution, there being another matter pending, and the Chair held that that resolution must go over until to-morrow on objection, which it must do without debate. From that the Senator takes an appeal and undertakes to make a debate, when the matter out of which the appeal grew is itself undebatable, and the forty-first rule provides for that. That is my proposition.

Mr. GARLAND. The Senator is mistaken in his statement in one respect, and that is a very important part of it. While these two Senators made their personal explanation, they also moved to be excused from further service upon the committee. I appeal to the Senator from Delaware if such is not the fact?

Mr. BAYARD. Unquestionably. I rose to a question of privilege and proceeded to make a personal explanation on that question, and after that I said it was for the purpose of bringing before the Senate a vacancy on that committee.

Mr. GARLAND. So did the Senator from Kentucky. That is a question of high privilege, as laid down by the authorities. I offered my resolution as a substitute, as a question of high privilege. I have said all I desire to say, only this: I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Ohio to one matter. He said that the Senators making this explanation could not refer to what transpired in the committee.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I will withdraw the point of order for the present. As the Senator from Arkansas states that he is about concluding, I will not interrupt him in a brief statement.

Mr. GARLAND. I am nearly through with what I wish to state. I want the record to be complete.

Mr. HOAR. I shall recall the point if general debate is sought.

Mr. GARLAND. I do not fear the point of order, because here is the statement of the two Senators that they rose to a question of personal privilege and asked to be excused from service on a committee. Now, the authorities lay it down—for Mr. Cushing is good authority—that there are exceptions to the rule forbidding a reference to what has transpired in committee, in this section 1731:

> Where, however, a motion is made relative to the committee itself, or its proceedings, the rule admits of an exception.

That is an exception as to stating what occurred in that committee. These Senators now refer to the action of this committee and their connection with it, and this resolution refers to the entire committee so far as the Senate is concerned.

Now, I say the Senate is brought squarely to the question, Are you going to submit to a committee of conference when two of your Senators ask to be excused from that committee because it is not a full and free conference under the rules? The difference exists, as I stated yesterday, between a full and free conference and a simple conference, or, as the English authorities put it, between a free conference and a bare conference. If the Senate is ready to do it, it may do so; but it will not do it with my consent with the revelations made by these two distinguished Senators.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?

Mr. GARLAND. I withdraw the appeal so far as I am concerned.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question, then, is on excusing the two Senators.

Mr. HOAR. But has not that gone over until to-morrow? The Chair's decision was appealed from, and now the appeal is withdrawn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. They asked to be excused. They rose to a question of personal privilege and asked to be excused from service. The Senator from Arkansas moved a resolution, and that goes over. The question now is on excusing the Senators from Delaware and Kentucky from further service on the committee of conference.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is not the question. The question is whether this appeal——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The appeal is withdrawn and the resolution goes over; but both gentlemen have asked to be excused from service on the conference committee, and that is a question of high privilege. Those who are in favor of excusing them will say "aye" and those opposed to it "no." [Putting the question.] The "ayes" seem to have it.

Mr. MORRILL and Mr. SHERMAN called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered.

Mr. BECK. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Have I the right to vote on that question myself?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Every Senator must decide that for himself. The Chair yesterday did not vote upon the question of an appeal, but he had the right to vote.

Mr. BECK. Very well.

The Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GEORGE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. CAMERON], and I am informed by his colleague [Mr. SAWYER] that he expected to be paired on this vote. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. MITCHELL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. JOHNSTON]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. GEORGE. Since my name was called I am informed by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SAWYER] that I shall not violate the pair with his colleague by voting. With that assurance I vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 49, nays 6; as follows:

YEAS—49.

Aldrich,	Conger,	Jonas,	Rollins,
Allison,	Davis of Ill.,	Jones of Florida,	Sawyer,
Anthony,	Dawes,	Jones of Nevada,	Sewell,
Barrow,	Frye,	Lapham,	Sherman,
Bayard,	Garland,	McDill,	Slater,
Beck,	George,	McMillan,	Vance,
Blair,	Gorman,	McPherson,	Van Wyck,
Brown,	Harris,	Maxey,	Vest,
Butler,	Harrison,	Miller of N. Y.,	Walker,
Call,	Hill,	Morgan,	Williams.

ABSENT—21.

Cameron of Pa.,	Ferry,	Kellogg,	Saulsbury,
Cameron of Wis.,	Groome,	Lamar,	Saunders,
Chilcott,	Grover,	Logan,	Voorhees.
Davis of W. Va.,	Hale,	Mahone,
Fair,	Hampton,	Mitchell,
Farley,	Johnston,	Ransom,

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask consent that the Chair fill the vacancies on the conference committee.

Mr. HOAR. He has that authority already.

Mr. EDMUNDS. No, I think not.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] asks consent that the Char fill the vacancies upon the committee of conference. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. [A pause.] The Chair appoints on the conference committee on the bill (H. R. 5538) to reduce internal-revenue taxation, in place of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] and the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK], who have been excused, the two next members of the Committee on Finance, the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] and the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON].

Mr. MCPHERSON. For myself I wish to say that I am not in the habit of declining any service the Senate imposes upon me or requires of me; but this is an exceptional case. It is well known that I am not in accord with most of the Senators who sit on this side of the Chamber with respect to tariff matters and with respect to matters in this tariff bill. My own self-respect, considering that fact, would impel me to decline serving upon the committee of conference. I can not consent to undertake to be a representative on that committee of Senators on this side of the Chamber, holding views differing from mine and differing very greatly from Senators on the other side of the Chamber, and who are entitled to a representation upon the committee. I cannot speak for them; I do not assume to speak for them.

There is another and a greater reason; it is one which has been given by the Senator from Delaware and the Senator from Kentucky this morning, who have acted under instructions given by the Senate yesterday under a resolution passed by the Senate, which I will read:

Resolved, That it is the opinion of the Senate that the conference on House bill 5538 should be full and free, and that if the Senate conferees become advised that any limitation has been placed by the House upon the action of their conferees the Senate conferees shall retire—shall retire and report to the Senate for its consideration.

Mark the language—

The honorable Senator from Delaware and the honorable Senator from Kentucky, obeying the command of the Senate as expressed in the resolution, believing and knowing that the conference on the part of the House members could not be full and free, declined to serve. Now, Mr. President, I wish to know with what degree of consistency I can accept a position on that conference committee, believing as I do from the statements made by both of those Senators that there can be no full and free conference on the part of the House conferees?

For both these reasons I beg the privilege of declining any service upon the committee of conference, and will again suggest that some other Senator who represents largely the views of Senators who occupy seats on this side of the Chamber should be chosen in my stead to represent this side of the Chamber upon the conference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on excusing the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON].

The question being put, was decided in the affirmative.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The only other gentleman in the Committee on Finance, from which the Chair selects, is Mr. HARRIS; and the Chair therefore appoints him in place of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON].

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, from the facts stated and the reasons assigned by the Senator from Delaware and the Senator from Kentucky for asking to be excused from service upon this committee of conference, I am constrained, being in full sympathy with the views of those Senators, based upon the facts stated by them, to ask the Senate to excuse me from service on that committee.

Mr. VOORHEES. I will simply state that I decline to serve on the committee, and beg the Senate to excuse me from doing so.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] declines to serve. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] also declines. Will the Senate excuse them from service on this committee?

The question being put, was decided in the affirmative.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has no means of finding out who will serve on this committee unless he goes around and sees every individual Senator.

Mr. CONGER. Perhaps the better way would be to continue the designations and ascertain in that way.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will see in the course of the day if there is anybody who will serve.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the bill (H. R. 7191) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, and for the armament thereof, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. GORMAN and Mr. HARRIS submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them, respectively, to the bill (H. R. 7595) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HARRIS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 7595) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes; which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BROWN. I offer an amendment to the sundry civil appropriation bill, and move its reference to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BECK. I desire to say to the Senator from Georgia that the sundry civil bill having been reported back the amendment ought to lie on the table.

Mr. HARRIS. I suggest to the Senator from Kentucky that the Senator from Georgia is right. It should be referred to the committee, under the rule.

Mr. BECK. Very well; I beg pardon.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7595) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes.

Mr. ALLISON. At this point of the sundry civil bill I desire to submit a statement in detail of the additions and reductions made by the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate:

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL, 1884.

Amount of estimates for 1884	$34,186,376 35
Amount of bill as passed the House	23,119,232 50
Amount added by the Senate committee	1,716,686 86
Total as reported to the Senate	24,835,919 36
Amount of act for 1883	25,589,358 06

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after line 35, to insert:

For the purpose of reimbursing the legal representatives of Francis P. Van Wyck, late consul at Turk's Island, deceased, for money expended in transporting the remains of said Van Wyck to his home for burial, $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for "public buildings under the Treasury Department," after line 54, to insert:

For marine hospital at Memphis, Tennessee: For completion, $16,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 56, to insert:

For custom-house at New Orleans, Louisiana: For completion of approaches and for repairs, $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 59, to insert:

For custom-house and post-office at Hartford, Connecticut: For completion of approaches, $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Principal Legislative Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, and having read lines 88 and 89, as follows:

For post-office at Brooklyn, New York: For continuation, $100,000—

Mr. LAPHAM. I move to increase the appropriation to $200,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is not in order until the amendments of the Committee on Appropriations are through.

Mr. LAPHAM. Then I reserve the right to offer the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator has the right; it does not need any reservation.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after line 103, to insert:

For court-house and post-office at Paducah, Kentucky: For completion, $8,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "life-saving stations" in line 199, to increase the total amount of the appropriation "for pay of crews of surfmen employed at the life-saving and life-boat stations, during the period of actual employment; compensation of volunteers at life-saving and life-boat stations," &c., from $580,000 to $680,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 199, to insert:

For establishing new life-saving stations and life-boat stations on the sea and lake coasts of the United States, $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 240, after the word "destroyed," to strike out "eight hundred and thirty-two" and insert "five hundred and thirty-one;" and in line 241, after the word "dollars," to strike out "provided, that" and insert "and;" so as to make the clause read:

Engraving and printing:

For salaries of all necessary clerks and employés, and for labor (by the day, piece, or contract), including labor of workmen skilled in engraving, transferring, plate-printing, and other specialties necessary for carrying on the work of engraving and printing, the pay for such labor to be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury, at rates not exceeding the rates usually paid for such work; and for other expenses of engraving and printing; for materials required in the work of engraving and printing; for purchase of engravers' tools, dies, rolls, and plates, and for machinery and repairs of same; and for expenses of operating macerating machines for the destruction of the United States notes, bonds, national-bank notes, and other obligations of the United States authorized to be destroyed, $531,000; and from said sum work may be executed by the Bureau of Engraving and Printing for the following purposes, namely.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 245, after the word "engraving," to strike out "and;" and in the same line, after the word "printing," to insert "and finishing;" and in line 247, after the word "securities," to strike out "three hundred and twenty-one" and insert "four hundred;" so as to make the clause read:

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after the word "act," in line 854, to strike out:

And in case a contract can not be made at that rate the officer in charge of the public buildings and grounds is hereby authorized to substitute other illuminating material in the lamps on the public grounds, and to use so much of the sum hereby appropriated as may be necessary for that purpose: Provided further, That said officer shall not be authorized to make any contract for gas or other illuminating material, in accordance with the provisions of this paragraph, for any longer period than one year.

So as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That for each 6-foot burner not connected with a meter in the lamps on the public grounds no more than $22 shall be paid per lamp for gas, including lighting, cleaning, and keeping in repair the lamps, under any expenditure provided for in this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after the word "dollars," in line 869, to strike out:

And all officers in charge of public buildings in the District of Columbia shall cause the flow of water in the buildings under their charge to be shut off from 5 o'clock p. m. to 8 o'clock a. m.: Provided, That the water in said public buildings is not necessarily in use for public business.

So as to make the clause read:

For repair of water-pipes and fire-plugs: For repairing and extending water-pipes, purchase of apparatus to clean them, and cleaning the springs and repairing and renewing the pipes to the same that supply the Capitol, the Executive Mansion, and the building for the State, War, and Navy Departments, $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 877, after "thousand," to strike out "five hundred;" so as to make the clause read:

For completion of the Washington Monument: For marble, granite, iron frame-work, machinery, tools, labor, office expenses, including the rent of necessary office rooms, and for each and every purpose connected with the completion of the monument, $250,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 895, to insert:

For constructing hydraulic passenger elevator for building corner of Seventeenth and F streets, known as the Winder Building, the same to run from the ground floor, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, to strike out the following paragraph from line 900 to line 942:

Military posts:

To enable the Secretary of War to have buildings constructed and improvements made at military posts, as follows: At Fort Colville, Washington Territory, $50,000; for the establishment of reserved posts at San Antonio and Fort Bliss, $75,000; at Fort Huachuca, Arizona, $52,000; at Fort Grant, Arizona, $60,000; at Atlanta, Georgia, including purchase of necessary ground, $75,000; at Fort Douglas, Utah, $12,000; in all, $324,000. That all lands reserved for military purposes which, in the opinion of the President, may be no longer desirable for such purposes, or so much thereof as he may designate, shall be placed under control of the Secretary of the Interior to be disposed of: Provided, That said lands shall not be placed under control of the Secretary of the Interior until the direction of the President therefor shall have been filed in the Interior Department: Provided, also, That said lands shall not be subject to location by warrant or scrip of any description nor to the homestead or pre-emption laws of the United States: And provided further, That said lands shall not be sold until they shall have been surveyed and platted under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior and appraised by three competent men to be appointed by him and their appraisal approved by the President of the United States. And said lands shall be sold at public sale to the highest bidder for cash, and shall not be sold at less than their appraised value, which in no case shall be less than $1.25 per acre, and in such subdivisions as may be most advantageous to the Government, no subdivision to exceed one hundred and sixty acres: And provided further, That no sale shall take place until notice of the same shall have been published for at least ninety days, once in each week, immediately prior to such sale, in at least two newspapers, such papers having a general circulation in the State or county: And provided further, That any settler who was in actual occupation of any portion of any one of these reservations prior to the location of the reservation, and continues such occupation to the present time, shall be entitled to locate under the homestead law the land upon which he lives, not to exceed one hundred and sixty acres.

Mr. MAXEY. I wish to call attention to the clause after the word "dollars" in line 904: "For the establishment of reserved posts at San Antonio and Fort Bliss, $75,000." San Antonio is the headquarters of the Military Department of Texas. The railroads now concentrate at that point and radiate from that point so as to be within convenient reach of the posts along the Rio Grande frontier. It is the policy of General Sherman, commanding the Army, to concentrate the forces at that point because supplies of all kinds are much cheaper there than they could be at smaller posts, and in case of necessity they can be sent out promptly by the railways to any point where an attack may be made or threatened. For that reason the Government is now anxious to concentrate the troops at that point, and for that purpose and a like purpose at Fort Bliss, Texas, this appropriation for reserved posts is made. That is at San Antonio.

Away along out west, some five hundred miles farther, at El Paso, a town lying upon the Rio Grande, separating Texas from Mexico, the railroads also concentrate. The Texas Pacific crosses from Texas into New Mexico, Arizona, and California at that point, and the road from San Antonio around by El Paso crosses at the same point, besides the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fé road passes that point going down to the city of Mexico, and while it already reaches Chihuahau, El Paso is to-day a railroad center. Fort Bliss is within about a mile and a half of El Paso. The same reason which I assigned for the concentration of troops at San Antonio applies in like manner to the post at Fort Bliss.

For these reasons I regard the policy of the Government as economical and wise, because it saves the expense of sending supplies out to minor posts and places the troops at a better position, where they can be sent out promptly upon any raid made by Indians on anybody else along that great frontier, reaching from San Antonio to El Paso, and thus a smaller number of troops will be required.

I have here before me, but I do not wish to take up time to read it, the report of the War Department, at page 52 of Report H. R. 1960 accompanying this bill. The reasons which I have given, however, are those which in my judgment control the Department, and I venture to say it would be very unwise, I will say to the Committee on Appropriations, to strike out this appropriation.

Mr. ALLISON. This paragraph provides for four or five new fortifications, and the Committee on Appropriations did not believe it was a necessary thing or a wise thing now to enter upon the construction of these new forts without understanding more in detail what they will eventually cost and the general purposes required of them. That is in brief the reason why we struck these posts out. There is no sort of necessity for this being done this year; it can go over to next year, and then the whole matter can be examined with more care. That is in brief the reason which controlled the committee. We think the reason is potential.

Mr. COKE. I hope, Mr. President, that the amendment of the committee, at least with reference to the military posts in Texas, will not be concurred in. That there is a necessity for posts at San Antonio and Fort Bliss for the reasons so clearly stated by my colleague no person can deny. That the War Department, in the exercise of its best judgment, believes that those posts should be improved is admitted. The reason given by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations does not controvert either of these propositions. If the posts are necessary, it does seem to me that it is not expedient to pass the matter over for twelve months more before the necessary appropriation is made to maintain them properly.

We are about opening up very extensive commercial and other relations with Mexico. Those posts are immediately on the Mexican border; and while we hope and believe that our relations with that republic are to be peaceful, yet it is necessary to the maintenance of the dignity of this Government and to the proper protection of that frontier that a show of force should be always present there, especially in order to control the turbulent elements that are always found upon a frontier and particularly upon that border.

In order that the proper complement of troops may be maintained at as little expense as possible it is much the best that posts should be properly kept up at these two points where the railroads converge and from which troops can be thrown to any other points on the frontier; and that they should be equipped in the most substantial and permanent manner and be of undoubtedly sufficient capacity.

I submit to the honorable Senator from Iowa in charge of the bill that it is very bad policy to be parsimonious in providing conveniences and facilities at those points for the accommodation of the Army. A very considerable proportion of the Army is in that country, and at Fort Bliss and San Antonio a few men will count for much more than they will anywhere else on that frontier on account of the facility with which they may be distributed.

Mr. ALLISON. But is there not already a post at San Antonio, a large post?

Mr. COKE. There is.

Mr. ALLISON. We have already expended a considerable amount of money at fortifications near San Antonio.

Mr. COKE. On barracks, quarters, &c., not on fortifications.

Mr. ALLISON. Only last year we expended a considerable sum of money to build some buildings or purchase some buildings, I do not remember which, near the city of San Antonio.

Mr. MAXEY. I will explain that in a moment.

Mr. COKE. That is true

Mr. ALLISON. Is not that true?

Mr. COKE. Certainly it is true, but additional facilities are needed, and this appropriation is based upon the opinion of the War Department and of the General of the Army that there should be further facilities provided at both of those points in order to maintain the necessary number of troops there.

I submit further that the Appropriations Committee in striking out this paragraph have not paid to the opinion of the House who sent the bill here—if I am in order in alluding to it—and to the judgment of the War Department and the General of the Army that deference, or at least that consideration, to which they are entitled in a matter of this sort coming properly before the House and about which the War Department ought to be presumed to be well informed.

Mr. BECK. I want to state to the Senator from Texas one difficulty we had, and I should like to have it answered, because I do not know much about the military posts. For the reserved posts at San Antonio and Fort Bliss the proposition is to appropriate $75,000.

Mr. MAXEY. I can explain that in half a minute.

Mr. BECK. Wait a moment. We have always specified heretofore in every bill that I ever saw the amount of money that should be expended at each place. Whether they are going to expend $70,000 at San Antonio and but $5,000 at Fort Bliss or whether they are going to divide it equally is not known; and those are things that have always been regarded. The Department did not deign to give us that information. That was one trouble we had about it.

Mr. COKE. I should like to ask the honorable Senator from Kentucky if the committee applied to the Secretary of War for the information he speaks of?

Mr. BECK. I am not sure.

Mr. COKE. If the committee had informed the Secretary of War that they desired this additional information I presume he would have furnished it. Certain it is that the War Department has determined that this appropriation is necessary for those two points; and as the chairman of the committee did not see proper to interrogate the Secretary of War further as to the proportions of the amount that should be expended respectively at the points named, I do not think it lies in the mouth of any member of the committee to urge that as an objection to the appropriation. They could have gotten the information if they had asked for it.

The fact remains that the War Department believes that this appropriation should be made, and that the General of the Army, who ought to know all about this subject, believes that the appropriation should be made. The fact remains that the House of Representatives approve this judgment, and without any reason that has been given on this floor the Committee on Appropriations have stricken out the provision and ask the Senate to concur with them. I hope that the committee's amendment will not be adopted, unsustained as it is by any reason given here, and opposed as it is by all whose business it is to be well informed on the subject.

Mr. MAXEY. Mr. President, if I can get the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations a moment I can reply to the first point he made without difficulty. As I said, the headquarters of the Department of Texas are at San Antonio. The Committee on Appropriations did a year or so ago recommend an appropriation which was made of $125,000, as the Senator states, but for what? It was made known to the committee by myself and Hon. Mr. UPSON, of the House, that the Government was paying from $21,000 to $22,000 rent per annum for officers' quarters—not soldiers' quarters, but officers' quarters—at San Antonio. That being the headquarters of the department, and as an appropriation of $125,000 would cost the Government but $5,000 per annum interest at 4 per cent., instead of $21,000 in the way of rent, and thus in the course of less than eight years the entire expenses of quarters for officers on duty at the headquarters would be paid by that appropriation out of the savings between interest and rent, it was made, not for the benefit of the troops, but for the headquarters and as a measure of sound economy.

Second, there is a post, Fort Clark, which cost the Government of the United States nearly $250,000. That is on land not the property of the United States. We tried once to buy it, and the Senate passed a bill I introduced for that purpose, but it failed in the House. The General of the Army desires to so arrange it as that troops who are now stationed at Fort Clark (and there is where the larger number of them are stationed) may be moved up to San Antonio, because in the way of foraging horses and feeding the troops and in all the other expenses it would cost far less at San Antonio than at Fort Clark or any other point in striking distance of the Rio Grande in that neighborhood.

Third, I want to say that on the military needs of the Texas frontier I have probably studied a little more than the chairman of the committee, distinguished as he is in his profession. With a few troops concentrated at the right point, who can be radiated out wherever they are needed, it will cost the Government very far less than to try to keep up a number of little posts scattered about everywhere. For that reason it was thought the best policy to put these troops at the railroad center, which is San Antonio, and let them be radiated out from that point, and in like manner at El Paso, which is the other railroad center near the frontier. This appropriation of $75,000 for reserved posts to be established for men, not as it was for officers' quarters at San Antonio, but for reserved troops to be put there, is asked.

In regard to the point which the Senator makes, not publicly I will say however, as to the post at El Paso, I will state that a few years ago there was a combined movement of a mob of Mexicans in blood on the Texan side and of Mexicans on the Mexican side at San Elisario, in El Paso County, not far from Fort Bliss, by which Judge Howard and other citizens of Texas were murdered by a mob. Upon the news reaching the Congress of the United States an appropriation was made to build Fort Bliss, on a bill I had the honor to introduce, and it was built, and it is now there, a good post, and belongs to the United States Government.

Mr. COCKRELL. How far is Fort Bliss from San Antonio?

Mr. MAXEY. It is five hundred or six hundred miles from San Antonio. When I came here in 1875 we had murder, rape, cattle-stealing, robbery, and arson by Mexicans and Mexican Indians from citizens of Texas all along that line. We now have peace and quiet everywhere. We can use very much fewer troops now than eight years ago by the policy which General Sherman is trying to inaugurate, which I think to be wise. It is the soundest economy on the part of the Government to adopt that policy. That is my judgment. I give it for what it is worth, and on subjects of that kind I certainly have studied somewhat. I believe it to be for the best interest of the country.

If I were considering alone the interest of the State of Texas in selling forage, and all that kind of thing, I would want as many troops as I could get there, but that is not my duty as a Senator of the United States. It is to get along on the least money possible consistent with protection, and the policy which is here proposed will enable us to get along with a small expenditure of money. That is my reason for opposing the amendment of the committee. I ask the Senate to non-concur in the recommendation of the committee. I beg to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that the policy of the Government as to the location of posts on the frontier and the disposition of troops has necessarily greatly changed by the building of railroads in that country. Should Congress sustain the policy as to these posts and others like situated recommended by the War Department and General Sherman, it will greatly reduce appropriations. The bill of the House in this regard is right and ought to be left as it came to the Senate.

Mr. BROWN. I trust this clause will not be stricken out by the Senate. These posts have been arranged, as I understand it, after conference with the General of the Army, who has no doubt at all that this is the right thing to do. I am of course not as well informed with reference to the frontier posts as the Senators from Texas; but from the statement they have just made I have no doubt it is to the interest of the Government that those posts should be maintained in accordance with the bill as it passed the other House of Congress.

I desire to say, in addition, a few words in reference to the proposed post at the city of Atlanta, in the State of Georgia. I have conversed with the General of the Army very freely and fully on that subject, and he is very decided in his conviction that there should be a military post permanently established at that point. He says it is the strategic military point for all that section of the Southern States——

Mr. COCKRELL. I would like the Senator from Georgia to explain what is the necessity of Atlanta as a strategic military point in this country. I thought we had the cry for years and years that we wanted the troops removed from the Southern States; and now we come in with a demand that the United States Army shall be brought back and stationed in Atlanta, Georgia, and that the tax-payers of this country shall be taxed to build forts and fortifications because it is a magnificent strategic military point!

Mr. BROWN. There was a period when I felt about this matter as the Senator from Missouri now feels, and he then felt so too. About eighteen or twenty years ago I was very anxious to have the United States troops removed from all that section. I considered they were great intruders, and that they were on a mission that should not be prosecuted, and I should have been very happy to have seen them removed or driven away. But the circumstances have greatly changed since that time. The Southern States are now, as they were before that period, States of the Union, and I believe I may say without any hazard that they are loyal States of the Union; as loyal as any other section of the Union. We now consider the Army of the United States our army as much as it is the army of any other part of the Union, and we have as much use for it on any occasion that might arise calling for the employment of troops in the South as the people have in any other part of the country.

Therefore it is proper in stationing troops to have due regard to the strategic points, in a military point of view. The General of the Army says that from barracks at the post at Atlanta he could throw the troops, if needed, promptly in a very short time to any one of the coast cities from Wilmington, North Carolina, to New Orleans, in Louisiana. It is only a few hours by rail from Atlanta to any one of these points. We now have barracks at two or three of the points mentioned, but if the troops are kept there during the summer they are exposed to the extreme heat; they are exposed to yellow fever at certain periods, and it is very unsafe in point of health to have them there. The General of the Army says they should be placed at one point for all that section of the Union. That point is Atlanta, because it is a point from which troops can be thrown rapidly to any place where they may be needed, and it is a very healthy point in winter; and with its elevation of nearly 1,100 feet above the level of the ocean we have a fine summer climate; and it is certainly, from humane considerations, the proper place to put the troops if they are needed in that section at all; either in winter or summer and especially in summer. It is not right to keep them in quarters at New Orleans or Savannah or Charleston during the summer season. There is great danger of disease, especially of yellow fever, in certain years on the coast, and the troops ought not to be kept there.

I have no doubt that the General of the Army is right about this, and that the post ought to be located there on high and healthy land where they can be thrown rapidly to any one of the cities where they might be needed if they ever should be needed.

So far as the objection of the Senator from Missouri is concerned, it is a rather popular point to make, I know; but we must not forget that we are all one people now. This is our Government. We of the South are an integral part of it; and we have the same use for the Army, and feel the same interest that any other portions of the Union have; and as the General of the Army has considered this question very maturely and this is done upon his recommendation, and it seems to be an entirely proper thing to do on common-sense principles, I trust that the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations will not be adopted, but that the clause will remain as it passed the House.

Mr. SLATER. I see in the clause which is proposed to be stricken out by the amendment that Fort Colville, in Washington Territory, is a post provided for. The provision in the House bill provides for putting up buildings at Fort Colville, Washington Territory, and appropriates $50,000 for that purpose. This amendment strikes that out. That I understand contemplates the abandonment of this fort or station.

This is one of the most important of the frontier posts we have, and instead of letting it stand as it is or refusing appropriations under the idea of withdrawing troops from that point, it ought to be improved and taken care of. We are not yet through our Indian wars in that section of the United States in all probability. It is true that at the present time peace prevails, and we hope it will continue; but there are warlike tribes in the immediate vicinity of this fort who have long been kept in their peaceful relations with the United States by fear of the very troops that are stationed there; and instead of giving any indication that this place is to be abandoned, the reverse ought to be the policy of Congress for at least some few years yet to come.

But aside from the Indians in our own territory, just across the British line in British Columbia are also warlike tribes that will undoubtedly have to be looked after in the near future. So that in any point of view the amendment in regard to this fort ought not to prevail.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations to strike out from line 900 to line 942, inclusive.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not wish to take up time, but these forts are practically new, all of them. They are new at Atlanta, new at Fort Colville, new at San Antonio, and new at Fort Bliss, except in this sense, that there is a local fort now at Fort Bliss; but it is intended to make what are known as reserved posts, which are to be large posts for the concentration of forces; and here is an appropriation that will scarcely begin these fortifications.

Mr. MAXEY. Let me read what the book shows on that subject.

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly. I know what the book shows. I have it in my hand.

Mr. MAXEY. Will the Senator let me place it on record?

Mr. ALLISON. I have no objection to placing it on record. The book shows a total estimate for new fortifications of $698,000, placing them all on a par of necessity, and it proposes a line of fortifications on the Rio Grande costing $200,000, which includes the post at San Antonio and other posts, and it provides for a post at Fort Bliss, costing $50,000, making $250,000 in all on the Rio Grande.

Mr. MAXEY. The Senator is mistaken about that. The Secretary speaks of the enlargement of the post at Fort Bliss by an appropriation of $50,000.

Mr. ALLISON. The estimate is for $50,000 there and $200,000 for other posts on the Rio Grande. Everybody who knows anything about the manner in which these posts are built knows that they will eventually cost $500,000 or more; and therefore it is that we want to know, or at least the Committee on Appropriations desire to know, the character of these fortifications, the extent of them, the manner in which they are to be built, and so on; and surely there is no such necessity for these fortifications as requires that they shall be appropriated for now rather than appropriated for next winter.

I have great faith in the Commanding General of the Army, and I believe that what he suggests is probably a wise provision for the disposition of the Army; but he does not expect or anticipate that we shall at once provide as he suggests, and therefore it is that the committee believe that this whole subject should go over until a future time when we can make a further examination.

Now, there is a large post at San Antonio, a little way out of the city of San Antonio, where a considerable amount of money has been expended, and last year, for the purpose of erecting officers' quarters to make it more convenient for them to live in the city of San Antonio, we allowed $125,000. Now it is proposed to grant $75,000 more for San Antonio, if in the discretion of the Secretary of War he shall deem it wise to spend that whole sum there, as he can do.

I do not desire to prolong the debate, but merely state these facts as they appeared to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BROWN. I want to correct an error that the chairman of the committee has fallen into as to these being new posts. That is not true in the substantial sense of the word as to Atlanta. A military post was established there immediately after the close of the war; most of the troops that have been kept in any portion of the South have been kept at Atlanta. There was this difficulty, however, that the military authorities made a mistake at the time of leasing the land on which they located the buildings, and went on to erect the buildings under a fifteen years' lease, I think, but I am not positive as to the length of the time. The lessor died and the lease terminated, and there was difficulty about getting title to the land. The post was discontinued for a time on that account and the land turned back to the estate of the lessor, but it was never the intention of the military authorities to discontinue the post at Atlanta.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not mean a new post in that sense, but I mean in the sense of new buildings, new erections, new purchase of sites, and so on. We have no site at San Antonio for a post; this money, if appropriated, must be expended in the purchase of ground in the first instance. I think the Senator from Texas will agree with me in that.

Mr. BROWN. I desire to say only a word on that point. I do not think there is very much in the objection that the General of the Army and the Secretary of War have not laid before us an exact statement as to how they propose to erect a post and just what will be the cost. We appropriate a definite sum of money for that purpose. I have the utmost confidence in the General of the Army and in the Secretary of War in the case of an expenditure of that sort; I have no doubt they will expend the money faithfully, and I can not suppose there will be any abuse of the authority or any improper use of the funds. If in fact this appropriation bill is not large enough and more ought to be appropriated to erect these buildings, such as they ought to have that the Army may be properly provided for, and I presume there will be no hesitation on the part of the American people in making the necessary appropriation. Therefore we can very safely leave that with the Secretary of War and the General of the Army until there is another session of Congress. There will be no danger of misapplication of the fund.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not wish the Senator from Georgia to put me in the attitude of saying that I think there is to be a misapplication of the fund, or that he has any more confidence in the Secretary of War or the Commanding General of the Army than I have. I make no such imputation as to them or any officer connected with the Army.

Mr. BROWN. I had no intention of making a charge against the Senator. I was only giving my reasons why it was safe to make the appropriations.

Mr. MAXEY. I want to correct the chairman of the committee in one regard, because I know he wants to do right. He stated that we should have to purchase ground at San Antonio for this work. He is mistaken about that; the Government owns the land there now, and therefore would not have to buy it.

Mr. ALLISON. How much, may I ask the Senator?

Mr. MAXEY. I once had occasion to investigate this matter in connection with a contract for building the general depot there, and there can be no question that the Government owns enough. It is ample for the purposes of the post; I do not remember the amount, but quite a sufficient amount. I have been there; it is about a mile and a half outside of San Antonio where the general depot of supplies is now located and where the officers' quarters are now located. Then we do not have to buy the ground at El Paso, because we own the ground there and have a deed for it, which deed I examined the other day.

I have talked with the General of the Army on this subject, and I understand, after a very full talk with him, what his policy is, and I fully concur with him as a great economic matter that this is the wisest thing to do in respect to Fort Bliss, where $50,000 of this money will go. This is the estimate and the remark:

This post is at the point where the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fé Railroad crosses the Rio Grande, which railroad has already reached Chihuahua and will in the course of a year or two at furthest reach the City of Mexico. This simple fact makes El Paso a strategic point of the first importance.

Just as I stated—

The site is not very good, but is the best attainable. The post is well built as far as it goes, but needs enlargement—to accommodate a garrison of four companies, the least that should continuously occupy that point. The enlargement of Fort Bliss will obviate the necessity for the post estimated for at old Fort Selden to cost $251,451.69.

What I stated—

So that upon the very strictest principles of economy it is sound and wise to make this appropriation of $75,000 for reservation posts at both points. The Senator in charge of the bill states that the Secretary of War has not divided this sum of $75,000 as between San Antonio and Fort Bliss, and in my judgment he ought not to have done so. But he can not expend a dollar of it outside of those two posts, and if we can not intrust to him the discretion of how much should go to one and how much to the other, then I must say we have a Secretary of War who is a very different man from the man I take him to be. I regard him as an honorable, upright man, a sound, economical Secretary of War and a good business man, and he will partition the amount, I have no doubt, between these two posts just as it ought to be done. And the amount of $75,000 is quite a small amount, and certainly it will be economy to grant it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations to strike out from line 900 to line 942, inclusive.

Mr. MAXEY. I want a division of the question so as to meet the point I made myself to non-concur in the amendment beginning in line 901 to and including the words "as follows" in lines 902 and 903, and then in lines 904 and 905 to non-concur in striking out:

For the establishment of reserved posts at San Antonio and Fort Bliss, $75,000.

So as to read:

To enable the Secretary of War to have buildings constructed and improvements made at military posts, as follows: For the establishment of reserved posts at San Antonio and Fort Bliss, $75,000.

Let each stand on its own merits.

Mr. BROWN. I should like to understand a little more about that. I think the Senator has made very great haste in having this passed, and I think there is as good reason for the other and I prefer——

Mr. MAXEY. That does not interfere with anybody else. I only ask a separate vote on the Texas items, and let the others come up on their merits.

Mr. ALLISON. The committee propose to strike out from line 900 to line 910 as one amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Has the Senator from Texas any objection to including lines 901 to 910 in one motion?

Mr. MAXEY. No, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Then the question will be on agreeing with the Committee on Appropriations in striking out from line 901 to 910, inclusive.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 21, noes 16; no quorum voting.

Mr. ALLISON and Mr. BROWN called for the yeas and nays.

Mr. HOAR. I hope the call will not be insisted on.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope not.

Mr. EDMUNDS. There must be a quorum here to do business.

Mr. MAXEY. I had called for a division of the question, but by some means unknown to me that has been overruled.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair did not overrule it. He submitted to the Senator whether he was willing to have a division from line 901 to line 910. The Chair appealed to the Senator and the Chair understood him to say he did not object to that division. The Chair does not certainly care how many divisions there are. Let the Senator indicate where his division is.

Mr. BROWN. Were not the yeas and nays ordered on the other proposition?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair misunderstood the Senator from Texas and therefore he has a right——

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is there a quorum present?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Not yet.

Mr. MAXEY. I ask the Senate to non-concur in the amendment from line 901 to line 903, as far as the word "follows;" and in line 904 to 905 to and including the word "dollars" in line 905.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator proposes one division from line 901 to 903.

Mr. MAXEY. To make it read:

To enable the Secretary of War to have buildings constructed and improvements made at military posts, as follows:
For the establishment of reserve posts at San Antonio and Fort Bliss, $75,000.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from Texas, I understand, proposes only to strike out from line 905 to 910.

Mr. MAXEY. The only item I propose to disagree with the committee upon is the one I personally presented from my knowledge of matters of that kind. I am not questioning the propriety of the others, for I know nothing about them.

Mr. PLUMB. Ought not the Senator from Texas to divide that appropriation? I do not know of anybody who believes that Fort Bliss ought to be a reserved post. It does not occupy any position with reference to supplies or anything of that kind which makes a post specially necessary there.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has counted, and there is a quorum present.

Mr. MAXEY. The Senator from Kansas is mistaken. I have just alluded to a road that is coming down, the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fé, to that point; the Texas Pacific road is there, and the California Southern. That is a strategic point, as the Secretary of War says. If it is not, I should not know where to pick out one.

Mr. BECK. I voted in committee to strike out these military posts, after some consideration, principally because of the confusion that seemed to exist in regard to them. Information seemed to be before us that Fort Colville, in Washington Territory, was not a very important post, that there were two in Arizona, and that perhaps one there was enough. Atlanta, Georgia, is a new post altogether, and Fort Bliss and San Antonio, instead of being estimated for or provided for in this bill separately, were united together and $75,000 appropriated for both.

When I voted to strike them out I did it with the understanding at least that some investigation would be made before the bill came up when some information should be given more than we had why all this clause should be stricken out, and if any good reason were assigned (as seemed to be by the Senator from Texas) there ought to be some appropriation made for these posts. I propose now to vote against striking them out unless there is something more done than has been done up to this time. It was more because of the confusion in regard to the want of information and the desire to have information that I acquiesced in striking them all out. I am satisfied nothing better can be done after the explanation made by the Senator from Texas than to vote at least to retain the items for Fort Bliss and San Antonio, and I will inquire further as to the rest.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Texas asks for a division of the question so as to have a separate vote on this part of the amendment:

To enable the Secretary of War to have buildings constructed and improvements made at the military posts as follows:
For the establishment of the reserved posts at San Antonio and Fort Bliss, $75,000.

The Senator from Texas moves to disagree to that amendment of the committee.

Mr. ALLISON. That does not seem to be according to proper form. The amendment of the committee is to strike out between certain lines. Now, as I understand the Senator from Texas, he moves to amend the amendment by striking out a portion of those lines.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No, he does not want the Senate to agree to the amendment striking out the words which have been read.

Mr. ALLISON. Has the Senator from Texas a right to so divide it?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks so.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well. Then I ask for a vote on striking out the remainder first.

Mr. MAXEY. I ask for the vote first on the part I have called for. I have made the motion for it, and it comes first.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not care which comes first.

Mr. SLATER. I shall also ask for a vote separately on the lines I have indicated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate should get through with this first.

Mr. SLATER. I do not lose any right?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Oh, no! The question is on striking out the words which have been last read at the desk. The Senator from Texas moves to disagree to the amendment striking out those words.

Mr. HARRIS. We did not understand it so. The question is, Will the Senate agree to the amendment reported by the committee striking out the words? I voted "no," because I am sustaining the view of the Senator from Texas.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Very well. Will the Senate agree to the amendment reported by the committee striking out that portion of the bill last read?

The amendment was agreed to—ayes 21, noes not counted.

Mr. SLATER. May I ask for a separate vote on striking out the words "at Fort Colville, Washington Territory, $50,000?"

I wish to say to the Senate that this certainly ought not to be stricken out. This post is one of the most important frontier posts right in the Indian country, where troops must necessarily remain and where every appearance of preparation to meet any possible contingency should be constantly displayed before the eyes of the Indians, so that they will understand that the United States is always prepared, not only in the present but in the future, to meet any outbreak. Certainly this application ought to be granted.

INTERNAL-REVENUE AND TARIFF DUTIES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will Senators suspend until the Chair fills up a conference committee? The Chair appoints the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] conferees on House bill 5538 to reduce internal-revenue taxation.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. 889) to provide for the erection of a public building in Jefferson City, in the State of Missouri; and

A bill (S. 1785) for the relief of David Mordecai and J. Randolph Mordecai, composing the commercial firm of Mordecai & Co., of Baltimore, Maryland.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7595) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. SLATER] asks for a separate vote on the words—

To enable the Secretary of War to have buildings constructed and improvements made at military posts as follows: At Fort Colville, Washington Territory, $50,000.

The Senator moves to non-concur in that.

Mr. ALLISON. The vote will be as in the other case, on concurrence. Those who vote "ay" will vote to strike it out.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes, sir.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Now the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BROWN] wants a separate vote.

Mr. BROWN. There are two or three other posts mentioned. I am willing to have the vote taken on them together. I do not care to ask for a further division.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question will be on the remainder of the amendment of the committee to strike out.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Acting Secretary proceeded to read the bill at line 943.

Mr. CALL. Do I understand that all the remainder of that paragraph is stricken out?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes, sir; the whole of it.

Mr. CALL. I should like to inquire what special objection there was to the provision in that section designating how the land surrendered by the Department of War to the Interior Department should be disposed of?

Mr. ALLISON. This relates to the sale of military reservations. We had no report from the Committee on Military Affairs before us. We had no information. It is legislation. It is a matter that is not pressing, and we had not time to examine into it to see whether it was wise or otherwise; and without the report of some committee having charge of this subject the Committee on Appropriations thought it unwise to take the responsibility for this legislation. It is pure legislation. It would not be entertained a moment if presented in the Senate, and therefore we recommended that it be struck out.

Mr. CALL. There have been in the State of Florida some very valuable public lands belonging to military reservations which have been transferred to the Interior Department, and which I understand there is very grave apprehension will be obtained by artifice and without an opportunity on the part of the people to bid for them; but I have no such information as would authorize me to make any motion upon this subject. I submit to the chairman of the committee, however, whether it would not be proper to allow this clause which has come from the House to stand in the bill, as there was doubtless some good reasons for it.

Mr. ALLISON. I only call attention to the effect of the last clause of the proviso:

And provided further, That any settler who was in actual occupation of any portion of any one of these reservations prior to the location of the reservation, and continues such occupation to the present time, shall be entitled to locate under the homestead law the land upon which he lives, not to exceed one hundred and sixty acres.

There are great questions involved of public policy, questions of law arising out of the occupation of these reservations. Now, the idea that we shall in this perfunctory way, two days before the end of the session, undertake to do justice to every party interested in these matters it seems to me is preposterous. So I trust this matter will go over until we can have an opportunity of investigating it fully and fairly.

Mr. CALL. I shall make no further opposition. I would rather it should be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The vote has been taken. There can be a separate vote in the Senate.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator can renew his motion in the Senate.

FORTIFICATION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. DAWES. I should like to submit a conference report, if the Senator from Iowa will give way a moment.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well.

Mr. DAWES. I submit the report of the committee of conference on the fortification appropriation bill.

The Acting Secretary read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7191) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, and for the armament thereof, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 4, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 11 of said amendment strike out the words "three hundred," and in lieu of the sum proposed in the amendment insert the sum of "$400,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed in said amendment insert the sum of "$20,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed in said amendment insert the sum of "$75,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

H. L. DAWES,
JOHN A. LOGAN,
F. M. COCKRELL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

WM. H. FORNEY,
J. H. KETCHAM,
THOS. RYAN,
Managers on the part of the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senate proceed to the consideration of this conference report? The Chair hearing no objection, it is before the Senate. The question is on agreeing to the report.

The report was agreed to.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7595) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Signal Service," in the clause making appropriations "for the observation and report of storms," in line 953, after the word "dollars," to insert:

For West India reports, $4,000; for cotton-belt reports, $12,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 976, to increase the total amount of the appropriation "for the observation and report of storms," from $35,000 to $51,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 981, to increase the appropriation "for maintenance and repair of military-telegraph lines," from $30,000 to $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 989, after "for," to strike out "continuing" and insert "completing;" in line 993, after "for," to strike out "continuing" and insert "completing;" and after the word "dollars," in line 995, to strike out "and it is provided that the limitations hereinafter contained shall not prohibit such further details of officers and men for the relief of the Lady Franklin Bay expedition as the Secretary of War may deem necessary," and to insert:

And it is provided that the above work near Lady Franklin Bay and Point Barrow shall be closed, and the force there employed shall be returned to the United States within the next fiscal year.

So as to make the clause read:

Observation and exploration in the Arctic Seas: For completing the work of scientific observation and exploration on or near the shores of Lady Franklin Bay, and for transportation of men and supplies to said location and return, and for completing the work of scientific exploration at Point Barrow, $33,000. And it is provided that the above work near Lady Franklin Bay and Point Barrow shall be closed, and the force there employed shall be returned to the United States within the next fiscal year.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 1006, after "dollars," to strike out the following clause:

For mileage to officers when traveling on duty under orders, $5,000.

And in line 1012, to reduce the total appropriation for officers of the Signal Service from $235,000 to $230,000.

Mr. ALLISON. That is an error. That clause ought not to be stricken out. I desire that that amendment shall not be agreed to.

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment was, in line 1014, before "commissioned," to strike out "eight" and insert "ten;" so as to read:

And the Secretary of War is authorized, in his discretion, to detail for the service in the Signal Corps not to exceed ten commissioned officers, exclusive of the second lieutenants of the Signal Corps authorized by law.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after "law," in line 1016, to strike out the following proviso:

Provided, That he may, in his discretion, make a further detail of officers for service in the Arctic Sea expedition.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 1045, before "mules," to strike out "twenty-five" and insert "forty-five;" and in the same line, after "mules," to strike out "two" and insert "four;" so as to read:

Commutation of fuel for two hundred and forty-three enlisted men of the Signal Corps, at $8 each per month, $23,328; forage for forty-five mules, $4,500; stationery, $100.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 1049, to increase the appropriation for regular supplies: Fuel, authorized allowance for officers and enlisted men at Fort Myer, Virginia, and for various offices at Fort Myer, Virginia, and on the United States military-telegraph lines, &c., from $57,051.75 to $59,051.75.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in the clause making appropriations for incidental expenses of the Signal Service, in line 1051, before "mule," to strike out "horse and;" in line 1052, before "dollars," to strike out "five hundred" and insert "two hundred and fifty;" and in line 1056, after "thousand," to strike out "four hundred and seventy-five" and insert "two hundred and twenty-five;" so as to make the clause read:

Incidental expenses: For mule shoes, $250; blacksmith's tools, $350; veterinary supplies, $300; fire apparatus, disinfectants, &c., $125; in all, $1,225.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 1058, after "transportation," to insert "and distribution of supplies, instruments, and material, $25,000, for transportation;" and in line 1065, after "all," to strike out "ten" and insert "thirty-five;" so as to make the clause read:

Transportation: For transportation and distribution of supplies, instruments, and material, $25,000; for transportation of officers and men, $8,875; means of transportation, namely: five mules, at $140 each, $700; one spring-wagon, $200; for repairs to means of transportation, $300; in all, $35,275.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 1110, to strike out the following paragraph:

To complete the road from the city of Chattanooga to the national cemetery, near that city, $2,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary to finish said road.

Mr. HARRIS. I desire to say to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations and to the Senate that at the national cemetery at Chattanooga there are over fifteen thousand dead, and the road leading to it from the city is absolutely impassable, as I am informed by a committee of the board of trade of that city. It is a matter to which so much attention has been directed there that at least a half dozen of the most respectable gentlemen of the city have written to me urging this appropriation as absolutely necessary; in view of which fact I appeal to the chairman of the committee and to the Senate not to strike out the appropriation as made by the House, but let it remain, as it is believed that that will complete the road and give free access to the cemetery by visitors who desire to visit the resting-place of their friends.

Mr. ALLISON. I will not occupy any time on this matter. Last year we appropriated $5,000 for the completion of this road, and we directed that none of the money appropriated by that and the preceding paragraph, relating to the road at Fort Scott, Kansas, should in either case be used unless the amount appropriated was made to complete the road. We intended that they should have an additional sum of $5,000 to make the roads to these cemeteries. The whole $5,000, I understand, has been expended at the Chattanooga cemetery, although we provided that no part of it should be expended unless upon a scale which would complete the road. Upon that state of facts we struck out the appropriation.

Mr. HARRIS. I am not prepared to go beyond this in explaining the reasons why the $5,000 have not completed the road as contemplated; but I understand that backwater in a very great freshet in the Tennessee River made it necessary to make certain fills, costing largely more than the estimates which had been made for the construction of the road, and for that reason the $5,000 proved inadequate to its completion. It is not only not now completed, but after the entire expenditure made it remains in an impassable condition, and with this $2,500 more it can be completed and made permanent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations to strike out the clause.

Mr. BROWN. Is that now subject to amendment, or must I wait in order to offer an amendment at this point?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is open to amendment. You can move to amend the text before the question is taken on striking it out.

Mr. BROWN. I desire to move an amendment.

Mr. HARRIS. Still, the Senator from Georgia will have an opportunity to propose any amendment after the committee amendments have been disposed of.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes, sir.

Mr. BROWN. I do not want to embarrass the pending amendment, in which the Senator from Tennessee is interested.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Amendments can be proposed afterward to come in at any part of the bill.

Mr. BROWN. I want to give notice, then.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No notice is required.

Mr. BROWN. I shall move to insert an amount for the Marietta cemetery.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 17, noes 13; no quorum voting.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask for the yeas and nays, as a means of getting a quorum.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. COCKRELL. This is a very plain, simple question. In the sundry civil act passed last year there was the following provision:

For the road from Fort Scott to the national cemetery, Kansas: For the completion of the roadway from Fort Scott, Kansas, to the national cemetery near that city, $3,000

For the road from Chattanooga to the national cemetery, Tennessee: For the completion of the roadway from Chattanooga national cemetery to the city of Chattanooga, Tennessee, $5,000: Provided, That none of the money appropriated by this and the preceding paragraph shall be expended unless in each case the amount appropriated shall complete said roadways.

There was a specific appropriation for a specific object, provided it would complete the roadways. They had no right to spend a dollar under that provision unless that amount would complete the work. Congress fixed the amount in its act providing that none of it should be expended, if the expenditure could not be brought within the sum named. They trample that law under their feet and come in and ask for an additional amount now. It is useless to pass any law regulating the amount that shall be expended; we might as well determine to give them whatever they want to spend.

Mr. INGALLS. The Senator from Missouri speaks with some heat, as if this were an exceptional case. I should suppose that his long experience on the Appropriations Committee would have taught him the absolute futility of any attempt to impose limitations on executive power by legislative restraint. We make appropriations for public buildings, for roads, for every other purpose, and they are habitually disregarded by the officers who have the objects in charge. They spend what they please and then come here for the balance to make up the deficiency. There is no more use, under the existing state of things, of attempting to impose any restraint upon the absolute will of executive officers by an act of Congress than there is in attempting to restrain Niagara or the course of the currents of the atmosphere by legislation.

Mr. COCKRELL. Why, then, is Congress in session?

Mr. INGALLS. I do not know.

Mr. COCKRELL. Why are we then spending time in passing a law?

Mr. INGALLS. I have no idea. There is an absolute defiance of legislative authority habitually in every Executive Department of this Government.

Mr. COCKRELL. Should such executive officers then be continued in power to handle the people's money?

Mr. INGALLS. That is a conundrum I do not choose to answer. I simply call attention to the fact and to the scandal and the disgrace of it. I am somewhat amazed that the Senator from Missouri exerts himself so powerfully upon this subject as if it were an exceptional case. Give them the money; they will spend all they want and come here next year for an additional appropriation. It is utterly useless to attempt to restrain or limit or hinder or impede the executive officers who are intrusted with the expenditure of money by act of Congress.

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope the people will pay attention to what the Senator has said. I heartily indorse his statement, and shall in future commend it to the prayerful consideration of the voters and tax-payers of this country.

Mr. HARRIS. The engineer in charge of this work may have done very wrong in expending the $5,000 without completing the work as directed by the appropriation act of last year. I do not know that this is or is not true; but the practical fact remains that the $5,000 have been expended and you have no road. The practical question for the Senate to determine is, will you abandon the work thus begun and continue to have no road, or will you by appropriating this pittance of $2,500 complete a work on which you have already expended $10,000. That is the practical question; let the Senate decide it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The yeas and nays will be called on agreeing to the amendment.

The Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HILL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. WALKER].

Mr. MILLER, of California (when his name was called). I am paired with my colleague [Mr. FARLEY].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. VEST. I was requested by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIAMS] to announce that he is paired with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. SAUNDERS].

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am paired with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. GARLAND]. I would vote "yea" and he would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 27, nays 18; as follows:

YEAS—27.

Allison,	Groome,	Logan,	Ransom,
Anthony,	Harrison,	McDill,	Rollins,
Beck,	Hawley,	McMillan,	Sawyer,
Blair,	Hoar,	Miller of N. Y.,	Sewell,

Edmunds,	Johnston,	Morrill,	Williams.
Farley,	Lamar,	Pendleton,

So the amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed, and continued to line 1129.

Mr. ALLISON. I see that there is a misprint in line 1128. I ask that it may be corrected. It ought to read "confederate armies." Insert "ed" in "conferate."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The spelling will be corrected.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "miscellaneous objects," in line 1135, after the word "dollars," to insert:

And the sets of said compilation held by the Secretary of War for distribution to addresses to be furnished by Senators, Representatives, and Delegates shall be subject to their order, as now provided by law, until July 1, 1884.

So as to make the clause read:

For continuing the publication of the official records, and printing and binding, under direction of the Secretary of War, of a compilation of the official records, Union and Confederate, of the war of the rebellion so far as the same may be ready for publication during the fiscal year, $30,000. And the sets of said compilation held by the Secretary of War for distribution to addresses to be furnished by Senators, Representatives, and Delegates shall be subject to their order, as now provided by law, until July 1, 1884.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 1139, to strike out:

For the collection, preparation, and printing of the orders of General Anthony Wayne, $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 1146, to strike out:

For construction of a fire-proof building for headquarters and library at the United States Artillery School at Fortress Monroe, Virginia, $30,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 1154, before the word "thousand," to strike out "five" and insert "three;" so as to make the clause read:

For the Artillery School at Fortress Monroe, Virginia: To provide for text-books, drawing materials, models, and material necessary in the science of engineering and artillery, stationery, and miscellaneous necessaries for use of the school, $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 1176, to insert:

The Secretary of War to purchase from Addison M. Sawyer his patent-right for canister shot, and to pay him therefor such sum as he shall deem just and reasonable, not exceeding $25,000.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to modify the amendment by inserting the words "to enable" before "the Secretary of War," and adding "in his discretion" after the word "War;" so as to read:

To enable the Secretary of War, in his discretion, to purchase, &c.

Mr. VANCE. I suggest to the chairman of the committee that, in line 1179, it apparently reads that the amount to be paid shall be such sum as is deemed just and reasonable by Mr. Sawyer instead of by the Secretary of War.

Mr. ALLISON. I thank the Senator from North Carolina. I have just been scratching my pencil around those words myself. I will modify the amendment there so as to read:

Such sum as the Secretary of War shall deem just and reasonable.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The modifications suggested by the Senator from Iowa will be made if there be no objection. The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as modified.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after line 1180, to strike out:

For completing the sea-wall on the west side and southeastern portion of Governor's Island, New York Harbor, $15,000; the same to be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

INTERNAL-REVENUE AND TARIFF DUTIES.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I desire to present a question which is one of personal privilege, I believe. I have been informed since my return that while I was absent from the Chamber the President of the Senate did me the honor to appoint me as one of the members of the committee of conference on the revenue bill. I beg leave to decline.

There are certain circumstances of personal embarrassment growing out of my remarks in the Senate in respect of that subject which would of themselves be sufficient to control my action. Two of the Senators who were upon that committee have been excused this morning upon the ground that in the prosecution of their endeavor to have a conference they came to the knowledge of the fact that the House of Representatives instead of having authorized its conferees to have a full and free conference had limited their powers and denied the constitutional authority of the Senate to enact the bill which we sent to them, or parts of it. I construed the vote in which I participated as a declaration on the part of the Senate that that would obstruct a full and free conference. I see no reasonable expectation of removing that question out of controversy, either in committee or in the Senate, as matters now stand. I therefore will ask the Chair to excuse me from service upon the committee of conference.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, for the reasons stated so well by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], I ask to be relieved from service upon the conference committee on the revenue bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senate excuse the two Senators from service upon the committee of conference on the revenue bill? Those in favor will say "ay;" of the contrary opinion "no." [Putting the question.] The ayes have it, and the Senators are excused. The Chair must see, unless some person can now speak authoritatively, whether there is any Senator on the Democratic side who will accept. The Chair will test it by appointing the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. DAVIS] and the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. JONAS].

Mr. JONAS. Mr. President, I fully concur in the reasons given by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] and the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] in withdrawing from the position of conferees on the part of the Senate, and also in the reasons given by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN], and I beg respectfully to be excused from serving.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Mr. President, I have been out of the Chamber this morning, as I was yesterday, on committee service, and I do not know fully what has taken place; but from what I have seen and heard since I came in it would appear to be improper for me to accept service on the conference committee, though I have great hopes that the difficulty that the Senate is now in will be overcome in some way, and that we shall yet have a tariff bill passed by this Congress.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senate excuse the two Senators last appointed? Those in favor of giving them leave to decline will say "ay;" contrary "no." [Putting the question.] The ayes have it, and they are excused. The Chair would like a response from some older Senator whether the Chair should go on through the list of Senators on that side of the Chamber. A response should come from the Democratic side, if at all. Unless there is some Senator who will respond on the subject, the Chair will appoint the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] and the Senator from Texas [Mr. MAXEY].

Mr. MAXEY. Mr. President, as I understand from what has transpired, the conferees on the part of the House are under peremptory instructions indicating the course which they shall pursue on that conference. It can not, therefore, in any sense be said to be a full and free conference, and in that state of the case it will be impossible for me to serve. I therefore decline to serve.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, I shall certainly decline to serve on the committee of conference. I regard the action of the House as an opinion that what we have done is a nullity so far as the tariff business is concerned, and entertaining that opinion, I decline respectfully to serve on the committee of conference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Texas and the Senator from South Carolina will be excused if there be no objection. The Chair hears none. If some Senator would advise the Chair that no Democrat will serve on the committee, it will relieve his embarrassment.

Mr. HARRIS. I do not hesitate to say that I think the Chair would be warranted in assuming that such is the fact from the experiments already made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Assuming it to be true, from what has been said by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS], as the Chair does not want to tender the appointment to every individual on that side, that no Democrat will accept the appointment on the conference committee, the Chair appoints the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] and the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MAHONE]. He appoints the Senator from Virginia as there is no member on the committee from the South. Neither Senator is in the Chamber. The Chair would like to know whether they will accept. The Sergeant-at-Arms will notify them.

Mr. INGALLS subsequently said: Mr. President, I learn that during my absence temporarily the Chair has done me the honor to appoint me as a member of the committee of conference on the House bill to reduce internal-revenue taxation. My engagements are such that it would be impossible for me to serve on that committee, and I therefore beg to be excused.

Mr. MORRILL. I hope the Senator will not ask to be excused. We hope to get through this afternoon and evening.

Mr. INGALLS. It is quite impossible for me, Mr. President, in view of matters that require my attention here and elsewhere.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senate excuse the Senator from Kansas from serving on the committee? The Chair hears no objection, and he is excused. The Chair appoints the Senator from California [Mr. MILLER].

Mr. MILLER, of California. Mr. President, I shall have to decline the appointment on the conference committee with which the Chair has honored me.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from California declines the appointment on the committee. Will the Senate excuse him? The Chair hearing no objection, he is excused. The Chair appoints the Senator from Iowa [Mr. McDILL] in place of the Senator from California [Mr. MILLER] as a member of the committee of conference.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in compliance with a resolution of December 8, 1882, a list of pensioners on the roll January 1, 1883, &c.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that that lie on the table until the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] comes in. I presume he will want to have it printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The list is in the Pension Office; it is not here. It would cost $50,000 to print it, the Secretary says.

Mr. ANTHONY. It would cost $60,000 to print the usual number.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope it will be passed over for a moment.

Mr. ANTHONY. It is not ordered to be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No, sir. The communication will lie on the table for the present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in compliance with a resolution of the 26th ultimo, a list of officers of the United States Army on duty in Washington, &c.; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting, in compliance with resolution of the 26th ultimo, a list of officers of the Navy now on duty in Washington; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

He also laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a letter from the Director of the Geological Survey, together with a list of persons now employed in that office or employed there since July 1, 1882, &c.; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

IMPROVEMENT OF THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. LOGAN, Mr. JONES of Nevada, Mr. MCMILLAN, Mr. JONAS, and Mr. WALKER the Select Committee on the Mississippi River Examination authorized to be appointed under a resolution of the 22d ultimo.

VISITORS TO WEST POINT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, and Mr. HARRIS members of the Board of Visitors on the part of the Senate to attend the annual examination of the cadets at the United States Military Academy at West Point, New York.

VISITORS TO NAVAL ACADEMY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. LAPHAM and Mr. CAMDEN members of the Board of Visitors on the part of the Senate to attend the annual examination of the cadets at the United States Naval Academy at Annapolis, Maryland.

AMENDMENTS TO A BILL.

Mr. PLATT and Mr. CALL submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them respectively to the bill (H. R. 7637) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for prior years, and for those certified as due by the accounting officers of the Treasury in accordance with section 4 of the act of June 14, 1878, heretofore paid from permanent appropriations, and for other purposes; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. FAIR presented a memorial of the Legislature of Nevada, in favor of the establishment of a mail-route from Genoa to Alda Mill, Nevada; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7595) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "National Home for Disabled Volunteers," to strike out lines 1280 to 1333, in the following words:

That section 2 of the act of February 26, 1881, be so amended as to read as follows:

"SEC. 2. All pensions payable or to be paid under this act to pensioners who are inmates of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers shall be paid to the treasurer or treasurers of said home, upon security given to the satisfaction of the managers, to be disbursed for the benefit of the pensioners without deduction for fines or penalties, under regulations to be established by the managers of the home, said payment to be made by the pension agent upon a certificate of the proper officer of the home that the pensioner is an inmate thereof, and is then still living. Any balance of the pension which may remain at the date of the pensioner's discharge shall be paid over to him; and in case of his death at the home, the same shall be paid to the widow or children, or in default of either, to his legal representatives. And in such case and in cases where pensions have heretofore been paid to the treasurers of said home for the benefit of inmates of the home who have since been discharged or have died at the home or on furlough, any balance of the pension remaining at the date of such discharge or death shall be paid over to the pensioner, or in case of his death, to the wife, children, or legal representatives."

That from and after the passage of this act the board of managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers shall apply the excess above $5 monthly of the pensions of all inmates of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers to the support and the objects and purposes of said home: Provided, however, That the above provision shall not apply to any inmate of said home who, having at the time of his admission to said home, wife, minor child, or parent dependent upon him for support, shall apply the excess of his pension above said $5 each month to said support. The said board of managers shall annually report the amount of pension-money received by them under the above provision: Provided, That in addition to the persons now declared by law to be entitled to admission to the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, any person who served during the war of the rebellion in the Army or Navy of the United States and was honorably discharged therefrom, who is not otherwise provided for by law, and who is incapacitated by reason of wounds incurred in the line of duty or disease contracted during his said service from earning his own support, may be admitted to said home in the same manner and under the same conditions as volunteer soldiers are now admitted. And section 2 of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for deficiencies, and for other purposes," approved February 26, 1881, is hereby repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations "under the Navy Department," in line 1346, to increase the appropriation for "navy-yard, Mare Island, California: continuation of stone dry-dock," from $200,000 to $350,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 1362, to insert:

To reimburse the officers and men of the United States steamer Rodgers, burned in Saint Lawrence Bay, Behring Straits, Siberia, on the 30th of November, 1881, for the loss of their personal effects by the destruction of said vessel, there shall be paid to each of the officers an amount equal to two months of their sea-pay, and to each of the men $75. To the mother of Master C. F. Putnam, who was lost on the ice in the heroic endeavor to afford relief to his associates, a sum equal to twelve months of his sea-pay; and for the purpose of settling the accounts of the late Master Putnam, the 1st day of January, 1882, shall be assumed as the date of his death, and a sum sufficient therefor is hereby appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 1376, to insert:

To enable the Secretary of the Navy to suitably reward, in such manner as he may deem most advisable, the natives at and about Saint Lawrence Bay who housed, fed, and extended other kindness to the officers and crew of the United States steamer Rodgers subsequent to the destruction of that vessel, $3,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 1383, to insert:

For continuation of the wharf and for a rigging and sail loft and drill-hall on Coaster's Harbor Island, $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 1386, to insert:

For the erection of a new naval observatory upon the site purchased under the act of Congress approved February 4, 1880, $200,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 1390, to insert:

For the erection of a compass observatory for testing compasses, $7,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 1392, to insert:

To enable the Secretary of the Navy to pay the Potomac Steamboat Company the amount found to be due them by a board of naval officers appointed to ascertain the damage occasioned by the negligence of the officers in command of the United States naval tug Fortune in running down the said company's steamer Excelsior, in Hampton Roads, Virginia, December 4, 1882, $19,557.15; and the acceptance of this sum shall be in full for all claims of said company against the United States because of said collision.

Mr. BAYARD. I submit an amendment there, on line 1402, after the word "claims," to strike out "of" and insert "which the;" and after the word "company" to insert "now has;" so as to read "for all claims which the said company now has." This is assented to. It is to prevent the exclusion of claims of salvage that may be brought against this company hereafter.

Mr. COCKRELL. Am I to understand from the Senator from Iowa that the question of salvage is to be left out? Was that the agreement in committee?

Mr. ALLISON. That was not the agreement in the committee. The Senator from Delaware called my attention this morning to the fact that there was a suit pending against this company for salvage. It seems to me—I may be mistaken—that if this company shall be compelled to pay salvage on account of this loss in addition to the loss already sustained, we ought not to foreclose them. That is my individual opinion. Ofcourse it was intended, however, in the committee that this appropriation should cover every claim of this company.

Mr. BECK. I do not want any misunderstanding about this. The first proposition was to send the whole matter to the Court of Claims, including salvage and all.

Mr. BAYARD. That was not regular under our rules, being general legislation on an appropriation bill, and for that reason the provision was inserted as it is.

Mr. BECK. That was the first suggestion. Then the next suggestion made by the Senator from Iowa and others was that this amount of money should be allowed in full of all claims, salvage and all. I know it was so read to the committee, but there is a modification of it that has been added since. Before the Senate vote on this, I want care taken to be sure that it is right. A number of members of the committee, of whom I am one, desire to settle this matter wholly, or not settle it at all; or else send it to the Court of Claims for the whole amount, or let this be accepted in full, and not ask us to pay this amount of money now and have it left open for future claims and suits.

Mr. BAYARD. This amount of $19,957.15 is an itemized account for every item of damage found by a board of naval officers, for which the United States is liable because their officer caused it by his own negligence, and he was dismissed from the service on that account. There has been a claim of salvage made against the company. The parties have filed their libel, claiming $10,000. The Secretary of the Navy distinctly refused to allow that question to be entertained, and he recommended only the payment of these itemized damages for the precise loss to these parties caused by the action of the Government tug.

If it shall come out hereafter that these people are adjudicated by the decree of a court of admiralty to pay this money, the Government will owe them that just as much as it owes them this. They are damnified already; their property has been taken from them. They ought not to be kept out of it. They can not claim from the Government any more than they shall be hereafter compelled to pay. What is allowed them now is allowed them for the claims up to this time that are liquidated. If they shall be compelled to pay additional salvage, law, equity, and conscience would compel the Government to reimburse them; and I trust there will be no objection to let that matter stand open in that way.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRISON in the chair). The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after line 1403, to insert:

For continuing the transfer to copper plates of photolithographic charts, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out lines 1412 to 1686, in the following words:

And said commission shall also report in reference to each navy-yard the sale of which is not recommended by them, whether it is in their opinion specially adapted for any specific purpose, and whether it should be retained in active operation or otherwise used; whether it is fully equipped and provided with all necessary appliances for the prompt and economical execution of such work as may be required; and if not, in what respect it is defective; and what will be required to place it in proper and effective condition for any probable demands in time of war, and the estimated cost of any additional requirement; and also whether, in their opinion, any improvements can be made in the system of performing work at the navy-yards which will promote efficiency and reduce expense. That the Secretary of the Navy shall cause to be laid out in convenient lots for building and commercial purposes, with convenient streets, avenues, and wharves, in substantial accord with the recommendations and report made and submitted by Commodore John H. Upshur, all that land in the Wallabout Bay, in the State of New York, included within the present limits of the Brooklyn navy-yard and the United States naval hospital grounds, which is bounded and described as follows:

Parcel A, containing about thirty-three and one-quarter acres, beginning at the northwest corner of Washington and Flushing avenues; thence westerly along the line of Flushing avenue eight hundred and forty-eight feet; thence northerly along a line parallel to the line of Washington avenue to the north line of the property of the United States, being about one thousand nine hundred feet; thence easterly along the line of the property of the United States to Washington avenue, being about nine hundred and forty feet; thence along the line of Washington avenue to the point of beginning.

Parcel B, containing about twenty-four and a half acres, beginning at the northeast corner of Washington and Flushing avenues; thence northerly along the line of Washington avenue to the northerly line of the property of the United States fronting on Kent avenue basin; thence easterly along the line of the property of the United States parallel with Kent avenue basin to the easterly line of Hewes street extended; thence southwesterly along the easterly line of Hewes street extended about one hundred and fifty feet; thence westerly on a line parallel to the course of Flushing avenue west of Ryerson street to a point five hundred and twenty feet from Washington avenue; thence southerly to Flushing avenue seven hundred feet; thence westerly along the line of Flushing avenue five hundred and twenty feet to the place of beginning.

And the Secretary shall cause the said lots, when so laid out as aforesaid, to be appraised by three appraisers of experience and competent knowledge, to be selected by him, and after said appraisal he shall advertise the same for sale at public auction, in such manner as he may deem for the best interests of the Government, either at one sale or several different sales, at not less than the appraised value of each, subject to such reservations and limitations as to use as he may deem best, and he is hereby authorized and empowered to make and execute, in the name of the United States, deeds of such lots to the purchasers, upon the payment of the purchase-money in full, and at such sale or sales he may give to the purchasers of any single lot the election to take, at the same price per square foot, any number of unsold lots within the same block or square. After deducting the cost of all surveys, plans, appraisal, advertisements, and sale, he shall pay or cause to be paid into the Treasury of the United States the proceeds of said sale: Provided, That the city of Brooklyn may purchase, at not less than the appraised value thereof, so much of the northerly end of parcel A, hereinbefore described, as said city may desire for market purposes, the southerly line of said purchase to extend from Washington avenue westerly to the westerly line of said parcel, and in a line parallel to Flushing avenue.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, to strike out lines 1487 to 1510, inclusive, in the following words:

And the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized and directed to sell at public auction in such manner as he may deem for the best interests of the Government, either at one sale or at several different sales, the property known as the Naval Hospital at Chelsea, Massachusetts, with the grounds thereto belonging.

And the Secretary shall cause the said property to be appraised by three appraisers of experience and competent knowledge, to be selected by him, and after said appraisal he shall advertise the same for sale subject to such reservations and limitations as to use as he may deem best; and he is hereby authorized and empowered to make and execute, in the name of the United States, deeds of lots to the purchasers upon the payment of the purchase-money in full; and at such sale or sales he may give to the purchasers of any single lot the election to take at the same price per square foot any number of unsold lots within the same block or square. After deducting the cost of all surveys, plans, appraisal, advertisements, and sales, he shall pay or cause to be paid, into the Treasury of the United States, the proceeds of said sale. And further, that $50,000 of the sum so realized shall be placed to the credit of the Navy Department, for the selection of a new site and the erection of a suitable building thereon, if thought advisable.

Mr. HOAR. I think if the Senate will give me its attention one moment that the members of the Appropriations Committee who are present will give unanimous consent to having this paragraph stand. It is true that it is new legislation, so far as it gives the Secretary of the Navy power to sell certain Government property, but still it is practically a mere mode of saving a very large sum of money to the Government and of stopping the useless employment of what may be made to yield a very large return.

There is an old naval hospital in the city of Chelsea which is close to Boston, in Suffolk County, Massachusetts, which has I think about fifty acres or exceeding fifty acres of land. It is one-eighth of the entire real estate of the populous part of that city and one-eighth in value of the entire city, I believe, though of this last fact I am not quite sure; at any rate it is nearly one-eighth of the taxable property there. It is right on the water front and it is used for a hospital where they have an average of only twenty sailors. It takes just so much out of the taxable property of the town, and it is estimated as worth from half a million to a million dollars; it is certainly worth more than half a million. The city government have petitioned Congress to have it sold. A large number of the principal tax-payers have joined in a petition for its sale. Hon. Mr. Frost, lately the Representative from that district and mayor of the city of Chelsea, with whom I have talked, says that there is no division of opinion there about the expediency of selling it. The Representative in the other House representing that district, Mr. MORSE, is of the same opinion. The Secretary of the Navy is of the same opinion.

Here is property worth from half a million to a million of dollars tied up, useless in the town where it is for the purposes of a hospital for an average of twenty sailors, for whom $50,000 would furnish an abundantly suitable and convenient asylum in all respects; and in addition to that the hospital in these great grounds is an old building, itself more than fifty years old. It is full of disease and whatever there is in an old building of that kind which has been used for such a purpose for more than a generation. Clearly there ought to be a new building anyway.

This proposition merely authorizes the Secretary of the Navy to do what he himself has recommended, to sell this property, appropriate $50,000 of the proceeds to a new hospital, and put the balance into the Treasury. I have inquired very carefully of Mr. MORSE and Mr. Frost, and I am satisfied, and I think my colleague concurs with me, that there is no possible job or device of anybody who wants a chance to buy property cheap from the Government or anything of that kind; but it is a case where this great value is tied up, an injury to the town, useless to the Government, and $50,000 would be ample for its purpose. It is under these circumstances really a prudent and enonomical administration of the Government property. That is all there is of it.

Mr. DAWES. Whatever my colleague has stated about this matter I know largely from personal knowledge to be true, and I believe it to be for the best interest of the Government to dispose of this property. I am sure the proposition does not spring from the purpose of any person to speculate in it, but from a desire on the part of the town to have that property used as other property is, and not lie there idle and useless and costing the Government more expense than economy would justify it in maintaining an establishment of that kind for that purpose.

Mr. HOAR. Let me add that it would be almost true to say that the interest on this capital for a single year is in itself a sufficient capital to supply everything that is wanted. I suppose that if you should put into one of our country towns the interest on what this property would sell for, that interest for one year would furnish a better hospital for all the sailors who go there than this property furnishes now.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not know but that the Senator from Massachusetts may be right about this; I do not know but that it would be a wise thing to sell this hospital property; but we can not do everything on this sundry civil bill. I have no doubt it would be a wise thing for us to put a great many bills that are now on our Calendar on this bill. I have four or five such bills in which my constituents are interested that I should be glad to put on this bill so that they can be relieved. But this is a matter that has never been investigated, so far as we know, by any committee of this body. It has never been reported upon by any committee of this body. It is not suggested in the report of the Secretary of the Navy made last year. It is true he has written some letter about it, recommending, I believe, that the property be sold.

I do not know how this hospital was originally purchased. I have been told that it was purchased from proceeds of the naval-hospital fund. If so, there is a grave question whether the proceeds of this sale should go into the Treasury, or whether the money should be attached and applied to the naval-hospital fund.

These are all questions that ought to be examined by some committee. It can not be expected that we can examine them in the Committee on Appropriations in a day or two, or in the hurry of a great bill like this. If this naval hospital has stood there for fifty years, it can stand for four or five months longer, and let some regular committee having charge of this subject take it up and consider it.

Immediately preceding this is a proposition looking to the sale of fifty-three acres of the Brooklyn navy-yard. Are we expected without detailed examination to go into a question of such a character, pure legislation that does not relate to a single appropriation for any department of this Government? It has no more right to go upon this bill than the bankrupt law has, and I do not know but that the Senator from Massachusetts will move, if he gets this on, that the general bankruptcy law shall go on the bill. It is just as germane to it as this is.

Mr. HOAR. Some of the views of the Senator from Iowa undoubtedly are true; but here is a plain case where you are going to involve the Government in cost for the next twelve months, because you can not now get a bill through before the 1st of December——

Mr. ALLISON. I do not know but that we may have an extra session.

Mr. HOAR. That is joking. I am very glad indeed that the acutest, brightest, and shrewdest of men, whether here or anywhere else, finds nothing but a good joke to say against this proposition. It is a strong argument in its favor.

Keeping this half-million to a million dollars' worth of property when it could go upon interest and be used for the purpose, is going to cost this Government $30,000 or $50,000 and keep the thing as it is for twelve months more. You have the recommendation of the Secretary of the Navy, you have that of the authorities there; and the Senator says you ought to consider the question whether this should not go into the naval hospital fund. That question can be considered just as well when the sale is made as before. It is always in the power of Congress, if anybody comes here and says this half million or million dollars it sells for ought to be put wholly or partly into that fund, to do it. You can do it next winter.

It does seem to me that it is the merest technicality in the world when this thing is before us and is going to save to the Government in the next twelve months a sum of money equal to all that this expenditure calls for, to say that of course you will have a great many other and donbtful questions moved, and perhaps a motion to put the bankruptcy bill on this appropriation bill. It seems to me that on reflection the very wise, sagacious Senator from Iowa will not adhere to his objection.

Mr. HAWLEY. It seems to me that the proposition is very plain, and the committee's amendment ought to be sustained and the whole thing stricken from the bill. Suppose the proposition before the Senate were to sell the Soldiers' Home grounds here and turn the money into the Treasury? It is not our money. There is not a dollar of this money ours, and yet this amendment proposes to turn all but $50,000 of it into the Treasury. It comes from the monthly hospital tax on the sailors and is their sacred fund. It is proposed graciously to allow them $50,000 out of $500,000 to buy some shanty somewhere, instead of this elegant place which is upon the water's edge where the ships can easily discharge their wounded men on fine grounds. I have no doubt they have increased in value by the lapse of time and the march of improvement there, but that should not make us covetous of our neighbor's vineyard and turn the money into our pockets. There is enough in this consideration to justify the committee in striking it out.

Mr. HOAR. Say then that it shall be reserved to be disposed of hereafter.

Mr. HAWLEY. It says:

> After deducting the cost of all surveys, plans, appraisal, advertisements, and sales, he shall pay, or cause to be paid, into the Treasury of the United States, the proceeds of said sale. And further, that $50,000 of the sum so realized shall be placed to the credit of the Navy Department, for the selection of a new site and the erection of a suitable building thereon, if thought advisable.

Mr. HOAR. We can reserve that.

Mr. HAWLEY. I prefer myself, as the chairman of the committee does, to have a careful investigation of the whole proposition, and some dedication of the proceeds so that there shall be provision in some way for a good and convenient hospital. Nothing is said here about where the new hospital shall be. They may hire some house in the streets of Chelsea. That is not as good a place as ground upon the water. This whole thing should be discussed and matured before it is brought in here. This is the sailors' sacred hospital money, and I will not vote to turn it into the Treasury.

Mr. HOAR. Where does the Senator get his authority for that assertion that this is the sailors' sacred hospital money?

Mr. HAWLEY. Because it is one of the old regular naval hospitals.

Mr. ALLISON. I am told as a matter of fact that this property was purchased with the naval-hospital fund, which, as the Senator from Connecticut says, is the monthly dues of all the sailors.

Mr. HAWLEY. Taken out of their pay to furnish them a hospital.

Mr. BECK. Senators see now a very small part of the work that the Committee on Appropriations had to do when they looked at this bill. They struck out some matters that may be very good legislation. This may be one of them. There were a number of things that we had to keep out that do not appear on the bill, which caused us a great deal more labor than the determination of matters to be striken out. For example, the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] and the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] were eloquent not only as to our right but our duty to put on the bill for a new library as part of this bill. So with many other propositions. Unless we struck out pretty much all the legislation—and this is certainly legislation and the developments made by the Senator from Connecticut were made before the committee—we should never get through the bill at all. This is just opening the door to a number of other things, very meritorious it may be, but very damaging to the chances of this bill becoming a law.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations to strike out the lines which have been read.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 1513, after "building," to strike out "twenty" and insert "thirty;" so as to make the clause read:

> To enable the Secretary of the Navy to provide furniture for the new quarters allotted to the Navy Department in the State, War, and Navy Department building, $30,000, which shall be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriation for the Department of the Interior, public buildings, in line 1520, after "Interior," to strike out "fifty" and insert "seventy-five;" so as to make the clause read:

> For constructing fire-proof roof and remodeling the halls of the south and east wings of the building occupied by the Department of the Interior, $75,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 1532, after "wings," to strike out "pay of landscape architect;" and in line 1533, after "workmen," to strike out "sixty-five and insert "fifty;" so as to make the clause read:

> For improving the Capitol grounds: For continuing the work of the improvement of the Capitol grounds, including permanent approaches to the House and Senate wings, one clerk, and wages of mechanics, gardeners, and workmen, $50,000.

Mr. VEST. I hope the Senate will not concur in that amendment of the committee in line 1532, striking out "pay of landscape architect." I know of no reason why this should be done, and I know of many reasons why it should not be done. This officer, Mr. Olmsted, I will say, having served on the Committee on Public Buildings since I have been in the Senate, is one of the very best and most competent officers in the employ of the Government. He is not only in my judgment but in that of the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL], who has been for years on that committee, the most accomplished landscape architect certainly in this country, if not in the world; and to show what sort of a man he is I want to make this statement to the Senate.

In 1874, upon the recommendation of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, the annual salary of this officer was fixed at $4,000. It was thought to be a reasonably just compensation for the work he was expected to perform. The next year, upon his own motion, which is unprecedented in the annals of this Government so far as I know, he declined to have $4,000 and took $2,000, and has not received more than that any one year since. He conscientiously declined to take more than half the amount appropriated for his salary. More than this, I will state another fact, that this officer has never made an overestimate. All the estimates he has made have been found to be exact and correct.

If this office is abolished—for that is what the amendment amounts to—it virtually stops all improvement around the Capitol. It leaves no one to attend to these grounds. Mr. Clark, the Architect of the Capitol building, has nothing to do with the grounds around the Capitol, and does not propose to have anything to do with them.

It may be that Mr. Olmsted has made some mistakes in matters of taste, and I might quote the old maxim, de gustibus non est disputandum. In matters of taste of course there can be no unanimity of opinion and feeling; but I do undertake to say that this officer is invaluable to the Government. Unless we propose now to abandon these grounds, to say that the Capitol of the United States shall be treated as any private building, upon economical grounds solely, without regard to taste or beauty, or without regard to having such grounds as are worthy of this great structure or worthy of this great Government, I protest from what I know of this gentleman and of his services that this amendment should not be adopted.

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator will allow me I desire to suggest that I agreed with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL], who is engaged in conference in reference to the tariff bill, not to pass this paragraph, as he desired to be present during its consideration. I hope there will be no objection to passing it over for the present.

Mr. VEST. Of course I should like the Senator from Vermont to be here, because I know he would agree with me. This same attempt was made last year and he resisted it; but my friend will permit me to suggest to him that the best way would be to withdraw the amendment and let this officer take this thing which he has earned as faithfully and honestly as any man who ever rendered service to his country.

Mr. ALLISON. That would be a great relief, but I have not that power. I ask that the amendment be passed over until the Senator from Vermont comes in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the suggestion? The Chair hears none, and the amendment will be passed over.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "surveying the public lands," in line 1643, to increase the appropriation "for surveying the public lands" from $400,000 to $450,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after the word "lines," in line 1652, to strike out:

Or where, for any cause not provided for by law, in Oregon or Washington Territory, he is unable to get the necessary surveys made at the rates aforesaid, he may allow a sum, not exceeding $12 per linear mile for standard lines, $10 for township lines, and $6 for section lines.

So as to read:

For surveying the public lands, $450,000, at rates not exceeding $9 per linear mile for standard and meander lines, $7 for township, and $5 for section lines, except that the Commissioner of the General Land Office may allow, for the survey of standard and meander lines through lands heavily timbered, mountainous, or covered with dense undergrowth, a sum not exceeding $13 per linear mile for standard lines, $11 for township, and $7 for section lines.

Mr. SLATER. I hope the recommendation of the committee will not be agreed to in this case.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to modify the amendment of the committee by striking out from line 1653 to line 1657, so that the clause will read:

Or where, for any cause not provided for by law, he is unable to get the necessary surveys made at the rates aforesaid, &c.

That is to say to strike out simply the words "in Oregon or Washington Territory."

Mr. EDMUNDS. That gives a much wider discretion.

Mr. SLATER. I hope there will be a further modification.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The effect of the amendment now suggested will be to put the whole of this large sum of money entirely at the discretion of practically the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and he may make contracts for $20 a mile, or any other number that he pleases. There is in this clause, to be sure, "not exceeding $12," but it leaves the whole thing up to $12 entirely at his discretion in every Territory of the United States. Everybody who ever examined this subject—as I remember very well I did with the other members of the Committee on Appropriations before I was disrated and taken off that committee some years ago—knows that the sum of $7 per mile which is the ordinary run, I believe, is more than ample for these surveys in general. There may be especial reasons in Oregon and Washington Territory on account of the mountainous nature of the country, but the amendment of my friend from Iowa would open the door to this elastic judgment of the Commissioner of the General Land Office everywhere up to $12 a mile. I do not think it ought to be done.

Mr. ALLISON. I withdraw that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. SLATER. I hope the Senate will not concur in the recommendation of the committee, certainly not in striking out this provision in relation to Oregon and Washington Territory. After the regulation of the last appropriation bill cutting down the price of surveys, surveying entirely ceased in Oregon and Washington Territory, and I understand in Nevada, and I am not sure but that the same condition exists in California, though I have more accurate knowledge in regard to Oregon, where the surveyors are unable to continue the surveys at the prices fixed. The figures are lower than they can perform the work at, and the surveyor-general reports that he can not make contracts to do the work; and therefore it is necessary to give additional scope of power in this respect for a larger price than is allowed. So it is in doubt in some of the other States. This is a very low figure, very much lower than most of the surveys have been done for there, and I doubt very much even if we go as far as the text of the bill whether surveys will be prosecuted. The most of the lands are yet to be surveyed, and they are very broken, intermixed with timber, deep borders and precipitous cañons that require a great deal of labor, and often not more than a mile or two miles can be accomplished in a day by a whole party.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator will observe that in the case named by him there is already provision made for an additional allowance in line 1647:

The Commissioner of the General Land Office may allow for the survey of standard and meander lines through lands heavily timbered, mountainous, or covered with dense undergrowth, a sum not exceeding $13 per linear mile for standard lines.

Mr. MILLER, of California. But it limits the township lines to $11 and section lines to $7; even when the country is heavily timbered and mountainous. Here I will state what I know to be a fact, that in the State of California the surveys can not be made at these prices. That is a well-known and well-established fact. Our State commissioners have found great difficulty in settling immigrants who are now going to that State for the reason that the interior lines, the township and section lines, can not be run at the prices now allowed by law. I do not know that they can be run at even the limit fixed here in that portion of the bill which is sought to be stricken out, $12 a mile; but I certainly think that this latitude ought to be granted to the Commissioner of the General Land Office up to the limit of $12, in the interest of the settlement of the country.

Mr. INGALLS. The previous lines to those that are proposed to be stricken out extend the limit to $13. Therefore, if the Senator from California desires opportunities for an increase in the amount allowed in Oregon and Washington he ought to advocate the striking out of this clause with the committee, because this makes it one dollar less even than that which is left standing.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I think the Senator is mistaken about that.

Mr. INGALLS. Let us read it.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I have read it several times, and I think I understand it. For standard lines it is $13, and for township lines and section lines considerably less. The standard lines have been run, and it is the township and section lines we want.

Mr. ALLISON. For township lines $11 is allowed and for section lines $7. I will say, if the Senator from California will allow me a moment, that the rates provided for prior to line 1652 are the rates now provided for by law, and it seems that the intention was to make this a little more elastic in Oregon and Washington Territory, so as to allow, in cases not provided for by the present law, the Commissioner of the General Land Office to increase the rates to the prices named here; but the committee found that there were no reasons which applied to Oregon and Washington Territories that did not also apply to California and to Nevada and to Idaho, and to all these regions in the northwestern portion of our country. Hence it seemed to the committee that either this discretion should be given to the Secretary of the Interior without limit or that the entire discretion should be taken away. For myself, I think the wisest thing is to make no exception.

Mr. MILLER, of California. If this bill would permit that discretion in all cases, so as to allow $13 for standard lines and $11 for township, that would be sufficient, I think.

Mr. ALLISON. But it does not except in certain cases; that is, "through lands heavily timbered, mountainous, or covered with dense undergrowth;" wherever that occurs the discretion can be exercised.

Mr. MILLER, of California. By giving this a liberal construction all parts of the country where there are mountains—and that is the character of the country of which I am speaking—will be provided for. Eleven dollars a mile for township lines I think is sufficient. I think the suggestion of the Senator from Iowa is a good one, to leave this stand, except the words "in Oregon and Washington Territory."

Mr. SLATER. I started once to ask the Senator from Iowa to modify his amendment further by striking out some of the figures and inserting others. It is very evident that the intention of the House was to give a larger price for the surveys in Oregon and Washington than is allowed generally by the bill. I suppose the committee did not propose to strike out and insert increases of the various sums, as for instance, to strike out $6 for section lines and insert $8, and increase the others a dollar each, but I think that ought to be done. Unless that can be done, of course the general provision proposed to be left would be better for Oregon and Washington Territory than even the striking out of the portion proposed to be stricken out by the committee.

Mr. ALLISON. That motion will be in order after we get through with the committee's amendments.

Mr. SLATER. But if the matter be left as the Senator proposes, the surveys will stop. I understand that these are the provisions of law now, and they were provisions made in the last appropriation bill, and under those provisions the surveys are now at a stand-still and contracts can not be made. There should be at least a dollar a mile on each class of lines, standard, township, and section lines, above the rates named in the bill, and even at that I am doubtful whether the surveys will progress.

The Senator from Iowa says the conditions are the same generally in the other States as in Oregon and in Washington Territory and in California. That is a mistake. The word "mountainous" does not describe the situation. There are large tracts of land, table-land, that can not be described as mountainous land, though they are elevated. Every now and then you come to a steep, precipitous cañon, and parties have to go miles around in order to cross that chasm. That would hardly be called a "mountainous" section, but it is table-land, similar, I suppose, to the New Mexican country. It would not come under the classification of "mountainous."

Another reason is that the class of labor required to go with the surveyor could not be had as cheaply there as in other States. They have to give more per month, generally $40 per month, for a man to go with the chain.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. GROVER. The returns will show that Oregon and California embrace a broader region of timber land than any other States in the Union, and there are regions fit for settlement which are not surveyed now. The question is whether these lands susceptible of settlement, which are not broken but are in valleys or on the slopes of mountains embracing the best soil in the State, shall be surveyed and settled or not. We can not have them surveyed at present rates; the surveys are stopped. The people wish them surveyed. If this amendment prevails striking out the provision of the House bill the surveys will certainly not be resumed, as my colleague has stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the committee to strike out.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 15, noes 11, no quorum voting.

Mr. EDMUNDS called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

Mr. BECK. I desire to say that from all the information we had from the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES], who is not now in his seat, the Senators from Oregon and the Senators from California, we concluded in committee that the striking out of this clause simply means the stopping of surveys in those States and Territories. I believe it; and for that reason I shall vote against the amendment striking it out, because nobody denies the fact that in that country, particularly in Oregon and Washington Territory—and the Senator from Nevada made it very clear before the committee in Nevada as well; I did not hear anything from California—this work can not be done at the rates now allowed.

Now, we are pressing the surveys everywhere, and we have given $80,000, much more than the general proportion, to Dakota alone, because of the rapid settlement of the Territory. The State of Oregon, I understand, has a large quantity of land that can be surveyed if this provision is allowed to remain in the bill; and if it is not done there can be no survey made and no settlements had. If it is public policy to allow actual bona fide settlers to have their lands surveyed, as we all admit that it is, the information that I have had given me by the best-informed men, and I have heard nothing to the contrary, is that surveys will cease unless this amount is allowed for that purpose.

The Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BROWN (when Mr. BARROW's name was called). I understand that my colleague [Mr. BARROW] is paired with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR].

Mr. BLAIR (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BARROW].

Mr. SAUNDERS (when his name was called). I am paired on all questions that are political in their character with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIAMS], but not so regarding this I vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. HARRIS. I desire to say that my colleague [Mr. JACKSON] has sent me word by a page that he is paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE]. I do not know how either Senator would vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] has voted on this roll-call.

Mr. HARRIS. I have no other information than the message received from a page, which I have communicated to the Senate.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I am paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GROOME].

The result was announced—yeas 18, nays 26; as follows:

YEAS—18.

Allison,	Frye,	Lapham,	Saunders,
Anthony,	Harrison,	Logan,	Sawyer,
Conger,	Hawley,	McMillan,	Van Wyck.
Dawes,	Hill,	Platt,
Edmunds,	Ingalls,	Rollins,

So the amendment was rejected.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 1658, to increase the appropriation for "surveys in the Territory of Dakota" from $60,000 to $80,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 1665, after "districts," to strike out "And" and insert "and," and to change the period before "And" to a comma; so as to make the clause read:

And a further amount, not exceeding $50,000 thereof, may be expended for occasional examinations of public surveys in the several surveying districts, in order to test the accuracy of the work in the field and to prevent payment for fraudulent and imperfect surveys returned by deputy surveyors, and inspecting mineral deposits, coal-fields, and timber districts, and for the making of such other surveys or examination as may be required for identification of lands for purposes of evidence in any suit or proceeding in behalf of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 1668, to insert:

And a further amount, not exceeding $15,000, may be used in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior in retracing and resurveying imperfect surveys in the State of Kansas.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 1676, after "confirmed," to insert "and unconfirmed;" so as to make the clause read:

For survey of confirmed and unconfirmed private land claims in New Mexico, at a rate not exceeding $13 per linear mile, and office expenses, $8,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I wish to insert in line 1678, after the word "expenses," the words "incident thereto."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 1680, after "confirmed," to insert "and unconfirmed;" so as to read:

For survey of confirmed and unconfirmed private land claims in Arizona, at a rate not exceeding $13 per linear mile, and office expenses, $8,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. In line 1682, after the word "expenses," I move to insert "incident thereto."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 1685, after "appropriation," to strike out "60" and insert "150;" and in line 1686, after "sum," to strike out "15" and insert "50;" so as to read:

For the protection of public lands from illegal and fraudulent entry or appropriation, $150,000, of which sum $50,000 shall be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, to strike out the proviso from line 1687 to line 1741, inclusive.

The Principal Legislative Clerk began to read the words proposed to be stricken out.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is it necessary to read that? We all understand what it is. It is a legislative provision.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is suggested that the Secretary omit reading all that part of the bill proposed to be stricken out.

Mr. BECK. I think the clause had better be read, because there are many members in the House who will make more trouble about that provision being stricken out than about any other matter in the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Very well. I only wanted to save time.

The Principal Legislative Clerk read the clause proposed to be stricken out, as follows:

Provided, That the pre-emption laws, together with all laws authorizing the filing of declaratory statements for entries of the public lands, by agent or attorney, be, and the same are hereby, repealed: Provided further, That this repeal shall not affect the disposal of lands under treaty stipulations with Indian tribes, nor be deemed to impair any legal rights heretofore acquired under the laws hereby repealed; but all existing settlements, entries, or filings may be perfected upon proper proof of the lawful and bona fide character of said claims and of due compliance with the provisions and requirements of the laws under which such entries, settlements, or filings were made: And provided further, That any person who has heretofore made, or may hereafter make, a bona fide entry of public lands under the homestead laws shall have the privilege of paying the minimum price for the quantity of land so entered at any time before the expiration of five years from the date of entry and after actual residence, improvement, and cultivation has been maintained for a period of not less than two and one-half years after entry; and it shall be the duty of the Commissioner of the General Land Office to require evidence of actual compliance with the requirements of law in respect to settlement, residence, improvement, and cultivation, in all cases in which title now is or may hereafter be claimed under the homestead or other settlement or improvement laws of the United States: And provided further, That any person applying for the benefits of the timber-culture laws shall make his entry in person, at the proper local land office, and shall make affidavit that he is an actual resident of the county and State or Territory in which the land is situated, and that he has not entered into any contract or agreement to relinquish the entry he may make; and that he has no present or prospective purpose of making any such relinquishment; and the offering for sale, as a matter of traffic or speculation, of relinquishments of entries made under the provisions of the timber-culture laws shall be deemed prima facie evidence that such entries were made for speculative purposes, and not in good faith, as required by law, and such entries shall thereupon be liable to cancellation by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and the land covered thereby shall be deemed subject to entry by the first legal applicant; and the first section of the act of May 14, 1880 (authorizing lands covered by relinquished claims to be held as open to settlement and entry without further action by the Commissioner of the General Land Office), and all other acts and parts of acts inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed: And provided further, That when a timber-culture entry shall have once been made on a tract of public land subject to such entry and the same shall be canceled or relinquished, the land covered thereby shall thereafter be subject to entry only under the timber-culture laws, and no patent shall be issued for such land until the requirements of said laws shall have been fully complied with.

Mr. BECK. I agreed that this ought to be stricken out, and I made the suggestion to the Senator from Vermont to allow it to be read, because it is beyond all question true that great frauds are perpetrated under all these various characters of entries now, and it would require the Committee on Public Lands to examine the subject with great care before final action can be had; and as we are not allowed to introduce any new legislation here on these bills and as this provision as it now stands is very defective, it ought to be stricken out. We have increased the amount from $60,000 to $150,000 for the protection of the public lands from illegal and fraudulent entry or appropriation, and we have made $50,000 of it available immediately instead of $15,000, in order to enable the Secretary of the Interior to guard the public lands as well as he can until some careful law is drawn.

For example—and that is only one of the cases—by the repeal of the pre-emption laws in this absolute way there are perhaps two or three millions of scrip which have been paid out for surveys not provided for, and some arrangement ought to be made for that. Then again, in relation to timber-culture entries it is provided that after such an entry has been investigated and found to be fraudulent the land shall be subject to entry only under the timber-culture laws. This is the provision:

And provided further, That when a timber-culture entry shall have once been made on a tract of public land subject to such entry and the same shall be canceled or relinquished, the land covered thereby shall thereafter be subject to entry only under the timber-culture laws, and no patent shall be issued for such land until the requirements of said laws shall have been fully complied with.

So that when a fraudulent entry of township is made under the timber-culture act, and it is declared fraudulent, that land must be held for timber culture, and the actual bona fide settler can not take a homestead on it. I think that ought not to be, and I think it was not designed to be. I mention that to show that the provision is crude and needs amendment; and the best we can do is to strike it all out, although many of the committee sympathized with the gentlemen of the House who, looking at what is now going on in Dakota and elsewhere, thought something ought to be done. After consulting the Commissioner, I am satisfied this clause will not effect what they desire. So we concluded that it is best to give him a liberal amount to guard the public lands meantime, and then let the Committee on Public Lands prepare some careful law.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations striking out the clause.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment was, under the head of "Indian affairs," after line 1754, to insert:

For constructing new school building for use of Indian schools, to be expended under the Secretary of the Interior, $15,000.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to insert an "s" at the end of the word "building," in line 1755.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be so corrected if there be no objection.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 1757, to insert:

For preserving and transcribing mutilated and defaced papers and records in the Indian Bureau, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 1760, to insert:

For the payment of the "Old Settler" or "Western Cherokee" Indians, being all of those Cherokees who removed west of the Mississippi prior to the Cherokee treaty of December 29, 1835, and their descendants, a sum sufficient to pay the sum of $421,653.68, the same to be immediately available, being the amount found due them under the several treaties between the United States and the Cherokee Indians, and the several acts of Congress relating thereto, by the Secretary of the Interior, in compliance with the act approved August 7, 1882; which amount shall be disbursed by the Secretary of the Interior, as provided by the fourth article of the treaty of 1846 with the Cherokee Indians, after deducting all proper expenses actually incurred by said Indians in the adjustment and settlement of their said claim, to be approved by the Secretary of the Interior, and to be received in full payment and satisfaction of said claim.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I make the point of order that that is a private claim and is not to carry out the provisions of any existing law; and besides being legislation, there is no law that requires this sum of money to be paid.

Mr. LOGAN. I do not claim to be so well posted in parliamentary matters as the Senator from Vermont, but according to my understanding of it this is clearly legislation within the permission of the rule. This is a claim that has been reported time and again by committees of Congress, especially by the Committees on Indian Affairs. At the last session of Congress an act was passed in the following language:

The Secretary of the Interior shall investigate and report to Congress what in his opinion would be an equitable settlement of all matters of dispute between the Eastern Band of Cherokee Indians (including all the Cherokees residing east of the Mississippi River) and the Cherokee tribe or nation west; also, all matters of dispute between other bands, or parts of the Cherokee Nation; also all matters between any of said bands, or parts thereof, and the United States, arising from or growing out of treaty stipulations, or the laws of Congress relating thereto; and what sum or sums of money, if any, should, in his opinion, be paid under such settlement; and the sum of $2,500 is hereby appropriated for such investigation.—Pamph. Edition Stats., 1881–'82, page 328.

Under that law authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to investigate this proposition and report to Congress the sums that ought to be paid, if any, the Secretary of the Interior proceeded, made the investigation, reported to Congress, and recommended the appropriation of this amount of money, and it was put on this bill in pursuance of this law and of this investigation and this report of the Secretary of the Interior sent here by the President of the United States. If that is not legitimate to come on this bill as a report under the law, which is authorized and has been made and the sum ascertained and reported by the Secretary of the Interior, with the request that it be put on an appropriation bill—if that does not bring it within the rule, then I do not understand what kind of a law you could pass in reference to an appropriation that would be proper on this or any other bill. There is certainly much more legislation on this bill that the Senator has not objected to that is much more obnoxious to the objection than this proposition.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I mean, as I have done before, to object to every piece of legislation in this bill that the committee proposes. Of course I can not make a point of order on the text of the House bill. The only way to get rid of that is to move to strike it out. The committee has generally, and as far as I know entirely thus far, done that thing. Now this I think is first a complete piece of legislation. But if that be open to any doubt as stated by my friend from Illinois, it is purely a question of private claim between this tribe of Indians and the United States for a sum of money that they say is due to them. Now the thirtieth rule says:

No amendment, the object of which is to provide for a private claim, shall be received to any general appropriation bill, unless it be to carry out the provisions of an existing law or a treaty stipulation, which shall be cited on the face of the amendment.

There is no existing law which requires the appropriation of this sum of money. All the existing law is that the Secretary of the Interior last year was directed to inquire into this state of things and report to Congress what the facts were.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Vermont allow the Chair to call his attention to the recital in the amendment of a treaty obligation? The Chair would desire to know what the fact is as to that. Rule 27 says:

And no amendment shall be received to any general appropriation bill the effect of which will be to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill or to add a new item of appropriation, unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law or treaty stipulation.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But I respectfully submit because this part of it is an old subject to me which has been here a long time that there is no treaty stipulation which requires us to pay this money. The treaty stipulations which are referred to are those where in a treaty with Indians it is agreed that every year we will pay them so much. It is claimed that under a treaty with these Indians by which they were removed and by which a settlement was made and closed and concluded, that settlement did not settle the thing as it ought to have been settled in respect of the transactions between that tribe and the United States. So there is no treaty stipulation which calls upon the United States to pay this sum of money or any other.

The claim is that we are guilty of a breach of treaty stipulation that ought to be atoned for by this provision. Whether we ought to do it or not is a question of large consideration that will take a great deal of time to go through with.

Under the constant practice of the Senate the treaty stipulation part of this rule means where a treaty says that the United States every year shall pay so much money for one object or another to Indians.

Mr. LOGAN. Now, Mr. President, if this does not grow out of a treaty stipulation I do not understand the proposition. The Government of the United States made a treaty with the Cherokee Indians. I will not go into the general provisions of it, but merely mention one fact. The United States were to pay the Cherokee Nation $5,000,000 for their lands east of the Mississippi River; they were to remove these Indians to the lands where they now reside; they were to pay the expense of removing the Indians, and to support them for one year afterward. That was the treaty. After they were removed a portion of them, the Old Settlers, as they are called, removed themselves. In 1851 there was a settlement, and a law was passed by Congress appropriating a certain amount of money for the purpose of paying the expenses provided for in the treaty. In making the settlement with the Indians a part of the money charged to them was charged not to the appropriation but to the amount of money, $5,600,000 provided for in the treaty, $600,000 was part of an appropriation which was charged against them. The expense of removal was charged against the amount provided for them in the treaty, though the treaty provided especially that that sum should be exclusive of all expenses.

Growing out of the settlement under that treaty arises this claim. These Indians have claimed that this mode of charging them was in violation of the treaty, and they have tried in every possible way to have a settlement with the Government. They can not go into court; they can not go into the Court of Claims; they can not go anywhere as Indians to have their matters adjusted except to the Congress of the United States. The Congress of the United States after eight years, committees reporting favorably on this claim in the House and in the Senate time and again, finally passed a law authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to investigate this claim arising out of the treaty of 1835, amended in 1836, and the treaty of 1846. This claim arising under those treaties and by reason of the false accounting, if I may use that term, or I may use another term and say by reason of a mistake in the computation against these Indians in the Treasury Department by which they were deprived of the sum they were entitled to under the treaty, an investigation has been made by the Secretary of the Interior, and he reports this account to Congress and asks them to appropriate for the payment of the amount. That is the whole case.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois will allow the Chair to ask him whether the law requires the Secretary of the Interior to do more than report what in his judgment was owing.

Mr. LOGAN. I will read it again:

The Secretary of the Interior shall investigate and report to Congress what in his opinion would be an equitable settlement of all matters of dispute between the Eastern Band of Cherokee Indians (including all the Cherokees residing east of the Mississippi River) and the Cherokee tribe or nation west; also, all matters of dispute between other bands or parts of the Cherokee Nation; also all matters between any of said bands, or parts thereof, and the United States, arising from or growing out of treaty stipulations, or the laws of Congress relating thereto; and what sum or sums of money, if any, should, in his opinion, be paid under such settlement; and the sum of $2,500 is hereby appropriated for such investigation.

That is the law under which the Secretary's action was had.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of opinion that this amendment is subject to the point of order, so far as it is claimed to be a carrying out of the provisions of an existing law, for the reason that the law referred to by the Senator from Illinois does not create an obligation or promise to pay, but provides simply for the ascertainment of the amount due, if any; but the Chair is in doubt whether it is not an appropriation to carry out the provisions of an existing treaty, and not being familiar with the terms of the treaty he submits the question to the Senate. Those who are of opinion that the point of order taken by the Senator from Vermont is well taken will say "ay;" those of the contrary opinion, "no." [Putting the question.] The noes have it. The judgment of the Senate is against the point of order made.

With the consent of the Senator from Iowa the Chair would suggest that the matter be passed over until the gentleman who made the point of order is in his seat.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee for an explanation as to the reasons the committee had for putting this in the bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be passed over for the present by the consent of the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I only ask him to make a brief statement.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN] has already made a statement with reference to this claim. I call the attention of the Senator from California to a clause in the sundry civil bill of last year, wherein we authorized an investigation of these Cherokee claims of one kind and another. This investigation was then directed to be made by the Secretary of the Interior.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from Vermont that the Chair submitted to the Senate the point of order raised by him, not noticing at the time that the Senator from Vermont was not in his seat. If the Senator desires to have it resubmitted the Chair will resubmit the point of order.

Mr. EDMUNDS. No, sir; I take the judgment of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. One word further. This authority was given to the Secretary of the Interior last year. He employed a young lawyer in this city to make the investigation. The investigation was made, and he found as due to these Old Settlers the sum of $421,000, with interest upon that sum from April 18, 1851. He also found due to the Cherokee Nation the sum of $321,000, with interest thereon at 5 per cent. from 1838. He also found that the Eastern Band of Cherokees were entitled to their proper distributive share of all the property of the Cherokee Nation. These were the three things which he construed to be embraced in this legislation.

Mr. INGALLS. What was the name of the lawyer who made those findings?

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. Clements. His report is here, I will state to the Senator from Kansas, and is to be found in Senate Executive Document No. 60 of this session.

The Committee on Appropriations did not regard and do not regard this claim as one that is entitled to carry with it interest. The interest account on this claim would amount to $610,000. It was an unadjusted claim; it was a disputed claim which had lain here for thirty years, and the committee believed that it was not such a claim as would carry with it interest.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I ask the Senator for information, as I do not know anything about this subject. I should like to know what was the claim based upon? What is it about? What do the Indians claim the money for?

Mr. ALLISON. I will answer that briefly also. We have made a number of treaties with the Cherokee Nation running through a series of years, 1817, 1832, 1835, and so on. About 1818 a portion of the Cherokees left Georgia and North Carolina and went west, settling in the then Territory of Arkansas. It was supposed at the time that about one-third of those Indians were settled in Arkansas. Afterward, in 1835, a treaty was made with the Cherokee Nation which provided for their transportation or transmigration to what is now known as the Indian Territory. The Government bound itself to pay the expense of their transportation to that point. It also bound itself to pay to the Cherokee Nation one-third of this $5,000,000. Five million dollars was paid to what are called the Old Settlers, they being supposed to be about one-third of the number of the Cherokee Nation, and the Government paid for the transportation of the whole tribe, and charged for the transportation in accounting with the nation, I believe $60 per capita. These Old Settlers living in Arkansas and only removing across the border to the Indian Territory, and having themselves removed without cost to the Government, claimed that they should not be compelled to pay any portion of this amount.

In 1851 there was a final adjustment and adjudication of the $5,000,000 fund, and in making that settlement the balance as found by the proper officers of the Government was paid over to the Cherokee Nation. Now the Old Settlers, as I understand, come in and claim that that settlement was not a fair settlement to them and that they were entitled to credits not given to them under that settlement, and the Interior Department, under the advice of Mr. Clements, has recommended that this sum of $421,000 be paid to these Old Settlers. That is in brief the whole case, as I understand it.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, having been a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs when this report was made, my recollection is somewhat indistinct as to the action that was taken. I remember that the claim was before the committee, but I never understood that the committee had recommended that any sum should be paid. I find, upon examining the report made by the Senator from Illinois at that time, that I was correct. The report concludes as follows:

> The committee are of the opinion that the claim of these Indians possesses sufficient merit to demand a careful and thorough investigation of the same; that such an investigation involves a judicial interpretation of the several treaties between them and the United States, the construction of the several acts of Congress in relation thereto, and the examination of all settlements made and accounts stated with them under these treaties and acts of Congress; that such an investigation can not be made by a committee of Congress in the limited time allowed such committee by the performance of the ordinary legislative duty imposed upon its members; and that this case should receive a full investigation by the courts.
> The committee therefore report the accompanying bill, and recommend its passage.

The bill, as I remember, was to refer the existing claim, declared to have merit and foundation, to the Court of Claims for its adjudication, the desire of the committee being, so far as I remember and at least so far as my own judgment was concerned, that the statutes of limitation, if they had operated, should be waived, so that the whole case might receive a thorough and careful judicial investigation.

I do not myself regard the action that the Senator from Iowa states to have been had to be in any sense whatever a compliance with the judgment of the Committee on Indian Affairs with regard to this great and ancient claim. A gentleman by the name of Clements—who he is or what his capacities or experience are I do not know, or under what appointment he acted—appears, under the authority of the Secretary of the Interior, to have made an examination of these matters and to have reported certain gross sums as due from one portion of these Indians to the other. He may have possessed the qualifications necessary to make this adjudication and investigation—I say nothing to the contrary—but there has been no compliance with the express purpose and declaration of the Committee on Indian Affairs as to the course that was to be pursued.

I make this statement for the purpose of disavowing, so far as I am able to do, for myself, as one member of that committee, any concurrence in this amendment, because I am very clear that there has been no such determination of this claim by the courts as to authorize Congress to pass an appropriation for this very large sum of money. The Senator from California desires to ask me a question.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I desire to ask if the Secretary of the Interior adopted the report and findings of this agent, and whether he has recommended this appropriation?

Mr. INGALLS. I suppose he has from what has been said. I have not had time to investigate it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. He only says, "I respectfully recommend that the accompanying papers be presented for the consideration of Congress." That is all he says.

Mr. LOGAN. If the Senator from Vermont and the Senator from Kansas will allow me for one moment, I suppose that there will be no dispute as to the facts when they are stated. The Secretary of the Interior not only recommends this payment, but the Commissioner of Indian Affairs recommends it in a letter that is printed; and not only that, but the Secretary of the Interior appeared before the Committee on Appropriations and in person recommended it, and said it was an honest claim and ought to be paid.

I desire to ask the Senator from Kansas a question. I know that the report I made in this case in 1881, I believe—I think that is the date of it—was to give authority to the Court of Claims to examine this question and decide it and report.

Mr. INGALLS. That is my recollection of it.

Mr. LOGAN. I reported a bill unanimously agreed on by the Indian Committee. That is my recollection. I now ask the Senator if he believes that under the Constitution of the United States Congress could give authority for Indians to go before a court?

Mr. INGALLS. I do not suppose that that is a question involved in the consideration of the amendment that is now before the Senate. The Committee on Indian Affairs, so far as my recollection is concerned, and that was as far as I personally intended to go, favored a judicial ascertainment of the condition of the controversy between these two families of Cherokee Indians. That I have always been willing to do, and I would not consent to any action of the committee or of Congress that would prejudice what I believe to be a valid claim to some amount, but I am not satisfied that the ascertainment has been such as we contemplated.

Mr. LOGAN. It is such as was contemplated, and an examination by as good lawyers I think as there are in this country, and they are of opinion that Congress even can not give the power to a court to adjudicate a question between the Indians and the United States. By examining the first case in 5 Peters the Senator will find that that is the unanimous decision of the Supreme Court of the United States. Understanding that to be the law a different course was adopted, because we all want to deal fairly with the Indians. Whether we owe them or not we want to deal fairly with them. Introducing that bill myself, I came to the conclusion that it was not the course to pursue. It went out of my hands, it did not pass Congress; it was not adopted; but when Congress came to examine it they adopted a different measure. Why? Because they came to the conclusion that the mode to adopt, which Congress had the power to do, instead of referring it to a court, which would not have jurisdiction, was either to appoint a commission to examine these questions or to refer the case to some one who had authority and in whom Congress had confidence to make the examination.

That is the course that was pursued by Congress. That course having been pursued by Congress, the Secretary of the Interior appointed a gentleman by the name of Clements. I do not know him; the Secretary of the Interior says he knows him. He is a gentleman from Colorado, I understand, or he formerly lived there. The Secretary of the Interior had confidence in his ability to examine the question. He did so. He examined the records and papers and made a full report; he made the calculations. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs examined it with him. The Secretary of the Interior told the Committee on Appropriations that not only was it examined by Mr. Clements, but he himself, the Secretary of the Interior, examined it in connection with the Solicitor of the Interior Department and believed it to be just and honest as he reported, and he asked the committee to make the appropriations.

I only state these facts to answer the inquiries which are made as to why the Committee on Appropriations reported this amendment. They reported it for the very reason I have given. It is a mere question before the Senate of the United States, or it ought to be at least, whether the Government of the United States owes these Indians or not. The treaty provided that they should be removed without any expense to themselves, and not only that, but that when removed they should be subsisted for one year certainly. I call attention to that in the records of this Government. General Jackson himself used the language in reference to this particular treaty that "the stipulations offered provide for the removal at the expense of the United States of your whole people, and for their subsistence a year after their arrival in the new country." That was the understanding and agreement between the Government and the Indians. These Indians removed themselves without expense to the Government, and then the Government charged them, whatever number there was I do not remember, but about 13,000 I think, so much per capita for removing them, and deducted it out of their third of the $5,000,000 that was paid for their lands, after agreeing in the treaty that they should be removed at the expense of the Government.

In 1851 Congress made an appropriation to pay the expense of the removal of these Indians, and after making the appropriation the accounting officer charged to these "Old Settler" Cherokees $50 or $60 per head, I do not remember which, for the removal by the Government, and took it out of the fund that had been given them, to which they were entitled without any cost or charges against it.

Mr. MILLER, of California. The "Old Settler" Cherokees claim that they removed themselves.

Mr. LOGAN. Certainly.

Mr. MILLER, of California. Without expense to the Government?

Mr. LOGAN. Without expense to the Government. If they removed themselves without expense to the Government, the Government had no right to charge that expense to the $5,600,000 that had been given them for the land, because they provided in the treaty that it should not be done; so it is immaterial whether they removed themselves at their own expense or not, but they did. Yet after that the Government charged it against the amount that was to be given to them for their lands, after agreeing that no charge should be made against it, and that the Government would support them for a year after removing them. Then the Government turned around and charged this amount, and deducted it from their third of the sum they were entitled to receive.

I say it was a fraud, probably not so intended, but it was a wrong against these people that we stipulated with them should not be perpetrated against them. They never have ceased to make this claim. They never have ceased to ask that the Government of the United States shall do justice to them and return to them the amount. They claim interest, too; 5 per cent. interest. Why do they claim interest? Because in the act of Congress of 1851 in the settlement made with the Cherokee Indians Congress provided that they should be paid 5 per cent. interest per annum on the amount due them by the United States. So they claim that, too; but the Committee on Appropriations struck that off and said they would not pay the interest, but they would pay the sum that had been found to be due them in the examination of these accounts and matters between them and the United States Government. That is the whole case.

If I make a contract with an individual that I am to give so much money and to do other things for him, and it shall not be charged against his account; if I then charge it against the amount, I do not think I am acting justly and honestly with that man. That is exactly what the Government has done with these Indians. If it is honest to them, then the Government has acted honestly. If it is not the square thing to do, the Government has not done the square thing. If the Government has charged this amount to them when it was not authorized to do it, and when it ought not to have been done, they are certainly entitled to the money, because the Government has it in its Treasury today from their funds, that were not chargeable with this or anything else.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Mr. President, I am a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs, and have been a member of that committee during the present Congress, but not before the present Congress. During the last session of Congress this matter of the claim of the "Old Settler" Cherokees was presented to the committee and assigned by the committee to me as a sub-committee for investigation. I investigated it as accurately and carefully and extensively as I could, and made a report to the committee, which report was adopted by the committee and submitted to the Senate. The committee was satisfied that there were some equities in the claim, but they were not satisfied in regard to the amount if any there was due to these Indians from the United States. All that I desire to say is that this claim as presented here has not been approved by the Committee on Indian Affairs. I will inquire of the Senator from Illinois, who is very familiar with this subject, when the Cherokees were removed? When did this claim arise?

Mr. LOGAN. This claim arose under the treaty of 1846.

Mr. COCKRELL. They were removed in 1828.

Mr. LOGAN. The claim arose prior to that time, but the treaty that was made in 1846 provided for their maintenance. After the treaty of 1846, in 1851, under the act of Congress passed at that time, this claim arose. When the Senator from Wisconsin says that the Committee on Indian Affairs have not approved of this claim, I suppose he means that the claim as reported by the Interior Department has not been referred to them, and that they did not approve it. He does not mean that the committee have not approved the idea that these people have a claim.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. We were of the opinion that they had some claim, but we were not prepared to recommend the payment of any specific sum. We were perfectly willing that these Indians should go into the Court of Claims and there establish their claim, whatever it might prove to be. It seems to me that that would be the wisest mode of disposing of the claim.

Mr. DAWES. I understood the committee to recommend just what was done, and it was from the Committee on Indian Affairs that it was referred to the Interior Department to ascertain. The Secretary of the Interior was authorized by law to ascertain, it is true, as the Senator said.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. That was not from the Committee on Indian Affairs. That was a provision in the appropriation act of last year. The Committee on Indian Affairs referred the matter to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs or to the Secretary of the Interior, for the purpose of ascertaining the facts in regard to the claim, and the committee received the report from the Commissioner.

Mr. DAWES. I was aware that the committee had referred it to the Department, but I was under the impression that the committee recommended the mode which was pursued by the Department.

Mr. INGALLS. The latest action of the Committee on Indian Affairs was March 29, 1882, in which the same recommendation was made as that which was contained in the report of February 9, 1881, to wit, that there was merit in the claim which required a careful and thorough investigation. It was the opinion of the committee that the claim should be referred to some judicial tribunal for that purpose.

I wish to call the attention of the Senate to another rather significant feature of this case, which I find in Executive Document No. 60 of the second session of the Forty-seventh Congress, from which it appears that the "Old Settlers" or Western Cherokee Indians in 1880 had a meeting by their council for the purpose of considering this subject. It seems from this report that Mr. J. M. Bryan, of whom I know nothing, was agent for the prosecution of this claim before Congress. He made his report to the meeting and announced that the claim was before the Indian Committee of the Senate, and for various reasons had been delayed to be reported, whereupon the following action was had by the Old Settler council, after some whereases reciting Bryan's appointment in 1875:

Be it further resolved, That J. M. Bryan, our special commissioner and attorney, who is himself a citizen of the Cherokee Nation and an "Old Settler," and by our former council was duly made treasurer for the amount of 35 per cent. of the amount of the claim that may be allowed. The first council creating said commission was in 1875, at which council 35 per cent. of the whole claim was set apart to pay the expense of former Old Settlers' councils, to pay the expenses of our commissioners, to pay the expenses of attorneys employed to help prosecute said claim, or as much thereof as might be necessary.

Therefore, we again reiterate that J. M. Bryan is fully authorized to receive the said amount of 35 per cent. of the whole amount allowed on said claim, as the "Old Settler" Cherokee treasurer, and to receipt to the proper authorities of the United States for said amount, which shall be the "Old Settler" Cherokees' receipt for the same.

Submitted by—

H. D. REESE,
W. C. WOODALL,
JOHN HENDRICKS,
Committee.

The above resolution being interpreted and put to a vote, was unanimously adopted.

W. A. DUNCAN, President.

H. D. REESE, Secretary.

It appears, therefore, that this claim, although its justice is so obvious and although its merits are not disputed, was of such a nature that the claimant thought it advisable to set apart 35 per cent. of the whole amount to be expended without question in the necessary means for its prosecution before Congress. The whole sum that is appropriated by this provision is $421,653.68, without interest, and if Congress shall agree to the amendment of the committee something in the neighborhood of $175,000 will be immediately appropriated for Mr. Bryan as his compensation for such services as have been necessary in securing the adjustment of the claim.

It appears to me that in view of this action, which I had never seen or heard of before, brought to my attention to-day, when I read this pamphlet half an hour ago, it is not in a condition that renders it appropriate for us to say that Mr. C. C. Clements, of whom I know nothing, was invested with the requisite judicial authority to determine the amount that was due to the "Old Settlers" in the way of a judicial investigation. Of course I have, as I say, no knowledge whatever of Mr. Clements, and have no doubt that he acted in entire good faith, and that his judgment is entitled to credit, but it appears that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs did not accept it. He says:

It seems, however, that in the examination of the claim of the Eastern Cherokees against the United States Mr. Clements concluded that it was not intended by the eighth article of the treaty of 1835, and the supplementary articles thereto or subsequent Congressional legislation, that the $5,000,000 fund should be used to defray any expenses for removal and subsistence where made under the supervision and control of the United States, or for any reasonable expenses incurred by the Cherokees in removing themselves. These conclusions necessarily affected his former report and changed the balance found due the "Old Settlers" under the settlement provided by the fourth article of the treaty of 1846.

Whereupon the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, having satisfied himself that the report of Mr. Clements was not sufficiently accurate to authorize a judicial finding, himself changed the aggregates and reports that the Cherokees exclusive of "Old Settlers" are entitled to the sum of $334,297.75, and the "Old Settlers" to $421,653.68 I should say then most emphatically in conclusion that I have no doubt, as I said before, there is equity in this claim, and I would say nothing to prejudice either House of Congress against it; yet in view of all the circumstances that surround the case there has not been the judicial ascertainment of the amounts that are due to comply with the resolution of the Committee on Indian Affairs, which had the subject under consideration.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, I do not wish to annoy the Senate, but I was a little surprised at the Senator from Kansas calling the resolutions of the council in question. I do not think that shows any particular dishonesty on the part of this man Bryan.

Mr. INGALLS. I did not charge dishonesty.

Mr. LOGAN. It shows at least a fairness on Bryan's part that he would hand these resolutions to the Secretary of the Interior to be printed here in a book to go before Congress. If any suggestion could be drawn from that that money was used for the purpose of passing the bill through Congress, I think it would be a very unjust imputation or insinuation.

Mr. INGALLS. I did not make any such imputation or implication. I hope the Senator will pardon me for a moment. I simply said that here was $175,000 that was admitted to have been expended in the course of seven years for the prosecution of a perfectly honest, plain, straightforward claim before Congress.

Mr. LOGAN. That is true. It is admitted that they have expended that sum for the reason that they have had this man Bryan, who is one of the oldest Cherokees living in that nation, who has been here eight years appealing repeatedly to Congress, first to one House and then to the other. The bill would pass one House and fail in the other. They had not only Bryan, but commissioners have been here; they have appeared before committees; they have been at expense. What the expense amounts to I do not care; that has nothing to do with the question before the Senate. So far as I am concerned I do not care whether they spent one dollar or a hundred thousand dollars; it is immaterial to me. I do not care anything about that; but I know I met this man Bryan, who is the agent of these Indians. He was before the Committee on Appropriations, and I will say, Indian as he is, he is as much of a gentleman as I have seen appear before any committee on any question anywhere in my time, as all the members of the committee will testify. He came here and made his statement; he made it like an honest man; he told their grievances, and showed the committee what was the complaint.

I do not care, so far as I am individually concerned, what the Senate does with this proposition. It is a matter of the slightest importance to me in any sense whatever except to do my duty as one of the committee, and one who has examined this claim once or twice and satisfied himself in reference to it. As I said, it is of the slightest importance to me what is done with it. It makes no difference whatever, so far as I am concerned; but I do think that it is very hard whenever an Indian comes into the Congress of the United States to have his matters adjudicated that on technical grounds, and on the slightest and most frivolous grounds, his case is always postponed. These people have had their claim postponed for thirty years, when the records of the Department and the treaty show that we absolutely cheated them out of this money; I can not call it by any other name. We charged them, I believe, $60 a head for removing them when we did not remove them, when they removed themselves. We deducted that from their third of the $5,600,000 that we agreed in the treaty we would not do; and they ask us to pay it back. We have got their money in the Treasury and we will not pay it back; that is all there is of it. We defrauded them out of it; and now we say they must go to the poor-house. One Congress say, "We will send it to a court;" another Congress sends it to the Secretary of the Interior; the Secretary of the Interior examines it and reports to Congress that it ought to be paid. Then we say that they must go to the court, or they must go somewhere else. We do not deal with white men that way. We have not dealt that way with white men.

Mr. HOAR. Oh, yes.

Mr. LOGAN. Where?

Mr. HOAR. I beg the Senator's pardon; but I think the way we deal sometimes with the just claims of white men is a shame and a disgrace to our legislation.

Mr. LOGAN. I notice that white men generally get their claims through and that Indians do not. That is the difference. The Indian gets tired, and he goes away. He says: "I can not get justice done; they will not give it to me;" and finally he gets tired and goes home. There may be many claims of Indians that are unjust; I do not know that there are, nor do I know that there are not; but I do insist that Congress ought to dispose of this question in some way or other so as to give these Indians an opportunity at least to have justice done them somewhere. I believe this amount is fair; I believe it is an honest claim; and I believe that Congress ought to provide for its payment. If Congress does not do it, I do not believe that Congress will do its duty.

If there is any person on earth whom I dislike to see cheated, either by the Government or any body else, it is a poor colored man or an Indian man who has never had an opportunity of knowing his rights or having his rights preserved or protected in this country. If there is any person who is cheated in this country it is the poor Indian, because he has nobody to defend him except occasionally some Senator or member of the other House will stand up for the rights of the Indians; but not always so. Very few will do it. It is easy always to object to an Indian having his rights. It is easy to take an Indian's lands and divide them up. It is an easy matter to give them away. It is an easy matter to meet the Indians and get them to sign a treaty and get their lands away from them and then give them to white men. It is an easy matter to do all that. We bought their lands from these Indians for $5,000,000 when it was not 20 per cent. of what they were worth. We got their lands cheaply and sent them west and paid them $5,000,000, and then turned around and charged what we agreed should not be charged to them and took it out of the $5,000,000. That is the way we deal with Indians.

Mr. VOORHEES. Mr. President, it is now nearly fifty years since this debt became due on the part of the Government to the Cherokee Indians. Nearly two generations have come and gone. Agencies have been established here and they have expired. I remember old Colonel Peter Pitchlynn, who lived and died here in the vain pursuit of justice to his people upon this among other subjects. Now, after this long delay, because in their discouragement and almost despair provision is made for the purpose of having it collected it sounds extravagant, and that fact is urged as a reason still for our not paying it. I am never to be deterred from supporting a claim, if I think it just, because it has become old. That is an additional reason to my mind for paying it.

I have heard of the Old Settlers claim ever since I have been in Congress, both in the House and in this body. It does not need any more investigation. It has been the most, if not the best, investigated claim that I have any knowledge of. It has run the gauntlet of a dozen committees; it has been under fire year in and year out. The amount has been ascertained twenty times at least, and finally, as if enough had not been done, Congress last August instructed by law the Secretary of the Interior to investigate it and tell us what we ought to do. He has complied with our direction and his communication comes here, and it is proposed to toss it aside again and let it drift away, and that further delay shall ensue.

Let us see whether this is in a safe form or not. The Secretary of the Interior addresses the following letter to the President, which the President transmits to this body:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, Washington, February 3, 1883.

SIR: The Secretary of the Interior is required by an item (copy inclosed) in the sundry civil bill, approved August 7, 1882, to investigate and report to Congress on certain matters relating to the Cherokee Indians.

Mr. C. C. Clements was appointed special agent by this Department to make the investigation required. He has made several reports on the subject, two of which I have the honor to submit herewith.

Then the Secretary comments upon those reports, and states that they have been carefully examined by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, who reaches the same conclusion as does Mr. Clements, and he quotes carefully from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. He cites the fact that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs has carefully investigated this matter and reached the same conclusions which are reached by Mr. Clements. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs I know. I served with him in the other House. I know that a more careful, close, and conscientious public officer than Mr. Price is not in the service of the Government. This matter has passed under his careful review. Next, the Secretary of the Interior says that he himself has carefully examined it and reached the same conclusion. So the subject comes to us as investigated, first by Mr. Clements, who has the sanction of the appointment of the Secretary of the Interior as a competent man; next as investigated by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, Mr. Price, and, third, as investigated by the Secretary himself; and they all reach the same conclusion. I shall not find any difficulty in voting to sustain their conclusion, when I find in the clause itself the safeguard which I shall read. After providing for the appropriation of this amount of money, in line 1772 I find that it reads as follows:

Which amount shall be disbursed by the Secretary of the Interior, as provided by the fourth article of the treaty of 1846 with the Cherokee Indians, after deducting all proper expenses actually incurred by said Indians in the adjustment and settlement of their said claim, to be approved by the Secretary of the Interior and to be received in full payment and satisfaction of said claim.

There is an absolute safeguard on any improvident use that the Indians themselves may have provided for the disposition of this money. In other words, if there is an outstanding contract in regard to so much per cent. to be paid for the adjustment and collection of this claim, that contract has to be approved by the Secretary of the Interior, or no money will be paid under it. They are within the protection of the Secretary of the Interior. That accounts for this clause. The amount shall be disbursed by the Secretary of the Interior "after deducting all proper expenses actually incurred by said Indians in the adjustment and settlement of their claim, to be approved by the Secretary of the Interior." I do not think there is the slightest danger; and I do sincerely hope that, while all admit that this claim is just and founded in equity, the provision reported by the committee may be allowed to stand.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, in the first place I wish to say with all respect to the Senate that I do not see how the point of order could have been overruled, but I can not take time about that, as it has been. Ever since we have been talking about this as a claim that the law had not provided for the payment of, or the treaty either, and of the fraud we had committed upon the Indians in some way in the course of some of our operations violating a treaty.

In the next place, I am unable to understand how it is that the Committee on Appropriations, who are not charged with the consideration of Indian affairs but to make appropriations to carry out the provisions of laws and treaties, should have taken up this question de novo without any amendment reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs, without any recommendation from that committee, without any amendment reported or recommendation made by the Committee on Claims. That is rather a puzzle.

I should like to go to the foundation of this matter for a moment and see on what ground Mr. Clements's doctrines stand. If appropriation bills are to be loaded with this sort of thing, whatever time is necessary, even if the bill fails to be considered, ought to be taken. It illustrates, I will add, the pernicious effect of legislating on appropriation bills. We should not have been troubled with this question here now but for a clause having been jumped onto an appropriation act last year of a purely legislative character.

The amendment reported by the committee is as follows:

For the payment of "Old Settler" or "Western Cherokee" Indians, being all of those Cherokees who removed west of the Mississippi prior to the Cherokee treaty of December 29, 1835—

Not pursuant to and under the treaty and according to its stipulations, but those who went on their own hook and their own account; that is what the amendment provides for—

and their descendants, a sum sufficient to pay the sum of $421,653.68, the same to be immediately available, being the amount found due them under the several treaties between the United States and the Cherokee Indians, and the several acts of Congress relating thereto, by the Secretary of the Interior, in compliance with the act approved August 7, 1882.

Now let us see if the Secretary of the Interior has found anything to be done. I discard entirely from the time that I wish to occupy any private and personal or public and personal observations of the Secretary of the Interior by word of mouth to a committee. As a responsible officer of this Government we must take what he says in print and sends to us, and not his oral communications, because they are liable to be misunderstood. It is just to him that we should take his official report made to us on this subject. First a communication comes from the President, who says that he transmits the report of the Secretary of the Interior. What is this report? It is that—

Mr. C. C. Clements was appointed special agent by this Department to make the investigation required. He has made several reports on the subject, two of which I have the honor to submit herewith.

Where are the others? Did they come to the same conclusions, or has the thing been vibrating up and down, and the first report was not found to be quite the thing, and then another was made, and another? We have two. Report No. 2 relates so and so, report No. 3 relates to the Old Settlers or Western Cherokee claim, based upon alleged errors committed by the officers of the United States Government having charge of and stating the accounts between the Old Settlers and the United States in relation to their interest in the proceeds of the sale of the Cherokee lands east of the Mississippi River under the treaty of 1835. Those questions must have arisen under the treaty, otherwise they could not have been under it.

Mr. Clements reports that there is a balance due from the United States to the "Old Settler" Cherokees amounting to $421,653.68, together with interest at 5 per cent. per annum from September 22, 1851.

This report, No. 3, is intended to take the place of a report on the same subject by Mr. Clements, dated December 12, 1882, which was transmitted by me to the President of the Senate pro tempore, December 16, 1882, in compliance with a Senate resolution calling therefor. (Printed in Executive Document No. 17, Forty-seventh Congress, second session.)

These reports, Nos. 2 and 3, have been carefully examined by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, who reaches the same conclusions as does Mr. Clements, as shown by the closing statements of his report thereon dated January 31, 1883, as follows:

With great respect to the Secretary of the Interior, I submit that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs (and any Senator will see it if he looks carefully at the report of that Commissioner) has not come to any such conclusion at all, but he merely reports what Mr. Clements says, and that alone, it must be understood. Now, he quotes from the report of the Commissioner:

It must be understood that all the figures used in this report are as of the date of the several settlements and for the purpose only of determining what amount is due each class of claimants, and after making all deductions, &c.—

There would be due so much and so much; I need not name the sums.

I have given these reports—

Says the Secretary of the Interior—

such careful examination and consideration as time and opportunity would permit, and am of opinion that they present fair and just bases of settlement of the claims. The parties interested appear satisfied with the results reported.

If by that he means the Indian claimants, I should think he would probably be correct. If he means the tax-payers of the United States, I should beg leave very greatly to doubt it.

A report, No. 1, made by Mr. Clements on the claim of the Eastern Band of North Carolina Cherokee Indians against the Cherokee Nation of Indians West, for a pro rata interest in all the common property of said nation of Indians under treaties with the United States, has been submitted to me, but is withheld for further consideration. I respectfully recommend that the accompanying papers be presented for the consideration of the Congress.

This is a report from the Secretary to the President. The President in sending it makes no recommendation at all, as under the Constitution he was authorized to do. Without his giving any approval to these papers he sends them forward to Congress for their consideration, for what they are worth. Now, when we come to the report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs let us see if the Secretary is right in his understanding. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs, after stating what Mr. Clements reports, &c., and stating the case, coming down toward the foot of page 6, says:

I may add that in the former report on this subject the investigation was confined to alleged errors committed by the accounting officers of the Government in the matter of calculation.

It seems, however, that in the examination of the claim of the Eastern Cherokees against the United States, Mr. Clements concluded that it was not intended by the eighth article of the treaty of 1835, and the supplementary articles thereto, or subsequent Congressional legislation, that the $5,000,000 fund should be used to defray any expenses for removal and subsistence where made under the supervision and control of the United States, or for any reasonable expenses incurred by the Cherokees in removing themselves. These conclusions necessarily affected his former report and changed the balance found due the "Old Settlers" under the settlement provided by the fourth article of the treaty of 1846.

There you will note another thing, that under the treaty of 1846 they had a settlement then, as well as one under the treaty of 1835; so that we have had two settlements of this subject apparently already. But that is not the point I am now on. I am on the point as to whether the Commissioner of Indian Affairs has recommended this appropriation. Nothing that I have read yet has the slightest tendency to warrant any such conclusion.

Then he goes on in the next paragraph to say simply that—

It must be understood that all the figures used in this report are as of the date of the several settlements, and for the purpose only of determining what amount is due each class of claimants.

And on this, referring to the statement of Clements, and according to his statement, it appears that there would be due to these Indians so much and so much; and then he signs his name. If anybody's ingenuity can stretch that into an affirmative recommendation by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs that this sum of money ought to be paid, I confess that I shall be very much astonished.

Let us see for a moment what the treaty of 1835 did provide about the $5,000,000 and the removal. Here it is. It is the first article, the five-million article:

The Cherokee Nation hereby cede, relinquish, and convey to the United States all the lands owned, claimed, or possessed by them east of the Mississippi River, and hereby release all their claims upon the United States for spoliations of every kind, for and in consideration of the sum of $5,000,000, to be expended, paid, and invested—in the manner stipulated and agreed upon in the following articles. But as a question has arisen between the commissioners and the Cherokees whether the Senate in their resolution, by which they advised "that a sum not exceeding $5,000,000 be paid"—

Using these words—

The question as to whether that amount shall be paid and as to stipulations shall be again submitted to the Senate or to somebody. That is not material to this point. The point is that the $5,000,000 that was agreed to be paid to them was to be paid, expended, and invested, distributed under each of those three heads, in the manner agreed upon in the following articles. Now we come to the following articles. One of those articles agreed upon was that the United States agreed to take the expense of getting these people removed under the direction of the United States, to furnish transportation and all that sort of thing to the new country to which they were to go; so that there is pretty good reason for believing fairly, as it seems to me, that the very terms of the first article, the $5,000,000 article, referred, as they say it did, on the face of it to this expense necessary to accomplish these objects to be made by the United States for them out of this fund. That is what it says in terms. Thereupon the United States agree and stipulate to remove them to their new homes, subsist them one year after their arrival there, and that a sufficient number of steamboats and baggage-wagons shall be furnished to remove them comfortably; that they shall have a physician, &c.; and then it provides that "such persons and families," which appear on the face of this amendment to be the body of persons and families mentioned in the treaty, because the amendment provides for those who went before this treaty was made, by the very terms of the amendment, "such persons and families as in the opinion of the emigrating agent are capable of subsisting and removing themselves shall be permitted to do so; and they shall be allowed in full of all claims for the same $20 for each member of their family; and in lieu of their one year's rations they shall be paid the sum of $33.33 if they prefer it."

Such Cherokees also as reside at present out of the nation and so remove with them shall be entitled to come in under the same thing. These other articles go on and on and provide for all the arrangements referred to in the first article of the treaty. How that treaty can be made the basis of raising an obligation on the part of the United States for the classes of people who are mentioned in the amendment is, I confess, entirely incomprehensible to me, because the amendment says, "being all of those Cherokees who removed west of the Mississippi prior to the Cherokee treaty of December 29, 1835."

That treaty provides for those removed under the treaty. These people had gone on their own account because they foresaw apparently (but of course that is immaterial to this question) that the press of emigration was coming in, so that the best thing was to go off to this country that Congress in the state of the relations of the Indians had authorized them to emigrate to and settle upon.

Then we come down to a later treaty, the treaty of 1846, referred to in this amendment, as to the modus of payment. This treaty of 1846 purported—I can not take time to read it—to provide for a "final and amicable settlement of the difficulties and claims before mentioned," and that is to say the beforementioned claims and difficulties were "serious difficulties" which had "existed between the different portions of the people constituting and recognized as the Cherokee Nation of Indians, which it is desirable should be speedily settled, so that peace and harmony may be restored among them; and whereas certain claims exist on the part of the Cherokee Nation, and portions of the Cherokee people, against the United States: Therefore, with a view to the final and amicable settlement of the difficulties and claims before mentioned, it is mutually agreed by the several parties to this convention, as follows." Then they go on, without making any claim or referring to any claim of this character, to mention ever so many other kinds of claims covering everything they could think of, as they knew them to exist on the part of these Indians, and providing how it shall be terminated; and then provide that the sums to be paid to settle those shall be paid by the United States in one way, per capita, to these individuals, or a certain portion of them.

On a jumping debate like this, on a report of the Committee on Appropriations for the first time presented to our consideration, that we can hold affirmatively that this vast sum of money is due to these people when the description of the amendment itself separates it entirely from the treaty and when the treaty itself provides for the expenditure of the $5,000,000 according to the following articles, one of which is this matter of transportation and so on, and when eleven years afterward another treaty was made which recites that the old claims and difficulties and disputes between these people, all of them and parts of them, and with the United States are all gone through and no claim of a pretension of this kind is mentioned, it is now discovered that there has been a mistake about this matter all the time; here is an omission on the score of removal. All this might be made out if there were time to investigate it and explore it on all sides; but is it wise and right to seek by an amendment to an appropriation bill in the very last days of the session to make a final and conclusive determination of this affair? That is what I think is a very unsafe and unwise thing.

I agree with my friend from Illinois that the Indian is entitled to justice just as much as the white man, and I think more, because he is less capable of taking care of himself, as we all assume, but the matter is deserving of inquiry when we remember that there have been so many instances in which in the name of an Indian tribe enormous claims have been presented and pushed, which are perfectly natural, by people who are going to get great benefits out of them if they can get them through; 35 per cent. it is said in this case. Indians are perfectly willing among themselves when anybody says to them, "I think I have discovered how I can get something out of one of these old treaties, and if you will give me 35 per cent. I may get it; if I do not get it you will have nothing to pay, if I do you will get 65 per cent.," to say, "all right, go ahead." So it is not clear that we are doing any great injustice to these Indians at this moment if we do not put in the bill this amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President we seem to have quite a number of gentlemen in the Senate who are afraid somebody will be defrauded, and therefore they must protect the Government. Inasmuch as I voted for this amendment in committee, I am not afraid to defend it in the Senate; but I was very sorry to see the Senator from Vermont, as able a lawyer as he is and as honest a man as he is, mistaken in the treaties of the United States with these Indians. The Senator says that under the treaties those people were not included, being west of the Mississippi River.

Mr. EDMUNDS. No; they emigrated before.

Mr. LOGAN. I understand; because they emigrated before the treaty of 1835 was made, therefore they are not entitled under the treaty to any consideration.

Mr. EDMUNDS. For removal.

Mr. LOGAN. If the Senator will only turn to the supplemental treaty of 1846, which he has read as a matter of course, he will find his mistake; and before I get through I will show exactly where he is mistaken. I will show the section of the treaty first under which this agreement was made between the Government and the Indians. Article 2 of the treaty of 1836 provides:

Whereas the Cherokee people have supposed that the sum of $5,000,000—

I ask the Senate to listen to this language—

fixed by the Senate in their resolution of —— day of March, 1835, as the value of the Cherokee lands and possessions east of the Mississippi River was not intended to include the amount which may be required to remove them, nor the value of certain claims which many of their people had against citizens of the United States, which suggestion has been confirmed by the opinion expressed to the War Department by some of the Senators who voted upon the question; and whereas the President is willing that this subject should be referred to the Senate for their consideration, and if it was not intended by the Senate that the above-mentioned sum of $5,000,000 should include the objects herein specified, that in that case such further provision should be made therefor as might appear to the Senate to be just,

ART. 3. It is therefore agreed that the sum of $600,000 shall be, and the same is hereby, allowed to the Cherokee people, to include the expense of their removal.

You find by this treaty of 1836, which was a supplemental treaty to the treaty of 1835, that the Indians claimed that out of this $5,000,000 that was to be given them for their lands the expense of their removal was not to be deducted, and that Senators who agreed to this treaty in the Senate went to the Secretary of War, who had charge of the removal of the Indians, and stated to him that that was not the intention of the treaty, and then on that statement being made it was referred back and a supplemental treaty made with these people covering and including this proposition the treaty then made. Article 4 of the treaty made in 1846, covering this proposition, shows exactly what the intention of the treaty of 1835 and the supplemental treaty of 1836 was between the Government of the United States and the Indians. The fourth article of the treaty of 1846, is as follows:

And whereas it has been decided by the board of commissioners recently appointed by the President of the United States to examine and adjust the claims and difficulties existing against and between the Cherokee people and the United States, as well as between the Cherokees themselves, that under the provisions of the treaty of 1828, as well as in conformity with the general policy of the United States in relation to the Indian tribes, and the Cherokee Nation in particular, that that portion of the Cherokee people known as the "Old Settlers," or "Western Cherokees," had no exclusive title to the territory ceded in that treaty, but that the same was intended for the use of, and to be the home for, the whole nation, including as well that portion then east as that portion then west of the Mississippi; and whereas the said board of commissioners further decided that, inasmuch as the territory before mentioned became the common property of the whole Cherokee Nation by the operation of the treaty of 1828, the Cherokees then west of the Mississippi, by the equitable operation of the same treaty, acquired a common interest in the lands occupied by the Cherokees east of the Mississippi River, as well as in those occupied by themselves west of that river, which interest should have been provided for in the treaty of 1835, but which was not, except in so far as they, as a constituent portion of the nation, retained, in proportion to their numbers, a common interest in the country west of the Mississippi, and in the general funds of the nation; and therefore they have an equitable claim upon the United States for the value of that interest, whatever it may be: Now, in order to ascertain the value of that interest, it is agreed that the following principle shall be adopted, namely, all the investments and expenditures which are properly chargeable upon the sums granted in the treaty of 1835, amounting in the whole to $5,600,000 (which investments and expenditures are particularly enumerated in the fifteenth article of the treaty of 1835), to be first deducted from said aggregate sum, thus ascertaining the residuum or amount which would under such marshaling of accounts be left for per capita distribution among the Cherokees emigrating under the treaty of 1835, excluding all extravagant and improper expenditures, and then allow to the Old Settlers (or Western Cherokees) a sum equal to one-third part of said residuum, to be distributed per capita to each individual of said party of Old Settlers or Western Cherokees. It is further agreed that so far as the Western Cherokees are concerned, in estimating the expense of removal and subsistence of an Eastern Cherokee, to be charged to the aggregate fund of $5,600,000 above mentioned, the sums for removal and subsistence stipulated in the eighth article of the treaty of 1835, as commutation money in those cases in which the parties entitled to it removed themselves, shall be adopted. And as it affects the settlement with the Western Cherokees, there shall be no deduction—there shall be no deduction from the fund before mentioned in consideration of any payments which may hereafter be made out of said fund; and it is hereby further understood and agreed that the principle above defined shall embrace all those Cherokees west of the Mississippi who emigrated prior to the treaty of 1835.

The Senator said that prior to 1835 the Cherokees west of the Mississippi River were not included in this contract, thereby precluding them from charges against the five-million fund, their third part of it; and yet the treaty of 1846 explanatory of the treaty of 1835 and the supplemental treaty of 1836 says expressly it shall not be charged against that fund.

There is the treaty between the Government and these Indians; and what is this claim? The Senator is very adroit in his statement, but he fails to read the whole article of that treaty showing that the expense of transportation was not to be charged against the one-third of the $5,600,000 they were entitled to. It was the design under the treaty that that sum should not be charged against this amount; but we find when it comes to making up the account that it was charged. To show that, I will take the statute that was passed afterward to carry out the treaties approved June 12, 1838, following the treaties of 1835 and 1836. Here is the statute enacted in 1838:

That the sum of $1,047,067 be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, in full for all objects specified in the third article of the treaty of 1835 between the United States and the Cherokees, and for the further object of aiding in the subsistence of the Indians for one year after their removal West.

There is an appropriation made under that treaty, not only an appropriation for their subsistence after they were removed West, their subsistence for one year, two million and odd dollars voted for that purpose, following out the principle of the treaty. Then there was an appropriation by Congress in 1851, but when the settlement was made with these Indians, the Western Cherokees or Old Settlers found themselves charged against their one-third of the $5,600,000 for their removal and subsistence, and they were made to pay it out of that sum which had come from their land. It is for that that they claim they have been wronged, and ask this amount.

Now, what is the trouble about this estimate? The Senator says the Secretary of the Interior has not done it, that it requires a judicial investigation. How a judicial investigation? Here is the amount that was charged, and I will give it.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. LOGAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I understand that the Senator's position is that the amount of the cost of transporting these people to the territory whence they were removed was taken out of the sum agreed to be paid by this Government for their lands, and that this claim now is for that money.

Mr. LOGAN. Yes, sir; $53 and something per head was charged for the removal of these Indians, numbering 13,000. They removed themselves, and yet they were charged by the Government for their removal so much per head, and it was charged against the amount that the Government had agreed in the treaty should be paid to them without any deduction for their removal and subsistence. That is the whole case.

These Indians were entitled to one-third of $5,600,000, and that one-third of that money was granted by the treaty and by an act of Congress secured against any charge for their removal or subsistence for one year after they were removed. That was the contract, that was the agreement; but afterward, in 1851, when a settlement was made with the Treasury of the United States, they were charged per capita for their removal, and it was deducted from this sum, though it had been agreed by the treaty that no deduction should be made from it.

Senators say that some court ought to adjudicate this. Can a court figure up 13,000 and some odd Indians at $53 a head any better than a clerk or anybody else? Can a judge any better than anybody else figure up how much money was charged against them for subsistence for one year when they were not entitled to be charged with it? It is a mere matter of computation. If there were 13,000 Indians, or 20,000 Indians—it makes no difference whatever number there was, the record shows the number that were removed—they were charged so much per head. What you have to do is to figure up how much that makes; then examine the treaty, and you will find that the Government was not entitled to charge them for it. Then that sum ought to be given them.

Then, inasmuch as the Government provided for their subsistence for one year and appropriated $1,040,000 for that purpose and then turned around and charged their third up against that fund, it is very easy for any man to make the calculation of how much that will be. That is all there is in this case. It is a mere matter of calculation. The Secretary of the Interior appointed a man to make these calculations and these examinations, and he decides these treaties are so and so, and the calculations are made. I should like to know how much better a court or anybody else could do it. The whole thing, in my judgment, is to get rid of this claim or any other that an Indian may have. I have never known Indians to get through a claim here that was an honest one. They may have got some dishonest ones through.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. How long has this been pending?

Mr. LOGAN. It has been pending before Congress for eight years. It has been pending before the Treasury and War Department and other Departments trying to get the record corrected for thirty years. It was presented to Congress eight years ago, and it has been before the House of Representatives and before the Senate for eight years. Bill after bill has been reported. At the last session a bill was reported and passed authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to make this examination and report to Congress, which has been done. The report has been made; and now the Indian is told it ought to be further examined. Why? Because he is honest enough to put a resolution in here that his council said he should have a certain amount because there had been a certain amount expended. It is said that if it is an honest claim there is no necessity for expending money here. I do not think there is except for a man's hotel bill. If a man is a poor man, and comes to get a claim through Congress, unless there is some reason for passing it through more than ordinarily follows claims, he generally exhausts what he has before he gets through, and then abandons his claim and goes home. Every Senator knows that. Hardly any claim ever gets through Congress by itself; and why? Because no one takes any interest in it. I do not mean by that that money is used, for it is not. I do not believe in these insinuations, for I think Senators and members of Congress are just as honest as anybody else. Men get up against a claim and say there has been a large amount of money allowed to this agent. What has that to do with the honesty of the claim? If the poor Indian is ignorant enough to agree with another Indian to give him half his claim, what has that to do with the justice of the claim? I suppose this Indian council came to the conclusion that they would never get anything, that they would be always trying to get action by Congress, as they have been trying before, to be shuffled off and never paid, and they agreed to give this other Indian a large amount. I do not care anything about that and I do not know anything about it. I do not care if they give it all away; it is none of my business. The question for the United States is whether we owe this money. If we do we ought to pay it; if we do not owe it we ought not to pay any of it. I do not believe any man who has ever examined the claim contends that the Government does not owe these Indians.

Mr. President, I will not take the time of the Senate to read documentary matter, but I will put in the RECORD with my remarks, if I am permitted to do so, quotations from the Secretary of War at the time this thing first occurred and the estimates and calculations that are made, that they may be printed as a justification at least for myself for the part I have taken in supporting this claim.

The documents refered to are as follows:

The joint resolution of August 7, 1848, required the accounting officers of the Treasury to make to Congress a just and fair statement of the claims of the Cherokee Nation of Indians, according to the principles established by the treaty of August, 1846, between the United States and those Indians. This statement was submitted December 3, 1849 (Senate Executive Document 176, Thirty-first Congress, first session), and was recognized and adopted by Congress in making a final settlement with said nation under the act of February 27, 1851 (9 Statutes, 572–573), which appropriated the sum of $724,608.37, with interest, for that purpose. The statement was also adopted by Congress, so far as applicable under the provisions of the fourth article of the treaty of 1846, in effecting a final settlement with the "Old Settlers" under the act of September 30, 1850 (9 Statutes, 536), appropriating the sum of $532,896.90, with interest, in payment of their account against the United States. (Report 176, Senate committee, Thirty-first Congress, first session.)

In adopting the above statement made by the accounting officers of the Treasury, the "Old Settlers" are charged by the Senate committee "for removal and subsistence of 18,026 Indians, at $53.33⅓ per head, $961,386.66." I am satisfied that this is an overcharge. The eighth article of the treaty of 1835 provides that "the United States also agree and stipulate to remove the Cherokees to their new homes and to subsist them one year after their arrival there." (Rev. Ind. Treaties, page 70.) This language imports pecuniary responsibility on the part of the Government, and in the talk which was sent by President Jackson to the Cherokees to explain the advantages of that treaty he mentions that the stipulations offered "provide for the removal, at the expense of the United States, of your whole people and for their subsistence a year after arrival in their new country." It would seem that the Indians so understood this matter, and that the Senate recognized the fact that all expenses incurred by them for and on account of removal and subsistence should be borne by the United States. In support of this proposition articles 2 and 3 of the supplementary articles to the treaty of 1835 provide that "whereas the Cherokee people have supposed that the sum of $5,000,000, fixed by the Senate in their resolution of — day of March, 1835, as the value of the Cherokee lands and possessions east of the Mississippi River, was not intended to include the amount which may be required to remove them, nor the value of certain claims which many of their people had against citizens of the United States, which suggestion has been confirmed by the opinion expressed to the War Department by some of the Senators who voted upon the question; and whereas the President is willing that this subject should be referred to the Senate for their consideration, and if it was not intended by the Senate that the above-mentioned sum of $5,000,000 should include the objects herein specified, that in that case such further provision should be made therefor as might appear to the Senate to be just: It is therefore agreed that the sum of $600,000 shall be, and the same is hereby, allowed to the Cherokee people to include the expense of their removal and all claims of every nature and description against the Government of the United States not herein otherwise expressly provided for, and to be in lieu of the said reservations and pre-emptions (provided for in articles 12 and 13 of the treaty), and of the sum of $300,000 for spoliations described in the first article of the above-mentioned treaty. This sum of $600,000 shall be applied and distributed agreeably to the provisions of the said treaty, and any surplus which may remain after removal and payment of the claims so ascertained shall be turned over and belong to the education fund."—Ib., page 78.

Hon. Casey A. Harris, Commissioner of Indian Affairs, in his letter of July 25, 1836, to the board of commissioners authorized by the seventeenth article of the treaty to examine and adjudicate Cherokee claims, refers to the above supplementary article as follows: "The sum of $300,000 is appropriated to pay claims for spoliations; if they should fall short of this sum, the balance will be applicable to the expenses of removing the Cherokees."

Again, in his letter of January 25, 1838, to Lieutenant Van Horne, disbursing agent for the removal and subsistence of those Indians, the Commissioner says: "The claims for which requisitions have been made by the commissioners amount to $210,000, and the remittances which have been made for your use are $300,000. There will then be a balance of $90,000, applicable to other objects than the payment for abandoned improvements, &c., and which you will apply to the satisfaction of claims for commutation of subsistence and others of a similar character." (See Records Indian Office.)

There is further evidence in support of the proposition that the treaty of 1835-'36 contemplated that the expense of removal and subsistence should be paid by the United States, and that the "Old Settlers," or Western Cherokees, were "properly chargeable" only with the number actually removed and subsisted out of the $600,000 allowed by the third supplementary article to the treaty of 1835 for that and other purposes, and to this evidence I will now call your attention.

The treaty of 1835-'36 was finally ratified on the 23d of May, 1836, and by its provisions the Cherokees were required to remove within two years. (Rev. Ind. Treaties, pp. 75, 79.) The time elapsed May 23, 1838. It had been concluded, in defiance of the protest of a large majority, with a small minority of the nation who saw no other escape from threatened ruin. Within that period those who had favored the treaty had mostly emigrated to the West under its provisions. The large majority of the nation, adopting the counsels of John Ross—a man represented as of unlimited influence among them—had obstinately withstood all the efforts of the Government, to induce them to adopt the treaty and emigrate under its provisions. Ross and his party had constantly repudiated its obligations and denounced it as a fraud upon their nation. In the mean time the United States had appointed its agents under the treaty and collected a large military force to enforce the execution of the treaty. The State of Georgia had adopted a system of hostile legislation, intended to drive them from the country. She had surveyed the country and disposed of the homes of the Cherokees by lottery, dispossessed them of their lands, subjected them to her laws, while she disqualified them to hold any political or civil rights. In this posture of affairs the Cherokees, who had never abandoned the vain hope of remaining in the country or obtaining better terms from the United States, through John Ross and others, made new proposals to the United States for the sale of their country and emigration to the West. Still pursuing the idea that they were aliens to the treaty of 1835 and unfettered by its provisions, they proposed to release all claim to their country and emigrate for a named sum of money, in connection with other conditions, among which was the stipulation that they should be allowed to take charge of their own emigration, and that the United States should pay the expense of their removal. To avoid the necessity of enforcing the treaty at the point of the bayonet, and to relieve itself of its counter obligations to Georgia by the compact of 1802, and to the Cherokees by the treaties of 1817 and 1819, the proposal was readily acceded to. On the 18th of May, 1838, Mr. Poinsett, then Secretary of War, addressed a reply to the proposals of the Cherokee delegation, in which he says:

"If it be desired by the Cherokee Nation that their own agents should have the charge of their emigration, their wishes will be complied with and instructions be given to the commanding general in the Cherokee country to enter into arrangements with them to that effect. With regard to the expense of this operation, which you ask may be defrayed by the United States, in the opinion of the undersigned the request ought to be granted; and an application for such further sum as may be required for this purpose shall be made to Congress." The application was made and a resolution of the House of Representatives adopted inquiring how much would be required for that purpose. The Secretary of War replied to this resolution on the 25th of May, 1838, from which the following is an extract:

"The payment of the expenses of removing the remaining Cherokees, estimated at 15,840, at $30 a head	$475,200
"Amount applicable to that purpose	39,300
"Balance to be provided for	335,900

"If it should be deemed proper to make any further provision for the payment of the subsistence of the emigrants for one year after their arrival in the West it requires, estimating the whole number at 18,335, thereby including those who have already emigrated, and allowing the amount stipulated to be paid by treaty, namely, $33.33 a head, $611,105.55."

These estimates, with a message containing the provisional arrangement with John Ross, were communicated to Congress and received its sanction by the act of June 12, 1838, in the following language:

"That the sum of $1,047,067 be appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, in full for all objects specified in the third article of the treaty of 1835 between the United States and the Cherokees, and for the further object of aiding in the subsistence of the Indians for one year after their removal west: Provided, That no part of the said sum of money shall be deducted from the $5,000,000 stipulated to be paid to said tribe of Indians by said treaty: And provided further, That the said Indians shall receive no benefits from said appropriation unless they shall complete their emigration within such time as the President shall deem reasonable, and without coercion on the part of the Government."

Then says the honorable Secretary:

Here was a clear legislative affirmation of the terms offered by the Indians and acceded to by the Secretary of War. It was agreed by the Secretary of War to consider the expenses of removal and subsistence, as intended by the treaty of 1835, to be borne by the United States, and Congress affirmed his act by providing that no part of the $1,047,067 should be taken from the treaty fund. It was made auxiliary to the $600,000 provided for in the third supplemental article, a fund provided for removal and other expenditures independent of the treaty fund and in full for these objects.

Again the Secretary says that—

Now, if the Government was bound by the terms of that treaty to remove and subsist those Indians at the expense of the United States, no part of the $5,000,000 fund was properly chargeable with those expenditures; but the $600,000 allowed by the third supplementary article to that treaty, appropriated July 2, 1836, the appropriation of $1,047,067 on July 12, 1838, and the appropriation of $189,422.76 on September 30, 1850, are alone available for these purposes.

The honorable Secretary then concludes that—

I am therefore inclined to the opinion that a fair and equitable statement of the "Old Settlers," or Western Cherokee Indians, against the United States would be as follows:

		Cr.
By the fund provided by the treaty of 1835-'36		$5,600,000 00
From which are to be deducted, under the fourth article of the treaty of 1846, the sums "properly chargeable" under the fifteenth article of the treaty of 1835, which, according to the report of the accounting officers (except for removal and subsistence), will stand thus:
For improvements	$1,540,572 27
For ferries	159,572 12
For spoliations	264,894 09
For removal and subsistence of 4,495 Indians, at $33.33 a head	133,058 35
Debts and claims upon the Cherokee Nation, namely:
National debts (tenth article)	$18,062 06
Claims of United States citizens (tenth article)	61,073 49
Cherokee committee (twelfth article)	22,212 76
	101,348 31
Amount allowed United States for additional quantity of land ceded	500,000 00
Amount invested as general fund of the nation	500,880 00
Unexpended balance of the $600,000 appropriation	39,300 00
Making in the aggregate the sum of		3,239,625 14
Which, being deducted from the treaty fund of $5,600,000, leaves the residuum contemplated by the fourth article of the treaty of 1846 of		2,360,374 86
Of which amount one third is to be allowed to the "Old Settlers," being		786,791 62
Together with interest thereon at 5 per cent. per annum from June 12, 1838, to September 22, 1851, when a payment of $532,896.90, with interest, was made. (Congressional Globe, page 1760, Thirty-first Congress, first session, and act September 30, 1850, 9 Statutes, 556)		522,342 21
Total		1,309,133 83
Deduct above payment with interest as credited		887,480 15
Balance due the "Old Settlers"		421,653 68

Together with interest thereon at 5 per cent. per annum from September 22, 1851, as provided by Senate resolution of September 5, 1850. (Congressional Globe, volume 21, part 2, page 1760, 1849-'50.)

That is all I desire to say. I am perfectly willing that Congress shall take just such action as it sees proper in reference to this matter; but I hope at least that it will take such action as will not keep these Indians dancing attendance here for the next twenty-five years. The man who is here is getting old now. I suppose a great many of these people are old. I suppose he is over 70 years old. He has been here eight years, and he says he hopes Congress will do something decided some way that they may know what you are going to do. I hope you will do so too.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. This claim, I have no doubt, has merit, but it has been my opinion not only here but elsewhere where it has been considered that this bill is not the place in which it ought to be considered. Though it comes from the Committee on Appropriations, it was not a unanimous report from that committee. I believe the claim ought to be considered properly by the Committee on Indian Affairs, and I hope they will consider it at as early a date as they can. I am told by some of that committee that they have considered it and that they have not been able to come to a conclusion. I have looked at it with the Senator from Illinois as attentively as I could, and I have come to the conclusion that there must be some merit in it, but at the same time I do not think it is proper that it should go on this bill.

Mr. McPHERSON. I have somewhere read that the Committee on Indian Affairs had considered the claim and reported adversely. May I ask the Senator from West Virginia if that is so?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Not exactly that. I believe they have considered it and reported it to the Senate, not adversely, nor yet favorably, as I understand.

Mr. McPHERSON. Without recommendation?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Perhaps I had better let the Senator from Wisconsin say as to that.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. The Committee on Indian Affairs reported that in their opinion there was some merit, but that the committee were not able to determine the exact amount, if any, that was due from the United States to the Indians, and they recommended that the Indians be authorized to institute a suit in the Court of Claims, I think.

Mr. LOGAN. If the Senator will allow me, I can state about that. I reported a bill from the Indian Committee myself in 1881 authorizing this matter to be referred to the Court of Claims, but as I stated this morning, I came to the conclusion that probably the Court of Claims would not have jurisdiction over the case, although I may be mistaken about that, and the bill fell on that account. At the next session of Congress the Senator from Wisconsin reported to the Senate——

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Have you the report?

Mr. LOGAN. Yes, sir; I have that report. But that Congress, instead of adopting that bill and passing a bill referring it to the Court of Claims, referred it to the Secretary of the Interior for his examination and report, which has been had. He has reported.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. The act to which the Senator refers was contained in an appropriation bill.

Mr. LOGAN. Yes.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. It did not come from the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. LOGAN. I do not know who introduced it; I know I did not.

Mr. McPHERSON. May I inquire if the action of the Committee on Appropriations has been based on the report of the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. LOGAN. Yes, sir; that is it exactly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. ALLISON. This matter was considered in the Committee on Appropriations with the best light we had before us. In the nature of things upon a bill of this character we could not give the subject that exhaustive attention and consideration which a matter of so great importance required. It was the judgment of a majority of the committee, with the report of the Secretary of the Interior before us and such other lights as we could have, to report this amendment. The Secretary of the Interior appeared before the committee about several other matters, and while there, among other things, he was inquired of in reference to this, and he stated before the committee that he believed on such examination as he was able to give it that it was a just and honest claim. I believe myself that these people have some claim against this Government; but this debate has satisfied me that whatever this claim is and whatever the extent of it, it should not be upon this bill; and if I am to vote upon this question I shall vote against putting it in the bill.

Here are old treaties; here is the treaty of 1846, which laid down a rule whereby a certain sum of money should be distributed. It was distributed, as I understand now from the facts which have been brought out in debate, by means of the accounting officers of the Treasury, and although the Indians have claimed all the time that there was an error in that account and an error in that settlement, yet, as a matter of fact, but one man has authoritatively made this claim, and I think it ought to have a fuller and a more complete investigation as to the amount due, and therefore my own judgment is, though I come to it reluctantly, having agreed to report the bill with this provision in, that it ought to be postponed until we can have a fuller examination.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the committee inserting the words from lines 1761 to 1779.

Mr. BROWN called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BLAIR (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BARROW].

Mr. BUTLER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON].

Mr. MILLER, of California (when his name was called). I am paired with my colleague [Mr. FARLEY].

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. SAUNDERS].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I am paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GROOME].

Mr. CAMDEN (after having voted in the affirmative). I am paired with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TABOR]. I forgot it at the moment, and now withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 12, nays 36; as follows:

YEAS—12.

Brown,	Grover,	Morgan,	Slater,
Dawes,	Kellogg,	Plumb,	Voorhees,
Frye,	Logan,	Sawyer,	Walker.

NAYS—36.

Allison,	Edmunds,	Hawley,	Mahone,
Anthony,	Fair,	Hill,	Maxey,
Call,	Garland,	Ingalls,	Pendleton,
Cameron of Wis.,	George,	Jackson,	Pugh,
Cockrell,	Gorman,	Jonas,	Rollins,
Coke,	Groome,	Jones of Florida,	Sewell,
Conger,	Hampton,	Lamar,	Vance,
Davis of Ill.,	Harris,	McDill,	Vest,
Davis of W. Va.,	Harrison,	McMillan,	Windom.

ABSENT—28.

Aldrich,	Cameron of Pa.,	Lapham,	Ransom,
Barrow,	Farley,	McPherson,	Saulsbury,
Bayard,	Ferry,	Miller of Cal.,	Saunders,
Beck,	Hale,	Miller of N. Y.,	Sherman,
Blair,	Hoar,	Mitchell,	Tabor,
Butler,	Johnston,	Morrill,	Van Wyck,
Camden,	Jones of Nevada,	Platt,	Williams.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. LOGAN. What is the next amendment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next amendment will be read.

The Acting Secretary proceeded to read the amendment, beginning in line 1780.

Mr. LOGAN. Before you proceed I wish to say, if I may be permitted, that this provision having been stricken out of the bill by a vote of the Senate and by the vote of all the members who put it on except myself I believe, who can see right enough in a thing to vote for it in committee, but get very much alarmed when it gets into the Senate, we ought to do something more. I would suggest to some gentleman of the Appropriations Committee who is so desirous that these Indians shall not be defrauded, who have some amendments to this bill, that this claim may be examined by some committee of the Senate or by some court or by somebody that you have confidence in hereafter when a report is made, so that these people at least may have an opportunity of having a trial somewhere.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next amendment will be read.

The ACTING SECRETARY. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations is, after line 1779, to insert:

That the sum of $300,000 is hereby appropriated, to be paid into the treasury of the Cherokee Nation, out of the funds due under appraisement for Cherokee lands west of the Arkansas River, which sum shall be expended as the acts of the Cherokee legislature direct, this amount to be immediately available: Provided, That the Cherokee Nation, through its proper authorities, shall execute conveyances, satisfactory to the Secretary of the Interior, for the tracts occupied by the Pawnees, Poncas, Nez Percés, Otoes and Missourias, and Osages, before the payment of said sum of money. And the Secretary of the Interior shall, as soon as practicable thereafter, prepare and cause to be issued patents to the said Pawnees, Poncas, Nez Percés, Otoes and Missourias, and Osages, in their tribal capacity, inserting in said patents the same terms and conditions that are inserted in the patents to the Choctaw Nation dated March 23, 1842.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection from any quarter the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It ought to be explained I am sure. I do not understand it. We ought to have an explanation about it. It is a subject entirely new to me.

Mr. DAWES. If the Senator desires an explanation of this I will give it. In the treaty of 1866 with the Cherokee Indians they agreed with the United States to sell to us for the use of friendly Indians all their land in the Indian Territory west of the ninety-sixth meridian at such sum as the President of the United States should determine. The President of the United States determined upon 47½ cents an acre for the whole of it. They have never received for that any sum beyond $300,000. It would amount to between two and three million dollars. Upon the land have been settled by the United States the tribes of Indians that are enumerated in this amendment, but they have no title to the land. The title still remains in the Cherokee Nation. The Cherokee Nation complain of the United States that they are picking out the best part of the land, and think they ought to take the whole of it and pay for the whole of it. The United States are not willing to pay for it any faster than they occupy it by these friendly tribes. Now these friendly tribes occupy a considerable portion of that land; the Cherokee Indians are claiming their pay; they have offered to the United States that if it will pay them $300,000 on account of the whole, they will make a deed of so much of this land as is occupied by these other Indians.

The late Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Kirkwood, was in great trouble then in that Territory to ascertain that we had not a title to a foot of that land, and when they made this offer to him he considered it so desirable to get a deed of this portion of the land that he recommended strongly that we should pay $300,000, which is on account, but it is not so much as the number of acres we occupy at 47½ cents an acre would come to. He recommended this, and we put it into the appropriation bill last year, but it was lost in conference. It is put in this year again.

Mr. MAXEY. Let me ask the Senator from Massachusetts a question. I understood the Senator to say that the title to this land was in the Cherokee Nation.

Mr. DAWES. The title to all the land.

Mr. MAXEY. Is that title held by the Indians?

Mr. DAWES. That title is held by the Indians.

Mr. MAXEY. Then how can the Secretary of the Interior be ordered to issue a patent in the form and conditions of the patent to the Choctaw Nation in 1842, when the Government has already issued a patent to the Cherokee Nation for this same land?

Mr. DAWES. The Secretary of the Interior is not to issue patents.

Mr. MAXEY. That is what the amendment says, as I catch its meaning from a hasty reading.

Mr. DAWES. They are to deed it and the Secretary of the Interior is to prescribe the form of the deed. I have not read the amendment now, but the amendment last year was to have the deed to these Indians in conformity with the stipulations of the treaty by which the Cherokees hold their land under patent.

Mr. MAXEY. Now, if the Senator will permit me, I will read what this amendment says:

And the Secretary of the Interior shall, as soon as practicable thereafter, prepare and cause to be issued patents to the said Pawnees, Poncas, Nez Percés, Otoes and Missourias, and Osages, in their tribal capacity, inserting in said patents the same terms and conditions that are inserted in the patents to the Choctaw Nation dated March 23, 1842.

I respectfully submit the question as a proposition of law, that if the United States has divested itself of the title by patent and vested it in the Cherokee Nation, I can not see how the Secretary of the Interior can be authorized to issue another patent.

Mr. DAWES. If the Senator will read further he will see that the proposition is for the Cherokees to convey to the United States in conformity with the agreement, and then the United States is to convey to these other Indians and to insert in the patent the provisions by which the land is bound under the treaty.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. The Senator should commence reading at line 1786.

Mr. DAWES. The conveyance is to be a conveyance in the first instance according to the agreement in the treaty, and then the Secretary of the Interior is authorized here to make a title to these Indians.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. The Cherokees are first to convey to the United States, and then the United States is to convey to the others.

Mr. MAXEY. I see that now. It escaped me before. That cures the difficulty.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to have the article of the treaty read under which this provision is made.

Mr. PLUMB. At the request of the Senator from Vermont I will read the article.

The United States may settle friendly Indians in any part of the Cherokee country west of 96°, to be taken in a compact form in quantity not exceeding one hundred and sixty acres for each member of each of said tribes thus to be settled; the boundaries of each of said districts to be distinctly marked, and the land conveyed in fee-simple to each of said tribes to be held in common or by their members in severalty, as the United States may decide.

Said lands thus disposed of to be paid for to the Cherokee Nation at such price as may be agreed on between the said parties in interest, subject to the approval of the President; and if they should not agree, then the price to be fixed by the President.

The Cherokee Nation to retain the right of possession of and jurisdiction over all of said country west of 96° of longitude until thus sold and occupied, after which their jurisdiction and right of possession to terminate forever as to each of said districts thus sold and occupied.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Where is the evidence that this article has been so far executed as to have had any of the lands disposed of and to have had a price agreed upon between the Cherokees and the United States and approved by the President? We ought to have something about that.

Mr. DAWES. I have seen in the Interior Department the papers, and they are embodied in a communication to Congress, in a document which was in the committee-room on Appropriations. I have it not here myself.

Mr. EDMUNDS. How much was the price?

Mr. DAWES. Forty-seven and a half cents per acre for a portion of the land and 46 cents, I think, for the rest of it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. How much is the aggregate amount?

Mr. DAWES. The aggregate amount is stated in that communication, and the aggregate price at 47½ cents an acre is there stated—a little over $2,000,000. The number of acres is stated in that document which is in the committee-room.

Mr. MAXEY. Will the Senator state the terms and conditions of the Choctaw patent of March 23, 1842?

Mr. DAWES. When the Indian Territory was set apart for the Five Nations, the United States gave a patent to the Cherokees and Choctaws and Chickasaws. That patent does not appear to grant an absolute fee-simple, but it is a patent to them more like a life estate to an individual, so long as they occupy it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is that the treaty of 1842?

Mr. DAWES. It was the old treaty by which the Indians were moved onto this Territory.

Mr. MAXEY. "As long as the tribal relation exists or they occupy the same," I think is the language. I only wanted to know whether that was in the patent. I know it is the law.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The committee ought to be able to refer us to that Choctaw limitation. I can not find in the statutes from 1836 to 1845 any treaty with the Choctaws at all.

Mr. DAWES. It was before that.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But this amendment says the treaty of March 23, 1842.

Mr. MAXEY. That was the date of the patent to the Choctaws.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But I am speaking of the amendment the committee have reported, and it reads:

The same terms and conditions that are inserted in the patents to the Choctaw Nation dated March 23, 1842.

That is the date of the patents. Then we have no means of knowing what the conditions are; how do we know what the conditions in those patents are?

Mr. MAXEY. That was just the question I asked.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I was not asking the Senator from Texas, but I was asking the gentlemen who report this provision.

Mr. MAXEY. I know that the law required that they should hold the land so long as they retained their tribal relations or occupied the soil.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is probably so, but that is the law; and now where is the treaty, so that we shall be sure that we are not making a mistake about this?

Mr. PLUMB. I will say that this part of the amendment was drawn at the Interior Department, and consequently these details may have escaped the attention of the committee.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes, but we ought to know what that is before we pass on it.

Mr. PLUMB. I would suggest that the terms contained in the patent are not inconsistent with the treaty of 1866.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I suggest that this be passed over for the time being until the committee can look up what that treaty and what those patents are, because it is a matter of importance involving a great deal of money.

Mr. DAWES. I have the documents here now.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us look at them.

Mr. DAWES. Let the amendment be passed over for the present.

Mr. LOGAN. Let us fix it now; but if this is to be passed over for the present, I have an amendment I desire to offer.

I offer, to come after the last line stricken out just preceding this amendment, the following amendment to this bill, and I will state that it is a bill that was reported unanimously by the Indian Committee at the last Congress and rereported again at this session of Congress. It has had two unanimous reports from the Indian Committee. It is to refer the Cherokee claim to the Court of Claims, and I hope inasmuch as so many persons have expressed themselves on that line, that they will not object to this. I ask that it be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate is now going through the bill to consider the amendments of the Committee on Appropriations, and after they are over this will be in order and any other amendments that Senators may wish to offer. According to the universal agreement, the Senate is going through the amendments of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. LOGAN. It is in order if there is no objection to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Certainly.

Mr. LOGAN. I ask unanimous consent of the Senate to offer it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois asks unanimous consent to offer an amendment at this time. The Chair hears no objection.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

SEC. —. That that portion of the Cherokee Nation of Indians residing west of the Mississippi River, and known and designated as "Western Cherokees" or "Old Settlers," by and under the name and style of the "Old Settler Cherokee Indians," be, and they are hereby, authorized to commence an action in the United States Court of Claims to recover whatever balance is justly and equitably due them from the United States under the Cherokee treaties of 1828, 1833, 1835, 1836, and 1846, according to the tenor and effect of said treaties at the dates of their respective ratifications, anything to the contrary notwithstanding; and, to the end that justice may be done, such court shall examine all settlements heretofore made under said treaties and acts of Congress relating thereto, and correct all errors that may have been made by any accounting officers or other authority of the Government of the United States in marshaling and settling the accounts for the said "Old Settlers," in improper charges, erroneous calculations, misconstruction of laws and treaties, or misapplication of funds. And the said court, in the adjudication of said "Old Settlers" claim, shall consider the same with reference to, and be governed by, the said treaties as relate to or affect said "Old Settlers," and shall make award on the equities of said claim under the said treaties; and on any sum found due said "Old Settler Cherokees" interest shall be paid from the time and at the rate fixed by the Senate of the United States on the 5th day of September, 1850. In case judgment shall be rendered in said cause against the United States, the Attorney-General shall immediately prosecute an appeal therefrom to the Supreme Court; and said cause shall take precedence in both the Court of Claims and the Supreme Court.

SEC. —. That said action shall be commenced in the name of the commissioners appointed by the "Old Settler Cherokee" council to prosecute said claim, and be prosecuted to final judgment by said commissioners, for the use and benefit of said "Old Settler Cherokees;" said suit shall be by petition, stating all the facts, laws, and treaties upon which said claim is founded, and no other statement need be made; and, for the purpose of prosecuting said claim, said commissioners, or their successors, shall have power, and they are hereby authorized, to employ and pay attorneys and counsel for services actually rendered within the scope of their authority from said "Old Settler Cherokees" as their commissioners.

SEC. —. That if final judgment shall be rendered in favor of said "Old Settler Cherokees," the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay the same in the manner prescribed in the treaty of 1846, and adopted in the partial payment heretofore made, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated; and the same shall be distributed per capita to each and every "Old Settler Cherokee" citizen according to the treaty aforesaid, subject only to such deductions as are authorized and provided for by the resolutions of a convention of said "Old Settlers" of the 22d day of November, 1875, and of the "Old Settler" council the 28th day of April, 1877, and reaffirmed November 20, 1880, and November the 17th, 1881, and therein directed to be paid to the treasurer of said commissioners as designated by said councils, which deductions shall be stipulated by said court in any judgment or decree rendered in favor of said Indians in accordance with said resolutions; and the amount so stipulated in said judgment or decree to be paid to said treasurer of said commissioners; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to pay to the treasurer of said commissioners in accordance therewith, and to take his receipt for the same, which receipt shall be binding on said "Old Settler" or "Western Cherokee" Indians for the sum therein mentioned.

Mr. ALLISON. Is that amendment before the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois got unanimous consent to offer it. The Chair asked if there was objection.

Mr. ALLISON. I object to it in that form.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair stated that it could be offered after the committee amendments were through.

Mr. ALLISON. I want to expressly stipulate that no interest shall be paid. Then all that arrangement about the commission of the Old Settlers and the amounts to be paid according to the resolutions of the council are matters of detail which it seems to me ought not to be in this bill.

Mr. LOGAN. I have no objection to striking all that out. I want to get the case to the Court of Claims. You will not let it be decided here and everybody says it ought to be decided somewhere. If there is any objection to the amendment, amend it until you are satisfied. All I care about is to get the case to the Court of Claims.

Mr. ALLISON. It is impossible to amend it here at this moment in this form, I submit to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LOGAN. It is not at all impossible.

Mr. ALLISON. Does the Chair decide that the amendment is before the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair told the Senator from Illinois that the Senate was proceeding to consider the amendments of the Committee on Appropriations, and after that this would be in order. He then asked unanimous consent to present it now as an amendment, and the Chair called for objections and heard none.

Mr. LOGAN. I will amend it in any shape or form to satisfy the Senate or to satisfy the chairman of the committee. The Senator from Vermont, who so bitterly opposed the proposition before presented, was in favor of referring the claim to some court; so was the Senator from Kansas, and everybody else; and now I make the proposition that it be referred to the Court of Claims, and I will amend it in any form or shape so as to get these Indians a hearing somewhere.

Mr. ALLISON. That is clearly legislation.

Mr. LOGAN. Of course it is legislation; nobody doubts that; but how long are these Indians to stand here? Without legislation they can not go into the Court of Claims. You are just moving an amendment for $300,000 to some Indians about buying lands. That is legislation; but it is all right, I suppose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. When an amendment is offered, of course the Chair does not interfere on any ground if there is no point of order raised.

Mr. ALLISON. I make the point of order for the moment. I can not examine the amendment at this moment; and I make the point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the point of order is raised of course the Chair must deside that this is legislation.

Mr. LOGAN. I know that; but I did not suppose anybody would object to it when almost the whole Senate said they voted it down before because they wanted the matter referred to a court.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will call the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to the amendment from line 1780 to 1798. Was that passed over?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. It was, I understood, for a moment.

Mr. ALLISON. It was temporarily passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading will proceed.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was to strike out lines 1808 to 1855, inclusive, in the following words:

That the modification of the treaty and the agreement made with the Sioux Indians under the act making appropriations for the sundry civil expenses of the Government, approved August 7, 1882, is hereby approved, and the sum of $200,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to enable the Secretary of the Interior to enter upon the execution of said treaty: Provided, That the rights of way, depot grounds, including such grounds for bridges, shops, and buildings as the railway companies have already selected and paid for under agreements with said Indians, by and with the consent of the Secretary of the Interior, not exceeding in extent the rights granted to railway companies by the general laws touching the same, are reserved to said companies, and the lands actually necessary for the site of the bridges and approaches thereto on the Missouri River, which have been selected, surveyed, and paid for under such contracts, are reserved according to these contracts, and the money, amounting to $17,110, so paid to the Secretary of the Interior for the benefit of said Indians, for the said rights of way and grounds as above expressed, shall remain the money of said Indians.

But nothing in the foregoing provision shall impair the provision in the act of the last session of this Congress above referred to authorizing the treaty and agreement with the said Indians for the cession of the land to the United States, under which said land has been ceded to the United States, touching the disposition of the said lands by the United States to actual settlers only under the provisions of the homestead laws, except only as to said right of way, and the land named as incident thereto above enumerated.

That all selections of land in severalty heretofore made by the Santee Sioux on their reservation in the State of Nebraska be, and the same are hereby, confirmed, and the Secretary of the Interior shall allot in severalty to said Santee Indians not yet having made selections a quantity of land from said reservation, in accordance with the provisions of the treaty of April 29, 1868, to be selected by such Indians as are by the provisions of said treaty entitled thereto. And the provisions of sections 6 and 7 of an act to provide for the sale of a part of the reservation of the Omaha tribe of Indians in the State of Nebraska, approved August 7, 1882, are hereby extended to said Santee Sioux Indians.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to say that the committee recommended that these provisions be stricken out chiefly because in the opinion of the committee this agreement has not been made as required by the treaty of 1868. The twelfth article of that treaty states:

No treaty for the cession of any portion or part of the reservation herein described which may be held in common shall be of any validity or force as against the said Indians unless executed and signed by at least three-fourths of all the adult male Indians occupying and interested in the same; and no cession by the tribe shall be understood or construed in such manner as to deprive, without his consent, any individual member of the tribe of his rights to any tract of land selected by him, as provided in article 6 of this treaty.

This agreement has been only agreed to by the chiefs and head-men of the tribe.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the committee to strike out the lines which have been read.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in the appropriations "under the United States Geological Survey," to strike out the following clause, between lines 1901 and 1914:

The Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Patents are authorized to grant any officer of the Government, except officers and employés of the Patent Office, a patent for any invention of the classes mentioned in section 4886 of the Revised Statutes, when such invention is used or to be used in the public service, without the payment of any fee: Provided, That the applicant in his application shall state that the invention described therein, if patented, may be used by the Government or any of its officers or employés in the prosecution of work for the Government, or by any other person in the United States, without the payment to him of any royalty thereon, which stipulation shall be included in the patent.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Government Hospital for the Insane," after line 1935, to insert:

For detached buildings for kitchen, including cooking apparatus, $8,500.

That of the appropriation of $25,000 for a supply of pure water, and for fire-walls between sections, in the act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes, not exceeding the sum of $5,000 may be used for fire-proof stairways and changes to provide greater protection against fires.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Columbia Institution for the Deaf and Dumb," in line 1951, after "dollars," to strike out:

Provided, That no more than $25,000 of said sum shall be expended for salaries and wages: Provided further, Hereafter,

And insert "and hereafter;" so as to make the clause read:

For current expenses of the Columbia Institution for the Deaf and Dumb: For support of the institution, including salaries and incidental expenses and for books and illustrative apparatus, for general repairs, and improvements, $55,000; and hereafter the report of said institution shall contain an itemized statement of all the employés, the salaries or wages respectively, each of them, and also of all other expenses of said institution.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after "grounds," in line 1958, to insert "and repairs of buildings;" and after "buildings" to strike out "one thousand five hundred" and insert "five thousand;" so as to make the clause read:

For the improvement and inclosure of the grounds, and repairs of buildings, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Howard University," after line 1966, to insert:

For water supply, $3,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after "employés," in line 1998, to strike out "fifteen" and insert "forty;" so as to read:

For the protection and improvement of the Yellowstone National Park: For every purpose and object necessary for the protection, preservation, and improvement of the Yellowstone National Park, including compensation of superintendent and employés, $40,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after "dollars," in line 1999, to strike out the following clause:

And the Secretary of the Interior is hereby prohibited from leasing any portion of the Yellowstone National Park to any person, company, or corporation for any purpose whatever; and all leases, agreements, exclusive privileges or monopolies granted or entered into are hereby declared to be of no force or effect; and the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to make necessary details of troops to prevent trespassers or intruders entering the park with the object of destroying the game therein, or for any other purpose prohibited by law.

Mr. VEST. I want to offer an amendment. I move to insert after the word "dollars," in line 1999, the following:

Two thousand dollars of said amount to be paid annually to a superintendent of said park, and $900 annually to each of ten assistants, all of whom shall be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior, and reside continuously in the park, and whose duty it shall be to protect the game, timber, and objects of interest therein; the balance of the sum appropriated to be expended in the construction and improvement of suitable roads and refuges within said park, under the supervision and direction of an engineer officer detailed by the Secretary of War for that purpose.

I offer this amendment because one of the defects now in the government of the park is owing to the fact that the superintendent of the park is within its limits only a few months within the course of the year. This park contains 3,300 square miles of mountain scenery, with geysers, Yellowstone Lake, and many objects of curiosity and interest. It is simply impossible that one man, even if he should remain there all the time, can sufficiently protect it; and there ought to be some one at the geysers and a man at the lake and so on at other points of interest. The amendment I propose is to give this superintendent $2,000 annually and to give him ten assistants at $900 each, and I require that they shall reside in the park. The superintendent was ordered back to the park a few months ago by the Secretary of the Interior, after having been away some time. In the mean time an immense amount of game has been killed; the geysers are being destroyed; persons have gone there and deliberately broken down the inclosures around the geysers. Others have gone there, as we are told by the reports of General Sheridan and General Sackett, Inspector-General of the Army—parties of men have gone in there and taken trunks of trees and put them into the geysers to see what effect that would have on the eruption or throwing out of the water. The Senator from Delaware was there last fall, and no doubt will corroborate what I have said in regard to the vandalism that is going on inside the park. In the winter time, when the elk and deer are confined by the snow to the mountains, they are butchered; over 2,500 elk were killed there during the last year. One gentleman testified in a letter which I have here that he found the carcasses of five elk killed and left there.

I say the superintendent of this park should remain there, and if the gentleman who holds the place now is not willing at a salary of $2,000 to attend to the duties, let some one else be appointed who will do it. I should think a proper man could be secured and ten policemen or assistants inured to that climate, mountaineers and trappers who are used to that northwest country, would be very useful. They could take care of the game and prevent its being destroyed and exterminated for mercenary purposes. I say to the Senate that unless some provision of this kind is put into this bill we might as well deliver that park up; let the whole dedication go for nothing, and just say to the people who have gone in there, "You can take it and destroy just as much as you please."

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that the amendment be read and the place where it is to come in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McMILLAN in the chair). The amendment will be read.

The Acting Secretary read the amendment proposed by Mr. VEST.

Mr. ALLISON. I have no objection that I know of especially to a portion of the amendment suggested by the Senator from Missouri, but it is perfectly apparent I think to every one that a superintendent and nine assistants can not prevent what he says is now going on there, if it is going on as he states.

Mr. VEST. Let me state to the chairman that there is another part of the amendment reported by the committee which provides that the Secretary of the Interior shall call on the Secretary of War for military protection. The point I make is that somebody ought to be at the geysers to stay there all the time.

Mr. ALLISON. So far as the suggestion is concerned that these men ought to remain there, I think that is wise, and I suppose the Secretary of the Interior would properly so require; but it seems to me that the suggestion of the Senator from Missouri that nine assistants should be employed in the park, and the machinery that he suggests, will take up the entire $40,000.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I will say to my colleague on the committee that it is $2,000 for a superintendent, and then $900 each for ten men, $9,000, making $11,000 in all.

Mr. ALLISON. An engineer officer is to be sent into the park with the remaining portion of the fund to build roads and bridges.

Mr. VEST. Of course, being an engineer officer, he is detailed from the Engineer Corps. The whole balance of the appropriation of $40,000, beyond the $11,000, goes to the construction of bridges and roads.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not care to spend time on it; if other members of the committee agree to it, very well; this is the first opportunity I have had to see the proposition.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST].

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations, striking out the House provision from line 1999 to 2008.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was to insert after line 2008:

The Secretary of the Interior may lease small portions of ground in the park, not exceeding eighty acres in extent for each tract, on which may be erected hotels and the necessary outbuildings, and for a period not exceeding ten years; but such lease shall not include any of the geysers or other objects of curiosity or interest in said park, or exclude the public from the free and convenient approach thereto; nor shall any hotel or other buildings be erected within the park until such lease shall be executed by the Secretary of the Interior; and all contracts, agreements, or exclusive privileges heretofore made or given in regard to said park, or any part thereof, are hereby declared to be invalid; nor shall the Secretary of the Interior, in any lease which he may make and execute, grant any exclusive privileges within said park, except upon the ground leased.

Mr. VEST. I move to strike out the word "eighty," in line 2010, and insert "twenty;" so as to read:

The Secretary of the Interior may lease small portions of ground in the park, not exceeding twenty acres in extent for each tract, &c.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I think that is too small.

Mr. ALLISON. I trust that amendment will not be adopted. The amendment as reported by the committee in detail was very carefully examined, and I suppose it is satisfactory in its details to the Senator from Missouri; I do not mean the Senator on the committee [Mr. COCKRELL], but I mean the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] who now offers this amendment.

Mr. BECK. There was a division in committee as between forty and eighty. I think if the Senator from Missouri will say forty there will be no trouble.

Mr. ALLISON. I think the Senator from Missouri suggested forty acres; in my belief eighty acres is not too large a quantity of land for the purpose intended here, and I submit that with all the safeguards we have thrown around it it is hardly worth while to create less area for the purpose designated. But of course I leave that to the judgment of the Senate. I hope the amendment of the Senator from Missouri will not be adopted.

Mr. VEST. I made no agreement in regard to this matter.

Mr. ALLISON. I did not state that the Senator from Missouri made any agreement. This amendment as printed was prepared by the Committee on Appropriations, and I only desired to say that that committee wished as far as it could to get the amendment in proper shape so as to cover everything that the Senator from Missouri had in view, as far as possible, and the Senator from Missouri will bear me witness that the Committee on Appropriations endeavored to gather light from him, he having examined this subject.

Mr. VEST. There is no doubt about that. Now, Mr. President, I want to call the attention of the Senate to this matter. The second section of the act of March, 1872, by which this park was set apart forever as a pleasure and recreation ground for the people of the United States, provided:

The Secretary may, in his discretion, grant leases for building purposes, for terms not exceeding ten years, of small parcels of ground, at such places in said park as shall require the erection of buildings for the accommodation of visitors; all of the proceeds of said leases, and all other revenues that may be derived from any source connected with said park, to be expended under his direction in the management of the same and the construction of roads and bridle-paths therein. He shall provide against the wanton destruction of the fish and game found within said park and against their capture or destruction for the purpose of merchandise or profit. He shall also cause all persons trespassing upon the same after the passage of this act to be removed therefrom, and generally shall be authorized to take all such measures as shall be necessary or proper to fully carry out the objects and purposes of this act.

I call attention to the language of that act: the Secretary of the Interior was to have power to grant leases for small parcels of ground for building purposes. Manifestly the intention of Congress in this act offered by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] was that no more of this property should be leased by the Secretary of the Interior than was necessary to the erection of buildings thereon for the accommodation of visitors to the park. The Secretary of the Interior, the present incumbent of that office, gave this construction to the act, for on October 28, 1882, an application was made to the Interior Department for leases to erect hotels in this park by E. M. Russell and E. S. Topping, S. J. Hoyt, Ed. Parker, William T. Kirkwood, James Gourley, and R. H. Rowland, George W. Marshall, R. R. Odell, and George W. Monroe; and here is the action of the Secretary of the Interior on that application directed to "P. H. Conger, esq., superintendent of the Yellowstone National Park." After reciting that said application had been made:

You will please inquire into the responsibility of the applicants named, and if assured of their ability to carry out the projects they suggest, make such recommendations as in your judgment may seem advisable, transmitting at the same time the evidence upon which your judgment is based, and a statement from the applicant setting forth the character and estimated cost of the improvements to be made and the purposes for which they are to be used.

Applicants should be informed that under the law no lease can be granted for a longer term than ten years.

You will also inform them that leases will not be transferable without the assent of the Secretary of the Interior, and that if improvements are not made on the lands within eighteen months of the approval of the lease, the lease will be canceled.

No lease will be given covering lands containing any of the natural curiosities or mineral springs within the park, or that will in any way prevent free access to such curiosities or springs.

This instruction in relation to the springs is deemed proper to procure to all the full enjoyment of the medicinal waters, and to prevent monopoly in their use, and is not intended to prevent the granting of leases for lands in close proximity thereto.

As the law authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to grant leases for building purposes "of small parcels of ground," no application will be entertained for the leasing of more than twenty acres in any one tract, and where the land desired is in the immediate vicinity of the principal attractions of the park, the selection should be confined to such parcels of land as will reasonably accommodate the buildings and the necessary surroundings proposed by the lease.

The following are the terms fixed by the Department for the leasing of ground within the park, subject to such modifications as may from time to time be desirable:

For tracts not exceeding five acres, $10 a year.

For tracts exceeding five acres and not more than twenty acres, $1 additional for each acre over five.

Yearly payments in advance will be required, and failure to pay within ninety days of the approval of the lease, or a like time after the yearly payments shall have become due, will be regarded as good grounds for the cancellation of the lease, and the forfeiture of all rights thereunder.

The proper selections for building sites must be left largely to your judgment, and in your report such a description should be given as to enable the Department to describe in the lease the limits with reasonable accuracy.

Upon the receipt of your recommendation, provided the same is approved by the Department, a form of lease will be prepared and forwarded to you with directions as to its proper execution and exemption.

Very respectfully,

H. M. TELLER, Secretary.

P. H. CONGER, Esq.,
Superintendent of the Yellowstone National Park, Waterloo, Iowa.

There the Secretary of the Interior instructed the superintendent that not more than twenty acres, under the terms of the act of 1872, would be leased to any person for the purpose of putting up a hotel thereon. Afterward, August 10, 1882, in the absence of Mr. Teller, Mr. Joslyn, the Assistant Secretary of the Interior, addressed to Mr. Conger, the superintendent, a further letter. It seems that the first application for the relief of Russell & Co. fell through. Then Messrs. Douglas, Hobart & Hatch appeared and made a second application, and Mr. Joslyn, in the absence of Mr. Teller, addressed to Mr. Conger, the superintendent, this letter:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, August 10, 1882.

SIR: I inclose herewith a copy of an application of Messrs. C. T. Hobart and H. F. Douglas for hotel and other privileges in the Yellowstone National Park; also a copy of a letter from Hon. WILLIAM WINDOM, favorable to the application, and will thank you to report, as early as practicable, your views as to the propriety of granting to said parties the privileges asked.

Very respectfully,

M. L. JOSLYN, Acting Secretary.

SUPERINTENDENT OF YELLOWSTONE NATIONAL PARK,
Mammoth Hot Springs, Wyoming Territory.

This contract or this application gave to these parties seven tracts of land covering the entire geysers, six of them with 640 acres to the tract, and the seventh tract of 600 acres, making together 4,400 acres.

HEADQUARTERS YELLOWSTONE NATIONAL PARK,
Mammoth Hot Springs, Wyo., September 20, 1882.

SIR: In reply to your letter of August 10, directing me to report as early as practicable my views as to the propriety of granting the application of Messrs. C. T. Hobart and H. F. Douglas for hotel and other privileges in the Yellowstone National Park, I beg to say that their application to you lies before me. I have considered the same as well as I am able, and notwithstanding the high indorsement the gentlemen have received from Senator WINDOM, and their undoubted respectability and financial ability, yet it is my judgment that they ask to cover entirely too much ground. The National Park is a great territory, and the day is not distant, in my opinion, when the franchise they ask will be worth a very large sum of money. Besides, I believe the public would be restive were all of these privileges granted to a single party or corporation.

All of which is respectfully submitted. I return herewith the papers in the case.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

P. H. CONGER,
Superintendent Yellowstone National Park.

Hon. SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

This advice, however, and opinion of Mr. Conger was entirely disregarded, as subsequent events show, because the contract providing for a subsequent lease was not executed by reason of the action of the Senate upon the resolution I had the honor to offer; but the contract provided that a lease might be executed covering the entire amount of the 4,400 acres in accordance with the application. I read this to show that the Secretary of the Interior and the superintendent of the park objected to the amount of land that was included in this contract.

What would be the result if as the amendment of the committee stands eighty acres should be given for the erection of a hotel? These hotels are not to be erected in the prairie country; they are to be erected in cañons of the Rocky Mountains, narrow and contracted cañons, not the great Yellowstone Cañon, the magnificent painting of which is in the second story of the Capitol here, but in smaller cañons. With the selection of eighty acres of land these lessees could put their hotels where every other hotel would be necessarily excluded. It would be worse than Niagara is to-day. They would command every eligible locality with which the geysers could be viewed at the time of their eruption, or the Yellowstone Lake or the Yellowstone Falls, and the result would be a monopoly just as odious and as bad as the one attempted to be created by the contract of six hundred and forty acres around each geyser, to which I have alluded.

These geysers, the most wonderful, the most singular of all the productions of nature upon this continent, have their eruptions at regular intervals of half an hour, an hour, or an hour and a half. Old Faithful is the most celebrated of them, and any gentleman who will take the trouble to read the data in regard to it will see that every fifty-five minutes it throws up one hundred and fifty feet high its hot water and fragments of stone. Visitors attend at these eruptions. Now, all these lessees would have to do would be to put the hotel in this narrow cañon, for they would command exclusively almost all of the geysers, of any one of them, or more of them, and the result would be that they would monopolize what is intended to be free in view and in the enjoyment of the people of the whole United States.

I hold that the principle upon which the park should be managed is that there should be competition; that no one company, no one association should have anything like a monopoly of the view, of the ground, of the timber, of the water, of anything that is in that park. Eighty acres is a small farm. With a hotel put in an eligible locality so as to command the entire view, as I have said eighty acres would constitute an absolute monopoly not only in terms but in fact. On the other hand, if twenty acres are given it would be ample for all purposes. There is very little arable land in the cañons. They would have enough for a garden, they would have enough for ice-houses, they would have enough for the principal out-buildings. To argue that any more is necessary is simply ridiculous; it is a travesty upon the conception of a hotel building and hotel grounds.

Mr. HARRISON. I think the amendment of the Senator from Missouri certainly makes a very liberal allowance for the use of a hotel. I suggest to him that he make it half that amount. Ten acres is abundant for the location of any hotel and the necessary out-buildings. The proposition of the committee that eighty acres should be granted in connection with the erection of a hotel is to my judgment grossly excessive. The Senator from Missouri is exactly right in saying that it would enable the parties to monopolize the choice situations at the Falls of the Yellowstone and in the geyser basins. A year ago last summer I visited the park and was in the Upper and Lower Geyser Basin and at the Falls of the Yellowstone. There is no manner of excuse for the proposition to give to any party desiring to erect a hotel as much as eighty acres of land. Twenty acres is too much; ten acres is abundant in any of those places.

As the Senator from Missouri has said, it is not arable land, and if it is desired to grant any land that may be irrigated, for none of it is capable of being used for garden or farm purposes without irrigation, it ought to be separate from the hotel sites, and at some place that would not command choice points of observation for seeing the more interesting features of the park itself.

I hope, therefore, the Senator from Missouri will modify his amendment and make it ten acres. That is amply sufficient for the erection of any hotel.

Mr. VEST. I accept the suggestion with pleasure. I think the Senator from Indiana is right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on striking out "eighty" before "acres," and inserting "ten," as the Senator from Missouri now modifies his amendment.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 21, noes 16; no quorum voting.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will request all Senators to vote on one side or the other, and will try the question again.

Mr. HARRISON. We had better have the yeas and nays. I want to say before the vote is taken, however, that the proposition to give eighty acres of land as provided for in the committee amendment is simply a proposition to surrender to some one person the entire control of the special points of observation in the park. Eighty acres of land would embrace the entire upper geyser basin. That is that part of it that embraces all the notable geysers extending on the one hand from what is called Old Faithful down to and embracing the Grand Geyser and others on the other side of the river. I think it would embrace them all. If the intention is to make a lease that shall absolutely grant to one person a monopoly of all the objects of interest in the park, then the amendment of the committee ought to be sustained; otherwise not. If it is cut down to ten acres it would give an opportunity for the establishment in the upper geyser basin of two or three hotels in suitable localities. The committee amendment ought to be so guarded (I think it is not, though I have not examined it carefully) as that it should not embrace any of those geysers. It ought not to embrace over ten acres.

Mr. ALLISON. The Committee on Appropriations have not had the advantage that the Senator from Indiana has had of visiting these curiosities and knowing exactly their location and situation. The preposterous proposition of eighty acres, as the Senator from Indiana suggests it is, may therefore be excused on the part of the committee to some extent.

But I call the attention of the Senator from Indiana, who states himself that he has not read the committee amendment, to the safeguards we endeavored to throw around it by excluding the idea that the geysers, or the approaches to the geysers, or exclusive privileges in any manner, shape, or form shall be granted under this lease. We provide that free and uninterrupted access to every object of curiosity shall be left to those who desire to visit the geysers. I do not know but that eighty acres may be more than is necessary. The committee considered that as they did the other questions in the bill with the best lights that they had, and believe that eighty acres is not too much. If Senators think it is they can vote for ten acres, or half an acre, or any smaller quantity they choose.

Mr. CONGER. If the bill properly guards against encroaching upon the places that are worthy of visit and observation, whether this was eighty acres or three hundred acres would make no great difference, but it should be so guarded (and I should be unwilling to vote for any such proposition unless it was) that one side near to these curious places should be assigned for the erection of public buildings, of hotels, and that except at one side and overlooking I do not care how good a view it may be to those who may not go out, the invalid class, all these reserved places, to preserve which the park was created, should be perfectly free to the approach and visitation of everybody who may go there. What may lay in back, where there is no view, where there is no particular object of reserving it for the public to go there, it makes no difference whether it is twenty acres or eighty acres or a thousand acres. I do not know about that region, but it is possible that there may be in back away from these curiosities a little pasture ground here and there. It may be that there are garden spots here and there for the short summer, but I do not see any objection to give any reasonable amount of land with these leases if provision is made that the site of the buildings or the ground leased shall not occupy any of the approaches or prevent the passage to the curiosities. That is all I care to guard.

Mr. HARRISON. I think the first question that would suggest itself to any one who was making such a lease would be what amount of land is reasonably necessary for a hotel. I do not suppose that the most magnificent scheme that has been suggested by anybody involves the idea that a hotel with all its out-buildings would cover ten acres of land. Why then give them more?

A suggestion was made by the Senator who last spoke that it may be necessary for pasture. No one who had seen that country would think eighty acres very valuable for pasture. There is over some of it buffalo-grass or bunch-grass; but it is so sparse and scattered that it takes a very wide extent, a good many acres, to pasture a single animal; so that there is no pretense that it can be needed for such a use. If it is claimed that it is needed for agriculture then it is much too scant. If the intention is to enable these hotels to establish farms there and raise their own products for the use of their guests within the park, then even eighty acres is much too scant; for the truth is there is very little of this land, there is none of it in fact, that can be used for agriculture without irrigation. Take the cliffs or bluffs of the cañon about the Falls of the Yellowstone, and it would be impossible to use any of it for any such purpose.

It seems to me, therefore, that in dealing with this domain we should not give more than is necessary for the convenient establishment of the hotels that are to be built there. Ten acres is certainly abundant for the Falls of the Yellowstone itself, and I think eighty acres could be so selected there and inclosed that it would perhaps embrace the entire tract from which a view of the lower falls of the Yellowstone could be had. I do not speak accurately because I did not look at it with any such view. Of course access is allowed there; but if there is to be competition why not allow a division of that eligible site for the location of a hotel between different hotel proprietors instead of allowing one to monopolize the eighty acres and exclude others from less favored points of observation in erecting their building?

Mr. DAWES. The difficulty in drawing this amendment is in undertaking to confine the Secretary of the Interior to statute directions which we make here. The amendment provides that he shall have in the lease an approach to any of these curiosities which shall be convenient and shall be free; but all the rest of the curiosities can be occupied clear up to them by the leased land, and, if it be eighty acres, that, I believe, would be a quarter of a mile. It provides that the lessee may have the exclusive occupation of all that is leased. Therefore the public can approach the curiosities only in a straight line, and in single file, it may be, if the Secretary of the Interior should undertake to follow the letter, and the letter only, of this provision; they can not approach it except in one place, and if that be a convenient approach and be free, and except at that point the public must stand aloof or go upon the exclusively leased premises upon such terms as the lessee shall prescribe.

The committee have undertaken, and I have undertaken with them, to make such terms as that the man who gets a lease should not exclude the public from a free enjoyment of those public curiosities, but it seems to me utterly impossible to do it if the lessor enters into the spirit of the monopoly which is charged to him, because he can make a single approach, if it is easy, convenient to go as an approach, and charge no toll there; he can keep the public just a quarter of a mile off from the most sublime or most attractive of the curiosities. It is like permitting them to lead a horse to drink. It is an exception and restriction upon the exclusiveness of this monopoly equivalent to saying that you may have a bridle-path.

Mr. ALLISON. Do I understand the Senator from Massachusetts to suggest that we have not put in apt words here for the purpose?

Mr. DAWES. I say we put in the most apt words we could command, but when we say also that they may have eighty acres around, it follows as a necessity that everybody must stand off just a quarter of a mile or go by this single approach, and turn around and go back. That is it.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not so understand it.

Mr. DAWES. Read it and see. You can not lease the land around any one of these curiosities clear up to it except that one point; that point must be convenient and there must be a toll-gate there. That is all there is to it. Will the Senator have it read?

Mr. HALE. Will the Chair have the entire amendment read?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment is simply to strike out "eighty" and insert "ten" before "acres."

Mr. HALE. Let the Secretary read the language.

The ACTING SECRETARY. The amendment of the Committee on Appropriations is to insert:

> The Secretary of the Interior may lease small portions of ground in the park, not exceeding eighty acres in extent for each tract, on which may be erected hotels and the necessary out-buildings, and for a period not exceeding ten years; but such lease shall not include any of the geysers or other objects of curiosity or interest in said park, or exclude the public from the free and convenient approach thereto; nor shall any hotel or other buildings be erected within the park until such lease shall be executed by the Secretary of the Interior, and all contracts, agreements, or exclusive privileges heretofore made or given in regard to said park, or any part thereof, are hereby declared to be invalid; nor shall the Secretary of the Interior, in any lease which he may make and execute, grant any exclusive privileges within said park, except upon the ground leased.

It is proposed to amend the amendment by striking out "eighty" and inserting "ten," in line 2010, before "acres."

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I was desirous of having that read because the debate seems to have proceeded upon an entire lack of knowledge of the clauses in the amendment. Senators seem to forget that this amendment takes a very great step in the direction of saving every right of the public. Senators seem to forget or not to know that it is already claimed that a lease has been prepared ready to be executed which gives exclusive privileges throughout this domain of the public that would shut out hereafter all excepting a single person or association or body of persons. Senators seem to forget or not to know that already it is claimed that an agreement has been made that is binding and has given vested rights to one man or association of men in all this park or in the most valuable part of it where there are no reservations whatever of the great curiosities that are there.

This amendment cuts to the butt. The basis of it is that all the valuable things there of right belong to the Government and to all the people, and in as careful language as can be framed the committee has declared that no lease to any extent, eighty, forty, twenty, or ten acres, shall include the geysers or other objects of curiosity or of interest in the park, or exclude the public from a free and convenient approach thereto. It is a direction to the Secretary of the Interior, or whoever has this matter in charge, that nothing to anybody shall either give the control of these objects or of any approach to them.

The Secretary of the Interior in acting upon this must deal with the situation as he finds it. If you preserve all the great objects of curiosity there, and if you are going to adopt the feature of letting men in there to build hotels, you have got to do something to encourage men to come there.

Mr. HARRISON. Will the Senator from Maine allow me to ask him one question?

Mr. HALE. Yes.

Mr. HARRISON. Suppose the same trouble should arise as to this park as once arose in regard to the approaches to the Hot Springs in Arkansas, how would that be met?

Mr. HALE. I have not traveled as broadly as the Senator has; I have not been to this place, but I can see enough about it to know that you can make no comparison of the vast domain there with the Hot Springs, which is a little Government reservation bounded, limited by acres. Here is a tract seventy-five miles one way and forty miles the other. The general principle is laid down in this amendment, which is for the purpose of restricting and controlling the privileges, that everything valuable to the general public shall not be leased. No Secretary of the Interior, under this provision, will ever venture to lease a geyser or any object of natural curiosity, or to let a hotel be put anywhere where it will in any way interfere with the enjoyment of the public. When you adopt that, and when the Secretary of the Interior follows the direction that we lay down for him, then if an association or an individual wants twenty or forty acres (I think forty acres would be enough), I see no objection to his having it. The fact is that nothing that is of value to the general public is going to be leased by the Secretary of the Interior, and the whole question whether the allowance is forty acres or twenty acres is immaterial.

Mr. PLUMB. I move, in line 2015, after the word "or," to insert "to cover the approaches to, or," in such way that no lease shall cover the approaches to any of these objects of curiosity. I submit to the honorable Senator from Indiana that when we come to legislate, if we are to fix terms here, if we can not trust the Department to execute these leases, the ten acres might be so taken out as to be just as injurious as eighty acres. Eighty acres is not exactly in a square form or even an oblong form, twice as long as it is broad, and a great deal will depend upon the discretion which the Secretary of the Interior exercises in carrying out this law. So if he chooses to take ten acres in the route, so to speak, of one of these cañons the hotel might be so planted on those ten acres and the ten acres might be so located as to be just as bad as eighty acres, and so on down, unless you want to cut it up into 25-feet-front lots.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator allow the vote to be taken on the other question first, for this has no connection with the other?

Mr. PLUMB. There is only one thing I was going to say. I do not believe in the first place in hotels out there at all. I think you had just as well let people rough it; but if we are to have them we must consider this. It must be because we believe in the need of hotels out there, or that hotels will be desirable to the traveling and sight-seeing public. If they are to have them at that distance away from civilization there must be something more than the usual amount of room. There must be not only room for outbuildings, but for corrals and so much space as might be taken for camping on the ground, so that those who do not care about the convenience of anybody, being there temporarily themselves, can not commit nuisances and get themselves in an offensive proximity to the hotels and the guests of the hotels.

The Senator from Indiana will perhaps remember that when he was out in that country he had a sense of freedom that was not bounded by the area in which he lives in Indianapolis. It may be that when he got out there he was like a man on the Santa Fé road who slept one night in a corral. He awoke along in the middle of the night feeling that the air was a little close, and he got up and found the gate of the corral closed; he opened it and was all right again. The Senator must remember that while that is a trifle exaggerated, at the same time it is a pretty fair statement of the comparison between the confined localities occupied here in the comparatively thickly settled portions of the country and what a man expects and naturally wants out there. As I said, I am not in favor of having hotels there, but if we are to have them at all we ought to give room enough to answer to that general feeling in favor of plenty of room not only to lie down in but to get up in and to stamp around in.

Mr. HAWLEY. It seems to me the only thing to be done is to give room enough to the geysers and natural curiosities by laying out some ground around them sufficiently large to preserve all the natural features, outside of which there may be room enough for hotels. It does not matter whether it is eighty acres or ten acres if some good surveyor, some good landscape artist will outline the place in which nobody else will build, and they may build up just beyond that; but if you leave it open as in this bill without any provision for any survey, I am afraid of almost anybody in making this lease.

Mr. HALE. Under the spirit of this amendment will not any Secretary of the Interior before he executes a lease do precisely what the Senator from Connecticut suggests? Will he not have surveys made there and see to it that nobody comes nigh enough to these curiosities to in any way interfere with the public enjoyment? That is the object of the amendment. We can not define in this amendment distance. We can not measure spaces. We can not say how near to a geyser there shall be a hotel, because we do not know. That is a matter of administration.

Mr. HAWLEY. But why not in this bill put in three, four, or five lines that should direct the Secretary of the Interior as to the very first step to be taken? The very first step to be taken is to lay out room for the things that ought to be preserved, and there will be no trouble then to have people come into the surrounding spaces.

Mr. ALLISON. I had intended to move an amendment——

Mr. HALE. Put in the words "after examination and survey."

Mr. ALLISON. I would propose to the Senator from Connecticut "nor within one-half mile thereof" to be added after the word "park;" but I know it is impossible for us to suggest whether it should be half a mile or a less or a greater distance. It seems to me that something might be left with safety to the officers who are to administer this provision.

Mr. HAWLEY. I do not say anything about half a mile or a quarter of a mile or anything of that sort. There might be places where it might be proper enough that they should go nearer than that. But I would instruct the Secretary of the Interior to first lay out suitable grounds to be forever dedicated to the public use, which no private party should be allowed to lease.

Mr. HALE. Why not, after the word "may," in the first line, insert the words "after full examination and survey?"

Mr. HAWLEY. Set apart solely for public use, appropriate and sufficient ground, and then he may lease. That is all I wish.

Mr. LOGAN. Take eighty acres and set apart seventy-five miles. That is about what it will be.

Mr. HAWLEY. Set apart eighty acres about the geysers somewhere.

Mr. ALLISON. I think under this restriction, this provision, in reference to the closeness of these curiosities, no Secretary of the Interior would execute a lease without having full examination and care of the geysers and all objects of curiosity in the park. If Senators can frame apt words that will increase the securities for this purpose, I know the committee will be glad to do it. Our object was in framing this provision to make it certain that the geysers and all the objects of curiosity should be absolutely free and open to the public.

Mr. VEST. This debate since it began simply demonstrates the necessity for the creation of the committee proposed in the resolution which I brought up, in order to examine this very class of questions, and to formulate a bill which will meet all the different difficulties and phases in the case that have come up in the course of this discussion. The Senator from Iowa, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, says that of course the Secretary of the Interior would see that this thing was done. All I have to say is that there is an association now in that park to cut out timber who are proceeding to erect a hotel, making preparations for it; yet no steps have been taken to stop them, nothing has been done. It simply remains with Congress, and now with the Senate, to do all that can be done in the few brief hours of this session that remain to us.

Under these clauses reported from the committee what is there now to prevent a lease being given of ten or twenty acres of ground that run right up to one of the geysers, or, as a Senator suggests to me, not in debate, four leases might be granted, one of the geysers around "Old Faithful," for instance, the principal one and the great attraction in the park, and make a corner there so that every visitor would have to go down a lane, with a fence probably on each side, in order to get a glimpse of that great natural curiosity.

I hope, in the first place, the Senate will determine the extent of the lease. I have not been in the park, but I heard from General Sheridan, General Sackett, and other gentlemen who have been there repeatedly, from the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD], who was there last fall, from the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HARRISON], who has been there, exactly the state of facts which the Senator from Indiana has narrated here this evening. Ten acres is ample for all the purposes that can be necessary for any hotel, and if we give more it simply complicates and increases the difficulties which have been suggested.

Mr. MAXEY. I suggest to the Senator why not say, "in a square, as near as may be, ten acres?"

Mr. VEST. That would depend, as a matter of course, upon the locality. I take it for granted, not having seen the ground, that it varies around each of the geysers. To say a square as to one geyser might be very inconvenient and precipitate the very difficulty we want to avoid. All that should be in the discretion of the engineer officer, as the Senator from Connecticut suggested; but the first thing to be determined is the quantity, and I say that ten acres among those cañons is equivalent to eighty or one hundred acres of prairie or open country.

Mr. ALLISON. I submit to the Senator from Missouri that ten acres does not touch the question any more than eighty acres. He says that this discussion leads to the idea that a committee ought to be appointed. The Secretary of the Interior has now absolute authority to lease small parcels of ground in the park. If I were to interpret the law which I have before me, I think it clearly indicates that he shall do it in close proximity to these geysers. The language is that—

> The Secretary may, in his discretion, grant leases for building purposes, for terms not exceeding ten years, of small parcels of ground, at such places in said park as shall require the erection of buildings for the accommodation of visitors.

Suppose he shall conclude in the exercise of this discretion that visitors will be best accommodated by leasing in close proximity to the great geyser, can he not do so?

Mr. HARRISON. If the Senator from Iowa will allow me, no doubt the amendment is in the direction of improvement in view of the present law, but we think the amendment of the Senator from Missouri makes it still better. I am not proposing to let the law stand as it is.

Mr. ALLISON. I am now responding to the suggestion made by the Senator from Missouri that we ought to allow the whole thing to go over until next year, until the committee he proposes to inaugurate shall have an opportunity to visit the geysers, which the Senator from Indiana has already seen.

Mr. VEST. I beg the Senator's pardon; I did not make any such suggestion. I simply said that the Senate should take up my resolution and dispose of it, instead of this being forced here now at the heels of the session; but as objections have been interposed every time I called up the resolution, I am now forced to take this or nothing. I am so well satisfied that if nothing is done that park will be utterly ruined before December, that I am prepared to take even this small grain of comfort.

Mr. LOGAN. I voted for this amendment in the committee. I can not agree with Senators that the smaller the quantity of land that is leased the better it is. Ten acres is sufficient for a hotel in Washington city; so it is in Baltimore; so it is in Richmond, or in any of the cities; so it is out in the country here; but when you are hundreds of miles away from civilization and settlement and you come to talk about the number of acres of land required for the convenience of a hotel, I do not think we ought to consider it in the same light that we would if we were establishing a hotel in a part of the country that has been already settled up. A hotel in the park spoken of here would require more ground for many purposes. I suppose if a hotel was established there, four or five hundred miles away from where the proprietors could get conveniences, they would want a pasture; they would want some place to keep cattle; they would probably want to eat some beef and pork and mutton occasionally.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator will allow me to say that eighty acres would pasture very little stock there.

Mr. LOGAN. A person might, however, want to fence in a little piece of ground for cattle or sheep or mules or horses or whatever he wanted to keep there. As a matter of fact, they could turn them out and let them be devoured by wolves; but the thing, as I understand it, is to give some ground for certain conveniences that go along with a hotel away off in a country where there is no settlement or civilization, for the very reason that I have stated. If I was running a hotel there I would certainly want some ground that I could fence up to keep cattle in and mules. As a matter of course, a hotel there would naturally have carriages, hacks, or something of the kind for the convenience of visitors, and it must have some place to keep them. They would naturally want some place to turn out their stock occasionally. A little 10-acre plot of ground I do not think would be sufficient for that purpose.

All this talk about interfering with the geysers and the curiosities is only saying that you have a Secretary of the Interior that you are afraid will not act honestly with the Government of the United States in reference to the leasing of this property. If the lease is granted at all, you have got to have confidence in somebody. Restrict it as much as you please, somebody has got to make that lease, some one has got to make the survey, some person has to be relied upon for the purpose of performing the functions under this provision. You have got to have some one to do it.

The Senator from Missouri speaks of an engineer. That means to put it in the hands of the Army and to take it away from the Secretary of the Interior. I do not wish to say anything in reference to that, but I am opposed to taking buildings there and putting them in the control of the Army. I am in favor of keeping them under the civil authorities, where they belong. I believe the Secretary of the Interior will carry out this law exactly as you make it. I would like to go to that park myself on a visit; so would everybody else. I have not been there, but I do not propose, because I have not been there and do not know anything about it, to object to a provision of law that seems to be fair and proper and as much restricted as there is any necessity for in my judgment.

I would vote for giving eighty acres, but I would not vote for eighty acres of ground being leased there for the purpose of giving an advantage to one person over another, but I would vote it for the purpose of giving all the convenience that would be necessary to make a first-class hotel, where they could keep their stock and everything else to make it satisfactory to the visitors who may go there. That is my reason for supporting the amendment of the committee. I do not believe the Secretary of the Interior would allow them to infringe upon any rights of citizens going there, in such a way as to prevent private people from viewing the geysers.

As far as any one going there wanting to stop at a hotel right under one of these large geysers is concerned, I do not think any one would want to do it. I would not want to have a hotel there. Nobody can tell exactly when one of the geysers is going to spout a good deal higher than it does now. You can not tell anything about it. You may have an eruption there. I would not want to sleep under a geyser, and I do not think anybody else would, or very close to one either.

I have no fear in reference to this matter. The Secretary of the Interior was before the committee. He was perfectly satisfied with any restriction that should be thought necessary to make all the surveys that we may require him to make for the purpose of ascertaining that which is necessary in order to carry out the law, and all that may be convenient to the people who may visit the curiosities there. No one would wish to destroy them or interfere with them. No one wants to restrict citizens who go there from their examination, whatever they may be; but for any person to tell me that where we have a park seventy-five miles one way and forty miles the other we must restrict the leases down to ten acres, for fear that they will take too much land in connection with some hotel, or something for the accommodation of the people, does not seem exactly the thing to do. It looks like too small a business to go into; as though we were afraid that somebody would put a fence a little too far out and interfere with the rest of the seventy-five miles there, and that there would not be room for the elk and deer, and things of that kind, to run in. I want people to go there, and I want guards there to protect the elk; and instead of making it a hunting-ground, as it has been in the last few years, for the pleasure of a few Englishmen who come over here, and for the pleasure of a few other people who go there and slaughter the game without any restriction or restraint, I am in favor of giving the Secretary of the Interior the right not only to lease for hotels, so that people may go there and be comfortable, instead of going there in a wagon and sleeping out in tents and taking cold, when some of them will go there for sanitary purposes. I am in favor of giving such conveniences as will induce people to go there, and not only see the sights, but receive the benefits that are produced there from the waters; for I am told there are more curative properties in some of the hot waters there than have been discovered elsewhere in the world.

I should like to have conveniences there so that the people may go there and view the curiosities and receive the benefits that may be produced in cases of disease.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator from Illinois talks about the great extent of this park as if every acre of it was equally suitable for these places.

Mr. LOGAN. I know that every place is not suitable for a hotel.

Mr. HARRISON. A very few hundred acres would absorb all the desirable places there.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, I think, as I thought on the committee, that forty acres is about as small an amount as a man up in that country would care to have for the purpose of establishing a hotel. When the Senator from Missouri suggested twenty acres, I thought he was stingy; but when he came down to ten acres in a tract like that, forty miles one way and seventy-five miles another, with geysers and all sorts of curiosities all over it, it seemed to me that that was getting down uncommonly small. I doubt whether ten acres would have held the escort which I saw coming back from there last summer with General Sheridan and the men who were with him. They had three hundred pack-mules or ponies, and I do not know how many tents and other things. I doubt whether five acres would have held the escort that went with the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. HARRISON. I think a very much smaller quantity of land would have held our escort. I think we had sixteen pack animals.

Mr. BECK. How many wagons?

Mr. HARRISON. None at all. We could not have taken any wagons where we went. I want to say to the Senate that the men who handle those pack-trains do not want any inclosures; they do not want any extensive tracts of land. They simply drive their animals back where there is grass and take them up in the morning and go on.

Mr. BECK. Not many men can go with sixteen pack animals to view the curiosities there. What I want is to give people a chance to have a place to stay, a room to sleep in, and not have each man fitted out like the Senator from Indiana was with sixteen pack animals, which could hardly be packed around in a 10-acre lot. I was amazed to hear that nobody can go there unless with a Government escort or ten or fifteen pack animals. As I said, I met three hundred coming back, and those animals could hardly stay in a 10-acre lot.

Mr. VEST. Did General Sheridan go there to kill game?

Mr. BECK. No; but General Sheridan, with his escort, could not have staid over night on a 10-acre inclosure.

Mr. VEST. I do not suppose he proposed to stay. He was there as the commander of the district. I do not know that I have any reason for defending General Sheridan.

Mr. BECK. I do not attack him.

Mr. VEST. I am authorized by him to state that the assertion which was made as to his killing game is not true.

Mr. BECK. You saw it published?

Mr. VEST. It was published by Messrs Hatch & Co., and General Sheridan's attention was called to it, and he said in Washington city some days ago that it was absolutely false.

Mr. BECK. I do not know what the company shot that went with General Sheridan, but I saw them myself in the Big Horn Mountains. I saw gentlemen there, most of them, it was said, English gentlemen, who it is charged were shooting elk.

Mr. VEST. That is exactly what I want to stop.

Mr. BECK. So do I.

Mr. VEST. It is what I am trying to stop.

Mr. BECK. We have given $40,000 to do it, and we have given all the Senator wants, and he can not go any further than I will go to stop all that sort of thing; but I believe that there should be a reasonable chance given for people who can not take their pack animals and go as the Senator from Indiana went or as General Sheridan can go; and the plain people of the country who go on railroads and take their teams should have a chance to stay there. I do not know who is going to put up a hotel for a season of only three or four months, and only for ten years, as the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. DAVIS] suggests. It seems to me that we are haggling over a very small matter. Ten acres of land is a big amount of land in New York city, so it is in Washington, so it is in Baltimore, and so it is where I live, but not out in that country where I was last summer. A piece of ten acres looked as if a man could go over it in a hop, skip, and a jump; it seemed wonderfully small.

I think if you are going to give anybody a chance to put up a hotel, you ought to allow at least twenty acres. I do not care what you do so that you dispose of the subject, but I do tell the Senator from Missouri that twenty acres is a small enough quantity. I am willing to vote for a pretty small quantity, but ten acres is absolutely stingy. That is a parliamentary word. It is absolutely stingy to come down to that.

Mr. VEST. If the Senator will permit me, he talks as if we were niggardly about the ground. That is not it at all.

Mr. BECK. That is the way it looks to me.

Mr. VEST. If I had control to-day of 5,000 acres of that park, the rest of it could be disposed of as the Senator from Kentucky or any other gentleman might choose to dispose of it, at his own sweet will and pleasure. Nobody goes to that park to see any of it except the geysers and the falls and the Yellowstone Lake. Take those out and the rest of it is simply useless. The rest of it is mere "leather and prunella." The Senator from Illinois speaks about the number of acres in the park.

Mr. BROWN. If I understand the Senator from Missouri correctly, the whole park never was surveyed, only a few places where these natural curiosities exist.

Mr. VEST. That is all.

Mr. BROWN. Why not put your amendment in such a shape as to provide that within half a mile of one of those curiosities the Secretary of the Interior shall not lease any tract more than ten acres, and outside of that eighty acres?

Mr. VEST. That is exactly what I have done. I have such an amendment prepared.

Mr. BROWN. Then in the event that any one wants to have stock or anything of that sort he would have a piece of land large enough outside.

Mr. VEST. That is the very idea exactly.

Mr. BROWN. It would prevent a monopoly in reference to the objects of interest.

Mr. VEST. If the Senator will permit me, here is the amendment which I propose to insert in another place:

Or include any ground within one-quarter of a mile of any of the geysers or Yellowstone Falls, nor shall there be leased more than ten acres to any one person or corporation.

I do not care if they take 10,000 acres, provided they do not absorb or monopolize the localities that give special observation. I ask for a vote upon the proposition to make it ten acres.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on striking out "eighty" and inserting "ten" before the word "acres," in line 2010.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 21, noes 12—no quorum voting.

Mr. VEST. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. JONAS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR]. I will ask his colleague if he knows how the Senator would vote if present?

Mr. DAWES. I do not know how he would vote on this question. I should think he would vote as I did.

Mr. JONAS. I reserve my vote. I would vote "yea."

Mr. MCMILLAN (when his name was called). I am paired on this question with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD], unless it be necessary that I should vote to constitute a quorum. If he were here, I should vote "nay."

Mr. SAWYER (when his name was called. I am paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HAMPTON]. I would vote "nay," and he would vote "yea."

Mr. SLATER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. KELLOGG]. If he were here, I should vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. ALLISON (after having voted in the negative). I inadvertently voted. I paired this afternoon with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] on this matter, not knowing there was to be any amendment. I therefore withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 25, nays 20; as follows:

YEAS—25.

Barrow,	Groome,	Jones of Florida,	Vance,
Brown,	Harris,	Lamar,	Van Wyck,
Call,	Harrison,	Lapham,	Vest,
Coke,	Hawley,	Miller of N. Y.,	Walker.
Dawes,	Hill,	Morgan,
Garland,	Ingalls,	Pendleton,
George,	Jackson,	Pugh,

NAYS—20.

Aldrich,	Conger,	McDill,	Rollins,
Anthony,	Davis of Ill.,	McPherson,	Sewell,
Beck,	Davis of W. Va.,	Mahone,	Sherman,
Blair,	Frye,	Morrill,	Voorhees,
Cameron of Wis.,	Logan,	Ransom,	Windom.

ABSENT—31.

Allison,	Farley,	Jonas,	Plumb,
Bayard,	Ferry,	Jones of Nevada,	Saulsbury,
Butler,	Gorman,	Kellogg,	Saunders,
Camden,	Grover,	McMillan,	Sawyer,
Cameron of Pa.,	Hale,	Maxey,	Slater,
Cockrell,	Hampton,	Miller of Cal.,	Tabor,
Edmunds,	Hoar,	Mitchell,	Williams.
Fair,	Johnston,	Platt,

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VEST. After the word "thereto," in line 2016, I move to insert:

Or include any ground within one-quarter of a mile of any of the geysers or of the Yellowstone Falls, nor shall there be leased more than ten acres to any one person or corporation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. INGALLS. The best thing that the Government could do with the Yellowstone National Park is to survey it and sell it as other public lands are sold. I have no doubt there are great curiosities, spouting geysers, crimson cliffs, and inaccessible mountain summits within that domain; but these features are not peculiar to that portion of the country. I know of no greater reason why the Government should exercise exclusive dominion over that hundred miles square than why it should assume to exercise control over Pike's Park or the Garden of the Gods or the Falls of Niagara or the Mississippi River, or any other of the great natural features of this continent.

It is getting to be a good deal of an incubus, and it is very rapidly assuming troublesome and elephantine proportions. We are already engaged in a very good-sized wrangle and quarrel with certain persons assuming the proprietorship by way of unauthorized leases, as alleged by the Secretary of the Interior. Ten thousand dollars has already been spent in laying out roads that nobody uses. Last year we appointed a superintendent at an expense of $2,000, and this year the appropriations are $40,000. There is to be a corps of assistants to stay there summer and winter to look after the spouting geysers, to see that patent medicines are not advertised on the cliffs; that timber is not cut down, and that the noble game is not excluded from those preserves. If this thing continues and the engineers of the Government are to lay out a system of roads and bridges, it will not be five years before it will take a million dollars a year to run that park.

I do not understand myself what the necessity is for the Government entering into the show business in the Yellowstone National Park. I should be very glad myself to see an amendment to this bill to authorize that portion of the public domain to be surveyed and sold, leaving it to private enterprise, which is the surest guarantee for proper protection for such objects of care as the great natural curiosities in that region. I believe they would be safer that way, and that the interest of the public would be better preserved that way and we should have easier and better and surer access and less encroaching demands upon the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. VEST. I do not think that this is exactly the time to discuss the question that the Senator from Kansas has brought to the attention of the Senate. I was not a member of the Senate when the dedicatory act was passed. I believe, if I am not mistaken, that the Senator from Kansas was. That was the time that he ought to have made the speech that he has delivered here to-night.

I am very frank to say, however, that I thoroughly indorse the purpose for which the act of 1872 was enacted. I believe that this park is necessary to the American people. The Senator speaks of cutting it up, or surveying it, or selling it. This mountain wilderness is absolutely without value unless it be for mineral purposes, and the minerals have not yet been discovered. If the Senator from Kansas thinks that the noble game that inhabit that region, which are fast being exterminated, should utterly disappear from this continent, then he should destroy this park. The last hope of the preservation of the bison, the buffalo, the moose, and the elk upon the continent of North America exists in the preservation of that park, and to such an extent that it will be a great preserve.

The Senator speaks as if this was some proposition sui generis, unknown before. France has such a park, Germany has such a park, England has her royal parks, and why should not America have her republican park, free to the people of the States, with these great curiosities that exist nowhere else?

Mr. President, the great curse of this age and of the American people is its materialistic tendencies. Money, money, l'argent, l'argent, is the cry everywhere, until our people are held up already to the world as noted for nothing except the acquisition of money at the expense of all esthetic taste and of all love of nature and its great mysteries and wonders.

I am not ashamed to say that I shall vote to perpetuate this park to the American people. I am not ashamed to say that I think its existence answers a great purpose in our national life. There should be to a nation that will have a hundred million or a hundred and fifty million people a park like this as a great breathing-place for the national lungs, as a place to which every American citizen can resort instead of spending his money amid the Alps of Europe or wandering on the Eastern continent in search of the wonders of nature. This is the great wonder-land of the world; and if Senators will take the pains to devote but an hour to reading as I have done lately the account in plain, unvarnished phrase from men who have no artistic taste but who love nature, the description of the great wonders that exist here, I shall not be afraid that speeches like those of the Senator from Kansas will find suffrages in the Senate.

But the question now before us is whether we shall keep this park free from vandalism? If the Senator hereafter proposes to survey it and cut it up and sell it, I shall be perfectly willing to meet him and discuss that question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is not aware whether the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] offered an amendment. He is not in the Chamber.

Mr. INGALLS. No, I did not.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after line 2024, to insert:

The Secretary of War, upon the request of the Secretary of the Interior, is hereby authorized and directed to make the necessary details of troops to prevent trespassers or intruders from entering the park for the purpose of destroying the game or objects of curiosity therein, or for any other purpose prohibited by law, and remove such persons from the park if found therein.

Mr. VEST. I offer a formal amendment. In line 2030, after the word "and," I move to insert the word "to;" so as to read "any other purpose prohibited by law, and to remove such persons from the park if found therein."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. DAWES. With the consent of the Senate and of the Senator from Iowa, I ask the Senate to go back to page 73, which was passed over temporarily. I understand that the Senator from Vermont is not satisfied as to the form of the proceeding, and I ask to have printed in the RECORD a letter from the Secretary of the Interior upon the subject.

The letter is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, February 2, 1883.

SIR: Referring to my letter to you of the 31st ultimo, on the subject of amendment intended to be proposed by you to the sundry civil bill (H. R. —) providing an appropriation of $300,000 to be paid into the treasury of the Cherokee Nation, on the lands west of the Arkansas River, ceded by it to the United States, I have the honor to recommend the following change in said amendment, namely: strike out all after the word "Osages," in line 11, and insert instead thereof the following: "before the payment of said sum of money. And the Secretary of the Interior, shall, as soon as practicable thereafter, prepare and cause to be issued, patents to the said Pawnees, Poncas, Nez Percés, Otoes, and Missourias, and Osages, in their tribal capacity, inserting in said patents the same terms and conditions that are inserted in the patents to the Choctaw Nation, dated March 23, 1862."

Very respectfully,

H. M. TELLER, Secretary.

Hon. HENRY L. DAWES,
Chairman Committee on Indian Affairs, United States Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations, inserting the paragraph from line 1780 to line 1798.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 2037, after "for," to strike out "continuation" and insert "completion;" so as to make the clause read:

For completion of the work of construction of the new Pension building in Judiciary Square, $150,000; for heating apparatus for the building, $40,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 2040, to insert:

To enable the Commissioner of Patents to cause the patent drawings for the year 1870 to be photolithographed, $6,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary for that purpose.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 2044, to insert:

For the preparation of the Official Register of 1883, $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 2101, to increase the appropriation "for the propagation of food-fishes," &c., from $115,000 to $125,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "National Museum," in line 2170, to increase from $85,000 to $90,000 the appropriation "for the preservation of collections of the National Museum."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 2190, to insert:

For repairs and alterations of the old portion of the court-house building in Washington, District of Columbia, $35,000.

Mr. ROLLINS. I would inquire of the committee having charge of this bill the reason why this appropriation is reduced to $35,000. The estimate, I think, was some $60,000. It seems to me it would be economy to have the work done during the next fiscal year, rather than to make two jobs of it.

Mr. ALLISON. There seems to be a plan about the completion of this old court-house that the committee thought was a little too liberal, and we desired to limit the expenditure to a smaller sum. I think the committee placed the sum rather too low. I should be willing to allow the Architect of the Capitol $40,000 for this purpose.

Mr. ROLLINS. Is the committee disposed in this way to change the plan of the Architect?

Mr. ALLISON. No, sir; we do not propose to change the plan of the Architect; but we propose somewhat to direct him what to do, and we know that if we appropriate $35,000 or $40,000, instead of $60,000, he will not do all that he proposes. He says:

As requested by you, I have prepared a plan for the proposed alteration of the old portion of the court-house in this city.

By it it is proposed to render fire-proof all record-rooms in the principal and basement stories, by taking out wooden construction, substituting in its place construction of iron and bricks; to put a new roof, supported by iron rafters, and to remodel the interior of the building, so as to provide large rooms at the south end of each wing, one for the land records of the District of Columbia, the other for the orphans' court; to take down the exterior steps to the wings of the south front, and to construct a terrace, so that these wings may be approached from the central portico.

The estimated cost of these alterations and improvements is $60,000.

We think the Architect of the Capitol can put the building in very good repair for $35,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment was, under the head of "public printing and binding," in line 2205, to increase the total appropriation "for the public printing, for the public binding, and for paper for the public printing," &c., from $2,377,650 to $2,777,650.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 2211, to increase the item "for printing and binding for Congress, including the proceedings and debates," from $1,279,650 to $1,679,650.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after "Land Office," in line 2222, to insert:

And the Commissioner of Patents shall reimburse to the Public Printer, out of the receipts of his office, the cost of all printing and binding, and material for the same, done and furnished for the Patent Office, and the Public Printer shall cover such payments into the Treasury.

Mr. ANTHONY. I move to amend by inserting after the word "Treasury," in line 2227, "to the credit of the appropriation for public printing and binding."

Mr. ALLISON. I was about to offer that amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Rhode Island to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to know what the amendment just adopted means. The Commissioner of Patents is ordered to reimburse the Public Printer from the receipts of his office the cost of all printing and binding done for that office, and the Public Printer is to cover such payments into the Treasury; and the amendment just made is to the credit of the appropriation for printing and binding. Does that increase that appropriation?

Mr. ANTHONY. It increases it by the amount expended for the Patent Office.

Mr. HOAR. That is, he has what he pays for the Patent Office printing and he has all this appropriation besides.

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes, sir.

Mr. ALLISON. Do I understand the Senator from Rhode Island to say that his amendment increases the aggregate of this appropriation?

Mr. ANTHONY. Certainly it will increase the appropriation by the amount expended for the Patent Office. The Patent Office has work done at the Printing Office and pays the Public Printer for it. The Public Printer puts that into the Treasury to the credit of the appropriation for printing, which has been increased by this work. It makes his appropriation good.

Mr. HOAR. In other words, if every other Department of the Government did that, you would have twice as much appropriated for the public printing as there is now.

Mr. ALLISON. For instance, we have appropriated for the Interior Department $380,000. That is intended to include the printing for the Patent Office.

Mr. ANTHONY. Then why is the Public Printer paid for it, and why has he to cover it into the Treasury? The printing of the Patent Office is uncertain. The Patent Office is supported by the patentees, and much of the printing is reimbursed to the Patent Office in the sale of Official Gazettes and of other printing that is sold.

Mr. ALLISON. Let it go on till I can examine it. I will look at it before the bill is through.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after "expended," in line 2242, to insert:

And the Public Printer is directed, in the expenditure of the money herein appropriated, to employ the highest character of skilled workmen at the prices now fixed by law, and in case that he can not obtain a sufficient supply on these terms he is authorized to expend such portion of the appropriation as shall be necessary for the temporary execution of such work outside of the Government Office: Provided, That there may be bound for each Senator, Representative, or Delegate in Congress, one copy of each book or document issued or ordered by authority of Congress during the term of service of such Senator, Representative, or Delegate; but this provision shall not be construed as allowing any binding as aforesaid to be done of any books or documents issued by authority of any former Congress of which said Senator, Representative, or Delegate was not a member.

Mr. VOORHEES. I raise the point of order on the amendment from the word "law," in line 2245, to the word "office," in line 2248. The point of order is that that changes an existing law and is general legislation. The present law, as contained in section 3786 of the Revised Statutes, provides as follows:

SEC. 3786. All printing, binding, and blank-books for the Senate or House of Representatives and the Executive and Judicial Departments shall be done at the Government Printing Office, except in cases otherwise provided by law.

The law I have read provides that all Government printing shall be done at the Government Printing Office. It also provides that it may be otherwise provided for by law. That would require new legislation, and that is what this proposes. I call the attention of the Chair again to the phraseology of this provision:

And the Public Printer is directed, in the expenditure of the money herein appropriated, to employ the highest character of skilled workmen at the prices now fixed by law—

That is correct, and that is in accordance with the section of the Revised Statutes which I have just cited. Then follows this provision:

and in case that he can not obtain a sufficient supply on these terms, he is authorized to expend such portion of the appropriation as shall be necessary for the temporary execution of such work outside of the Government Office.

That is to say, he is authorized by the proposed law to let the work out at contract.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does it change the present law?

Mr. VOORHEES. Undoubtedly it does.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us see about that.

Mr. VOORHEES. Pardon me a moment. The present law is that all Government printing shall be done at the Government Printing Office:

All printing, binding, and blank-books for the Senate or House of Representatives and the Executive and Judicial Departments shall be done at the Government Printing Office—

Suppose it stopped there; but it does not; it goes on—except in cases otherwise provided by law.

That is what it is now proposed to do—otherwise provide by law.

Mr. ALLISON. This is a mere direction as to the appropriation in this bill. That is all there is about it.

Mr. VOORHEES. On the contrary it confers a power on the Public Printer which he does not possess at this time to let this work out at contract outside of the Government Office, directly in the teeth of the language of the statute.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to say a word about this point of order. I entirely agree that there should be no legislation on an appropriation bill of any kind; but I have never carried that idea so far as to hold that Congress in an appropriation bill could not direct how the money that it appropriated should be expended either without law before or against any law before. If it merely confines the direction to the expenditure of the money that it appropriates, it has a right to do it consistently with our rules, because you can not have an appropriation bill without appropriating money, and you can not have an appropriation bill appropriating money without stating the objects for which the money shall be expended.

Therefore it has always seemed clear to me, and that has been the decision of the Senate for many years before when we have had these questions stoutly contested, that where the direction (which is legislation, of course, just as the appropriation is) is confined to the appropriation, to the expenditure of the money appropriated, which can not be paid out of the Treasury without the consent of Congress, Congress may say that it shall be paid for moonbeams, if it pleases, although the Constitution of the United States itself might say that no money should be paid for buying moonbeams. Congress by an appropriation may say that no part of this money shall be paid beyond the extent of $5,000 for the salary of the Chief-Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States. That would be a violation of existing law, but it is the condition upon which the appropriation goes, and therefore it merely regulates the expenditure of the money. That has always been the rule; and this appears to do that thing. Run through this bill and all the others we have had, and in a thousand instances where money is appropriated there is a specific direction as to how it shall be expended. That is what this attempts to do. Whether it is right or wrong in itself on its merits is another question.

Mr. ANTHONY. The rule forbids general legislation upon appropriation bills; but this is not general legislation; it is legislation that is confined to the expenditure of the money herein appropriated. It does not affect any other appropriation; it does not repeal any general law. After the money herein appropriated has been expended, then the old law remains in force; it is not repealed.

Mr. GARLAND. I refer to this now more for the purpose of another point that is coming up after a while in this bill than for this particular point. The question of order raised by the Senator from Indiana, it seems to me, is sustained by the letter of the rule in the book and by various rulings of the present incumbent of the chair. The best way to test this is in this way: Suppose now this provision does not exist, suppose this provision is out, what is the law? The law is in section 3786, read by the Senator from Indiana. That is a general law. Does the Chair now comprehend the proposition I am stating? Have I stated it sufficiently plainly?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes, sir.

Mr. GARLAND. Here is the general law that the work shall be done in the Government Printing Office. That is the general law affecting the printing done for all the Departments of this Government. That is displaced, then, by these lines that the Senator from Indiana objects to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands the Senator. In the opinion of the Chair the point is well taken that the Senate can not change the law in an appropriation of money.

Mr. ALLISON. The Chair then rules that we can appropriate money, but can not direct how it shall be spent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. You can not direct that it shall be spent contrary to the law of the land, which is in this case that the work must be done in the Government Printing Office. The question is on that part of the amendment not stricken out by the ruling.

Mr. ALLISON. What words does the Chair strike out, may I ask?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. They will be read.

The ACTING SECRETARY. In line 2245, after the word "law," down to and including the word "office," in line 2248, as follows:

> And in case that he can not obtain a sufficient supply on these terms, he is authorized to expend such portion of the appropriation as shall be necessary for the temporary execution of such work outside of the Government Office.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the residue of the amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. Then I move to strike out the remainder of that amendment down to line 2245, down to the part the Chair has struck out, as follows:

> And the Public Printer is directed, in the expenditure of the money herein appropriated, to employ the highest character of skilled workmen, at the prices now fixed by law.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to doing that? The Chair hears none; and that part is stricken out.

Mr. ANTHONY. Is anything left of the amendment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment stands beginning with the word "provided," in line 2249.

Mr. ANTHONY. All before that is left out?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes, sir.

Mr. ANTHONY. It might as well be; it was emasculated by the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the remainder of the amendment, from line 2249 to 2257.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ANTHONY. Is not that legislation?

Mr. PLUMB. I ask unanimous consent, in line 2255, to strike out the words "by authority of" and insert the word "during." That will make the rule this: that any Senator, Representative, or Delegate can have bound under this provision any document which shall be issued during his term. Under the restriction of the amendment as it now exists he can only have bound documents issued by the Congress of which he is a member, and a good many of these documents he will not get the benefit of, because he will go out before they are issued; and yet the documents that are put on his table during his term he can not have bound.

Mr. ANTHONY. I inquire if that is not as much legislation as the former part of the amendment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No point was made about it.

Mr. ANTHONY. Well, I make the point.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is clearly general legislation.

Mr. PLUMB. Is not the objection too late?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No, sir; it is never too late, as was held here the other day.

Mr. PLUMB. I hope the rule will be applied.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is much more subject to the point of order than the other part of the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks it is subject to the point of order. All branches of this amendment are subject to the point of order. One was that there shall be printing outside the Printing Office, when the law says there shall not be any. The whole clause is out of order. The reading of the bill will proceed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after line 2257, to insert:

> Government Printing Office: For water-closets, $7,500.

Mr. PLUMB. Is not that subject to the same point of order? If it is I make it.

Mr. HAWLEY. I hope not; that is a matter of humanity and decency. I hope there will be no point of order.

Mr. PLUMB. It is not authorized by existing law.

Mr. COCKRELL. I raise the same point of order.

Mr. ALLISON. I trust the members of the committee will not make a point of order on a matter that is so manifestly necessary as this.

Mr. CONGER. Does anybody dispute that the subject-matter of this amendment is authorized by law, by every law of decency and propriety?

Mr. ALLISON. I suppose it is; I do not know.

Mr. CONGER. Who makes the point of order on it?

Mr. ALLISON. There are so many things not authorized by law that this may come within that class.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair can not sustain the point of order.

Mr. HAWLEY. I take it for granted that the Printing Office exists under law, and that the necessary repairs and conduct of it are lawful.

Mr. EDMUNDS. There is nothing at all in the point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This is for repairs of the Printing Office, and the Chair will presume that it is authorized by law unless the contrary is shown. The point of order is overruled. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after line 2259, to insert:

> For reflooring, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for "United States courts," after "Revised Statutes," in line 2357, to insert:

> And hereafter the salary of the chief clerk of the Court of Claims shall be $3,500 annually.

Mr. COCKRELL. I make the point of order on that. That is legislation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. GARLAND. If that point of order is sustained I want to move to strike out all after the word "provided," in line 2335, down to line 2380.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is all legislation, and vicious legislation in the way it stands.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arkansas moves to strike out the part indicated by him.

Mr. GARLAND. It seems to me it is legislation the same as the matter just decided.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The point of order does not lie to that because it is in the text of the bill as it came from the House.

Mr. GARLAND. I move to strike it out.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. That is in order, of course; but the clause is not liable to a point of order.

Mr. HOAR. Is the motion in order now until the bill is gone through?

Mr. ALLISON. The amendment of the Senator from Arkansas will be in order very soon. The committee amendments will soon be disposed of.

Mr. GARLAND. Very well.

Mr. ALLISON. What has become of the words in italics?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair sustained the point of order that the amendment was not in order.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 2367, before "thousand," to strike out "five" and insert "six;" so as to read:

Provided, That the clerk of the Supreme Court of the United States shall not hereafter retain of the fees and emoluments of his office for his personal compensation over and above his necessary clerk-hire and the incidental expenses of his office, certified to by the court, or by one of its justices appointed by it for that purpose, and to be audited and allowed by the proper accounting officers of the Treasury, a sum exceeding $6,000 a year, or exceeding that rate for any time less than a year.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. What became of the amendment found in lines 2357, 2358, and 2359?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was ruled out on a point of order.

Mr. HALE. Was the point of order raised on that?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes, sir; by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL].

Mr. COCKRELL. Yes, sir; I raised the point of order on that.

Mr. HALE. What was the point of order?

Mr. COCKRELL. That it is legislation. The present law gives $3,000; and this gives $3,500.

Mr. HALE. The point of order is undoubtedly good if any Senator makes it. I did not understand that anybody made it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Certainly it was made.

Mr. HALE. There certainly is not any reason why this clerk should not receive the same salary that other court clerks do, if we fix it at $3,500.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading will proceed.

The reading of the bill was resumed, and continued to line 2385.

Mr. HALE. I ask the Senator from Missouri, if he will give me his attention, to withdraw his point of order. I see that he is in close conversation with the Chief-Justice of that court, and I hope on that conversation that he will withdraw that point of order.

Mr. COCKRELL. I cannot withdraw it.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after line 2404, to insert:

SENATE.

To enable the Secretary of the Senate to pay to the legal representatives of the Honorable Benjamin H. Hill, late a Senator from the State of Georgia, $2,726.03, the amount of compensation of a Senator from August the 17th, 1882, to March the 4th, 1883.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to strike out "legal representatives" in line 2407, and insert "Mrs. Caroline Hill, widow," that being the form in which I understand the friends of the deceased Senator desire the appropriation.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 2412, to insert:

That Senators elected, whose term of office begins on the 4th day of March, and whose credentials in due form of law shall have been presented in the Senate, but who have had no opportunity to be qualified, may receive their compensation monthly, from the beginning of their term, until there shall be a session of the Senate.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 2418, to insert:

To enable the Joint Committee on Public Printing to complete the preparation and indexing, for publication at the Government Printing Office, the classified, analytical, and descriptive catalogue of Government publications, and of publications of public interest purchased by the United States for use or distribution, $6,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary for the completion of the work, which sum may be expended as additional pay or compensation to any officer or employé of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 2429, to insert:

To enable the Joint Committee on the Library to purchase from the Marquis de Rochambeau the military papers, maps, and letter-books of the Count de Rochambeau, general in the French army in America, $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 2433, to insert:

To enable the Librarian of Congress, under the direction of the Joint Committee on the Library, to purchase a set of records and briefs in cases in the Supreme Court of the United States belonging to the estate of the late Matthew H. Carpenter, $8,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to line 2459.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to make an inquiry of the Senator from Iowa. I notice that in the case of our deceased associate the Senate has already very properly provided for the payment of salary to the end of the Congress, which, I think, always ought to be done under such circumstances, though it makes a little lapping over; but I see in the case of deceased members of the House of Representatives a different rule seems to have prevailed, in line 2454, in the sum paid to the widow of the late Mr. Smith, and I suppose the same thing is intended in the previous case of Mr. Lowe. You ought to have some amendment on this bill which will enable you to insist on the same provision for the House as for the Senate in conference.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator will observe that in the case of the widow of the late James Q. Smith the House provision is precisely the same as the Senate provision.

Mr. HOAR. The Senate provision carries pay to March 4, 1883.

Mr. ALLISON. So it does; but the House provision is to the end of the Forty-seventh Congress, those two things being as nearly the same as possible.

Mr. HOAR. But will the Senator look at the case of Mr. Orth?

Mr. ALLISON. That is the amount of salary due him as a member of the Forty-seventh Congress.

Mr. HOAR. That is a different thing. There is no salary due after death. I suggest that the Senator should make some little amendment here which will give the conference power over the subject.

Mr. ALLISON. I will accept the suggestion, and say:

To pay Mary A. Orth, the widow of the late Hon. Godlove S. Orth, the amount of salary and allowance for stationery for the unexpired term of his service as a member of the Forty-seventh Congress.

Mr. HOAR. Say "until the 4th of March, 1883."

Mr. ALLISON. I would follow the House phraseology, and say "as a member of the House of Representatives." If the clerks will look at the next paragraph they will see in what form to put it. I would say "of salary," leaving out the words "allowance for stationery." Say:

The amount of salary for the unexpired term of his service for the Forty-seventh Congress.

There may be some recent change of phraseology which we do not know of. This will give us an opportunity to understand it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LAPHAM. I suggest further that we say "the amount of salary and allowance for stationery," for he was not here to draw that allowance. In order to make it like the next paragraph these words should be inserted.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well. I do not object.

Mr. FRYE. The following one leaves out stationery again.

Mr. LAPHAM. Mr. Orth was not here to draw his stationery during the session. Let the language of the next paragraph as to Mr. Shackelford be followed in this clause.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the clause will be so modified. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. CONGER. The footings should be changed to correspond.

Mr. ALLISON. We can change them afterward. We do not know what the footings ought to be.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The footing is taken out, the Chair understands.

Mr. ALLISON. Yes; the amount of salary will cover whatever it is.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committtee on Appropriations was, under the head of "House of Representatives," to strike out the following clause from line 2469 to 2474:

To enable the Clerk of the House to pay to the officers and employés of the House of Representatives borne on the annual and sessions rolls on the 3d day of March, 1883, one month's extra pay at the compensation then paid them by law, which sum shall be immediately available.

Mr. CONGER. I move to amend that amendment by striking out the words "annual and" in line 2471.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is all proposed to be stricken out.

Mr. CONGER. I have a right to amend first.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Certainly the Senator has that right. If there be no objection the amendment of the Senator from Michigan is adopted.

Mr. CONGER. Now I want to vote on striking out.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment striking out the whole clause.

Mr. CONGER. Now, leaving it in it pays those clerks who are only employed during the session one month's extra pay, which has been uniformly given since I can remember.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the committee striking out this clause as amended.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let us hear what it is.

Mr. HARRIS. Has the vote been taken on the amendment of the Senator from Michigan?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes, sir; but the Chair will put the question again if it is desired. The Senator from Michigan moves to strike out "annual and," in line 2471.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Has not that been carried?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes; but Senators seem not to have understood that it was put, and therefore the Chair will put it again. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. CONGER. The first time the Chair asked if there was objection and there was none, and I understood the amendment was adopted. Then the question was on agreeing with the committee striking this out.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. But some Senators say they did not hear what the Chair stated, and therefore he is taking the vote over again. Now if Senators will vote it can be readily decided. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Michigan to strike out "annual and."

Mr. INGALLS. I am unwilling to interfere with any course that the House of Representatives may see fit to adopt with regard to the payment of their own employés. I believe the Senate ought to have the same right; and while I think that the rule that should govern us in regard to the appropriation of the public funds is to treat them as we would treat them if they were our own, and while I do not think that any man would treat his own servants or agents or employés as we propose to treat these people, I am unwilling to seem in any way whatever to interfere with the absolute independence of the House of Representatives upon this subject. I shall therefore vote, if I can have the opportunity, to leave this section precisely as it stands in the bill as it came from the House.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, it has been the rule of the Senate for a long time—indeed we have rather insisted on that rule—to allow each House to fix the compensation of its own officers and its own employés; but the compensation of these officers and employés is fixed by law and appropriated for in another bill. Now, the House of Representatives insert here a proposition to pay their own employés and officers, whether borne on the annual or session rolls, an additional month's pay. They have no more claim to have an additional month's pay in addition to that which the law now gives them than the officers and employés of the Senate have, and they have no more right to claim that of the Senate than we have a right to claim it of the House. The truth is that by law the officers and employés of both Houses are paid for four months' service for this session. The short session of Congress is construed and is provided for by law to include an extra month.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Already, without this bill?

Mr. CONGER. I do not understand that to be so.

Mr. ALLISON. By law the short session of Congress for the purposes of the payment of salaries of employés is computed at four months.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is, it goes to the 1st of April.

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, sir; and the long session is computed at seven months, unless Congress should be longer in session. It seems to me that this question is a question for fair adjustment between the two Houses. Last year, I believe, we inserted on a bill of this character a provision for additional compensation for a portion of our employés, and when we came into conference the House said, "No, there is a disparity between the two Houses with reference to salaries; some of your people receive more salaries than ours do, and therefore we will not allow you to pay this additional month's compensation to your employés." We said, "Very well; we will strike it all out;" but they said, "No; you can not strike out the House provision, because you have agreed to it."

The Committee on Appropriations believe that this question of extra compensation for the employés of the two Houses is a fair matter of adjustment between the two Houses, and that if the employés of one House have it those of the other House ought to have it. There are men sitting at that desk, our employés, who work as faithfully and as many hours, as we all know, as any of us here work, and then work many hours after we leave this Chamber. These employés of ours receive to-day $500 less per annum than similar employés on the part of the House of Representatives doing the same work at the desk of the House of Representatives. Under this bill that class of officers borne upon the annual rolls of the House would receive in addition to the $3,000 per annum that they now receive, against the $2,592 that our officers receive, an additional month's compensation, or some three thousand two hundred-odd dollars for the year. The Committee on Appropriations do not believe that that is a fair adjustment of the extra compensation that is to be paid to the employés of the two Houses if an extra compensation is to be paid at all. Therefore we struck out all here relating to the extra compensation of employés of the House of Representatives, in order that we may have what is understood here to be a full and free conference, a thing we have heard something about to-day heretofore.

Mr. CONGER. If that is the understanding, I will withdraw my amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. As he uses the word "understanding," I want the Senator not to misapprehend what the Committee on Appropriations believes with reference to this matter. I do not mean that we are committed in any sense to an increase of the compensation of our own employés.

Mr. CONGER. It means, I suppose, to give the opportunity of doing whatever the committee shall think right about both Houses.

Mr. ALLISON. So it does, and that both Houses shall be on a par.

Mr. CONGER. If that is the object, I withdraw the amendment I moved.

Mr. INGALLS. How can an amendment affecting the pay of the Senate employés be ingrafted on this? I do not understand that under parliamentary law it will be competent for a conference committee to ingraft an amendment not considered in either House. I should doubt that very much.

Mr. ALLISON. If that can not be done they will both go out.

Mr. INGALLS. That may be.

Mr. CONGER. If this clause should be stricken out by the Senate, of course it will be open to a conference committee, and they can adopt it with an amendment or modification.

Several SENATORS. Certainly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HOAR in the chair). The question is on the amendment striking out the whole paragraph, the amendment of the Senator from Michican being withdrawn.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after line 2489, to strike out the following clause:

To pay to James C. Courts, assistant clerk of the Committee on Appropriations, for additional compensation, $900.

Mr. INGALLS. Why is that stricken out?

Mr. ALLISON. That is extra compensation.

Mr. INGALLS. It is for a clerk of a House committee.

Mr. INGALLS. I do not understand why the Senate should interfere. I presume the House are the best judges of what their clerks have earned, and I think they ought to be trusted with the power to say what they ought to be paid.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. This is an addition to the regular salary fixed by law.

Mr. HARRIS. I should like to know from the Senator from Iowa if this item is not stricken out for exactly the same reason that the extra compensation of the other employés was stricken out?

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from Tennessee will see that this assistant clerk to the Committee on Appropriations of the House would come within the provision in lines 2469 to 2474. He would secure an additional month's compensation there, and then if this clause remained he would secure also $900 additional compensation beyond the amount received by him under the general provision.

Mr. HARRIS. While I am not able to give the facts with precision and in detail, I chance to know that this clerk is a gentleman of large experience and of a very high order of capacity, and has been serving perhaps for the last year or two, certainly for the last year, at an exceedingly small salary; precisely what, I am not able to tell, for I had no idea of any such question as this arising. He is a young gentleman of very high capacity, and has been serving with the House Committee on Appropriations for the last three or four years, and I know he has been serving for an unusually small salary in such capacity. Unless the reason that moves the committee to strike out this clause is exactly the same as in the other case of extra compensation I should greatly prefer its not being stricken out, for I am satisfied the clause in the bill as it came from the House is merited and deserving and ought to be allowed the young man.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to bear testimony also to the efficiency of this clerk. He is one of the most competent clerks in this Capitol, and works perhaps as many hours as any clerk or employé in this Capitol, and is worthy in every regard; and his salary has been, I think, compared with other salaries, somewhat low. At the same time we struck this out in order that we might reach the whole question, and I think the Senator from Tennessee can trust us to do justice in every way to this employé of the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment striking out the clause.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the bill has been concluded. The Chair is informed by the Secretary that on page 63 of the bill the lines from 1529 to 1534 have not yet been acted on, having been passed over. The amendment will be read.

The ACTING SECRETARY. The reserved amendment is, in line 1532, after "wings," to strike out "pay of landscape architect;" and in line 1533, before "thousand," to strike out "sixty-five" and insert "fifty;" so as to make the clause read:

For improving the Capitol grounds: For continuing the work of the improvement of the Capitol grounds, including permanent approaches to the House and Senate wings, one clerk, and wages of mechanics, gardeners, and workmen, $50,000.

Mr. FRYE. That was left out on account of the absence of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL].

Mr. HAWLEY. I hope the Senate will non-concur with the committee here. I agree with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] in saying what I am sure the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL], who is absent, would say if he were here: that this gentleman is one of the most valuable officers we have connected with our service, a gentleman of the very highest character; one who certainly would not take, if it were offered him, more than he considers his services to be worth; for the Senator from Missouri reminded us a while ago that when his salary was fixed at $4,000 and he found the duties were less than he expected, it being then a discretionary appropriation, he told the committee to make it $2,000. I think the work done about the Capitol in the last six or eight years shows what his skill is. He stands as high as any man in the world in that business.

Mr. FRYE. I understand that is what the Senator from Vermont would desire to say, if here.

Mr. HAWLEY. I suppose so. It is in entire concurrence with the remarks made by the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. ALLISON. I am very glad to know what the salary of this landscape architect is. The committee were unable to ascertain it in any way. They understand he made casual visits here, and we thought perhaps he might forego his pay for a short time. The Senate will do as it pleases.

Mr. MORRILL. What is the question, Mr. President?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment, striking out "pay of landscape architect."

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President, I trust this will not be stricken out. The landscape architect has performed the most valuable service in relation to beautifying the grounds about the Capitol of any man we have ever employed. He is a most unselfish man and has been in the employ of the Government for some years at a salary fixed at $4,000, one-half of which he immediately relinquished when he found he was not employed all the time, and he has been paid but half the salary allowed. He would perhaps prefer to continue until the grounds are completed without any salary, but I trust for services so valuable as those he has rendered and will yet render we may not strike a blow at a very deserving man and one who confessedly stands at the head of his profession, whether in this country or in any other.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Who fixed this salary?

Mr. MORRILL. It was fixed by law some years ago.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Was it fixed by law?

Mr. MORRILL. By law ten years ago. It was $4,000, but he has not taken more than half of it for many years.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is it still $4,000 by law?

Mr. HAWLEY. I was told by the Architect of the Capitol to-day that originally there was a lump appropriation out of which they paid him $4,000, but it has since been fixed. He declined that and requested that it be reduced; and it has since been fixed at $2,000 a year, as I understood Mr. Clark to say.

Mr. ALLISON. I should like the Senator from Connecticut and the Senator from Vermont to tell us who fixes this salary.

Mr. HAWLEY. I said I supposed it was now fixed by law. Some years ago, before the present rule was adopted, it was included in a lump appropriation; but there was some statute passed providing that there should be no salary that was not specifically provided for.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Will one of the Senators tell me how much time each year this gentleman, Mr. Olmsted, spends here, or about how much?

Mr. MORRILL. I can hardly tell that, for I have not asked him. He comes here very frequently and spends as much time as is necessary, and employs his time at home in making drawings for work to be done here.

Mr. INGALLS. What service is to be performed in connection with the public grounds?

Mr. MORRILL. How they are to be made, and plans for the improvement.

Mr. INGALLS. Does that include anything except the public grounds about the Capitol?

Mr. MORRILL. None.

Mr. INGALLS. I had supposed the practical work of laying out these grounds, and the ornamental planting was completed, and it seems to me superfluous to continue a landscape gardener at a large salary to come on here occasionally to inspect the result of his labors. I admit that great effects have been accomplished, although I think they have been achieved at an inordinate expense, and perhaps not in pursuance of any definite and well-ascertained plan, for I observe work that has been done one year has been undone the next.

Mr. MORRILL. Not by this man.

Mr. INGALLS. And we are expending a great deal of money that nobody seems to know anything about; and inasmuch as the $4,000 originally allowed him was confessedly so excessive that he only took half of it, I should suppose that if the work was done he might be willing to relinquish the remainder.

In this connection I should like some information in regard to the amount of work going on at the north entrance of the Capitol. I observe that there is an approach and an ornamental marble terrace that is being constructed out of some appropriation. I have inquired a great many times to know under what authority, or under whose plan or by what sanction that work is being done; how much is to be expended; what is contemplated, and when it is to be completed; and I have never yet been able to learn any satisfactory solution of that problem.

Mr. ALLISON. It is paid for out of an appropriation in similar phraseology to that in this clause.

Mr. INGALLS. The Senator from Iowa, chairman of the committee, informs me that that work is paid for out of some appropriation similar to the one we are now considering.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The appropriation for the Capitol grounds year after year.

Mr. INGALLS. If the outlines of the work have been accomplished and the planting has been done, I can see no reason for continuing the service of the landscape gardener.

Mr. HAWLEY. Not gardener, architect.

Mr. MORRILL. I wish to say in the first place that there has been no work done here and then taken away since this architect has been employed. Whatever he has done has been completed perfectly according to the plan and remains at the present time. Nor has there been an underestimate; there has never been any appropriation made for any deficiency. This plan was adopted many years ago and accepted by Congress, and it does contemplate further service on the part of this landscape architect. It included the approaches to the west front of the Capitol, and I am almost ashamed of Congress that we allow those miserable stair-ways to remain there without making some appropriation by which we can replace them with something more appropriate to this grand building.

Then it was contemplated, in addition, that there should be a terrace entirely around the west, north, and south sides, by which the appearance of this Capitol would be vastly improved, giving it the appearance of another story, and also furnishing accommodations for many needed committee-rooms and many rooms that are required for the storage of documents, papers, &c., for which we now have no place.

I may say that the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds this year offered an amendment and sent it to the Committee on Appropriations for the terrace on the north side, at an expense of only $80,000 for two hundred and fifty feet, in which there would be eighteen committee-rooms, as good and as perfect as any of those in the basement story of this building; and yet notwithstanding the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds have not asked for a dollar this year, except in one single instance, some improvement of a building somewhere (I do not remember where), in contrast with the usual appropriations we had asked for of six or seven millions, I understand that the Committee on Appropriations have rejected even that continuation.

I have nothing further to say on the subject.

Mr. BECK. This matter was postponed until the Senator from Vermont could come in, and I desired not to say anything until he was here. He is here now, and therefore I propose to say something.

The difficulties we have had with regard to these Capitol grounds have been that your works have been laid out without any appropriation made by law. The Senator from Vermont sees fit to absent himself after I have waited on him all day, but I propose now to say what I rose to say whether he stays or not. The Senator from Vermont, the chairman of the committee——

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. ROLLINS] is chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. BECK. Plans have been laid out for grand approaches to this Capitol, which it is confessed will cost $800,000, and which many of us believe will cost twice that sum. Perhaps it is a proper thing to do, but the law requires that before a great work of that sort shall be entered upon there shall be estimates made for it, that the plan shall be approved, that it shall be submitted, that it shall be considered. The Committee on Appropriations have never had an opportunity of ascertaining what was the estimate of the cost now referred to by the Senator from Vermont of these grand approaches to the Capitol about which he speaks. If they have, I have never heard of it. I care nothing about the wages of this architect; but I do insist that before we enter upon a great work which is to cost $800,000, or a million and a half of dollars perhaps, some estimate shall be made, some idea of the cost of it shall be given so that we shall not be appropriating at loose ends, a little here and a little there, and the work going on in defiance of appropriations.

At the last session of Congress the Committee on Appropriations, not because they did not desire to see these approaches made, not because they did not desire to see this Capitol fairly improved, but because they could obtain no information in regard to it or the cost of it, cut down this appropriation to $25,000. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY], the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL], and others met us and complained as they are doing now. I have before me the short debate which occurred in the Senate last year on this subject. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] then said:

> When appropriations were made some time ago and this work was begun he was called in as the man whose advice it was best to have. They put down for him a salary of $4,000. The appropriations were not large enough for the particular work in the style he desired, and he went to the Architect of the Capitol and said: "Put my salary down. It should not be more than $2,000 if you are not going to expend more money than this." And he has not taken it, and does not desire it. He would rather go on and see this work through for nothing than lose the chance of seeing it done and giving it his own special and friendly interest.
> The appropriation of $75,000 proposed by the House is small enough. It does not contemplate entering on the larger improvements, the terraces around the whole west front of the Capitol, but has in view only the northeastern corner of the Senate wing and southeast corner of the House wing. Senators will remember there is but a rough plank near the corner of the building. Something has to be done to make that better. And then some of the work is to be on the east front of the Capitol.
> The work, so far as has been done within six or eight years around the Capitol, is admirable, and is going to make ultimately of this building and these grounds the most beautiful spot in the world architecturally. Nor is it Mr. Olmsted's own doing. It has been done in consultation with the Architect of the Capitol, with engineers, with landscape gardeners, and with the best talent and taste of the country.
> I wish the $75,000 might stay in the bill, just that these two corners may be put in better order within the year, and I am very glad to see the disposition to keep Mr. Olmsted anyhow.
>
> The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri suggests that the words "landscape architect," in line 1650, by unanimous consent, be retained in the bill.
>
> Mr. MORRILL. Take the amendments as they come.
>
> The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is the first. The words "landscape architect" may be retained instead of stricken out. If there be no objection, the question is on the rest of the amendment of the committee.
>
> Mr. MORRILL. I want to take the vote on the amendment in lines 1648 and 1649 first, including the word "wings," in line 1650. I trust the Senate will retain them all.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator wants a separate vote?
Mr. MORRILL. Yes.
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Then the question is on striking out the words "including permanent approaches to the House and Senate wings."
Mr. BECK. The Senator from Iowa suggested a change of the amount.
Mr. ALLISON. I suggested $60,000, the amount appropriated last year.
Mr. BECK. The approaches alluded to are simply those coming up on the east side and south side, and not the great central work, I understand.
Mr. ALLISON. That is the understanding.
Mr. BECK. Then I will not object.
Mr. MORRILL. Then leave the clause as it came from the House. Sixty thousand dollars will not be enough. Fifty thousand dollars is really required for other things, and it will take more than $10,000 to make one approach.
Mr. ALLISON. I should like to ask the Senator from Vermont what other things require $50,000?
Mr. MORRILL. Curbing that yet has to be done.
Mr. ALLISON. Where?
Mr. MORRILL. At various points.
Mr. ALLISON. I do not think we ought to spend $50,000 in curbing.
Mr. MORRILL. It is not all for that.
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to retaining all the words in this paragraph that the Committee on Appropriations propose to strike out, and then to come to the question of what shall be the amount of the appropriation? ["No!" "No!"] There is no objection to retaining all the paragraph except the amount of the appropriation. The question then is on striking out "$75,000" and inserting "$25,000."
Mr. MORRILL. I ask the Senator from Iowa to put that at $65,000.
Mr. ALLISON. I will compromise on that.
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is moved to insert $65,000. Is there objection to that? The Chair hears no objection, and the amendment is so modified. The question is on the amendment as modified.
The amendment as modified was agreed to.

We have given in this bill $65,000, with the distinct understanding that we were not to enter on this great work that is to cost, as the Senator from Vermont told us yesterday, $800,000, and we believe a million and a half, without an estimate for it, without some idea being given of how it will be done, by whom it is to be done, when it is to be done, and what is the probable cost. We appropriated $60,000 last year, and now we have begun "approaches," as they call it at the Senate end, which every Senator knows is only the beginning of a scheme. This work has been left in an imperfect condition all winter. The excuse made by the Senator from Connecticut last session was that we had to walk over planks to enter the Senate wing and that we ought not to do it, and therefore this work should be commenced. The Senator from Vermont said $10,000 would do the work and the balance would go for curbing; and here we are now just beginning, so as to compel us to go on little by little, and we are forced to do it whether we will or not.

Mr. HALE. Will the Senator from Kentucky let me send up an amendment, which I propose after line 1534, which, perhaps, may meet his objection and the objection that has arisen in my mind as well as his?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The proposed amendment will be read for information.

The ACTING SECRETARY. At the end of line 1534 it is proposed to add:

And hereafter all changes and improvements in the Capitol grounds, including approaches to the Capitol, shall be estimated for in detail, showing what modifications are proposed and the estimated cost of the same.

Mr. BECK. That is exactly what I want.

Mr. HALE. I think that ought to be done.

Mr. BECK. That is all I want. I desire the Senator from Vermont and other gentlemen when they make their estimates to do so in such a way as to enable the Senate committees to examine them and give them their approval or disapproval according to law, and then perhaps I may vote as much as any one for these purposes. What I object to is proceeding as we have done at this corner of the Capitol to make a partial approach, leaving it in an imperfect condition and in such a shape that Congress is obliged to go on and complete it whether it desires to do so or not. I do not want Congress to be defied in that way.

In this very bill we provide for the Albany post-office and custom-house, for which we have appropriated heretofore $800,000, with a statement that that would complete the building, and now they advise us that they can not buy the ground for less than $500,000, and a million and a half will be required to finish the building, and they do not propose to complete it for less, though they got the bill passed on the assurance that $800,000 would cover the entire cost. Some years ago we passed a bill for the New York city post-office and limited the total cost to $3,000,000. Three times by law we endeavored to curb them in the expenditure, and yet that building has cost us nine and a half millions. A similar thing occurred at Boston. We appropriated one and a half millions for a building there and it cost us four and a half millions. My object in using these illustrations is to show the defiance by executive officers of the Government and others of acts of Congress.

I want the amendment of the Senator from Maine adopted; and then when the Senator from Vermont comes to us, as he did last year, and tells us we are to spend $10,000 for a little approach to the Senate wing in order to prevent our walking on plank and $50,000 for curbing, we can examine the plans and estimates and ascertain how much the cost is to be and limit it, instead of beginning work, as is now done, which every Senator can see is but the beginning of a great era of improvement. The Senator from Vermont says this will give us a number of rooms for committees and for the storage of books and papers. That is all well enough, but why not first get authority from Congress to do it? Why under pretense of doing one thing do another? Why defy us and say that these approaches at the west front of the Capitol are a disgrace and that Mr. Olmsted or anybody else is going to make them, as he thinks, creditable, without giving Congress a chance to say what shall be done, how it shall be done, and what shall be the expense of doing it?

These are the things of which I complain. I think the amendment of the Senator from Maine will cure the evil as far as we can do it by law.

The only objection I have ever found to any of the work about the Capitol is that I have never yet seen any one who could tell how much any particular work that is built around here is to cost or how much we finally pay for it. We go on from year to year forcing a condition of things which requires further expenditures that Congress can not avoid making. Get rid of that condition of things and you may spend what you like.

All the information I have about Mr. Olmsted is that he is an able and an honest man, a man who can be trusted; not an extortionate man; and I should be willing to pay him something. I do not quite approve of striking out his salary, but I think we ought to have some understanding about the work to be done, the expense of it, and how it is to be carried on.

Mr. ROLLINS. Mr. President, in justice to Mr. Olmsted I think a letter which he addressed to the Joint Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds on the 30th of December last should be read, or at any rate published in the RECORD, and I will submit it.

In this letter it will be seen that he at least thinks this work has been authorized by the previous action of Congress. He has made a careful estimate as to its cost. He says the whole work when completed will cost $800,000, and that when completed ninety as good and convenient rooms as the average of the committee-rooms which we now have will be added to this building. The committee-rooms are very much needed.

I desire simply to have this letter read, as it explains the situation very much better than anything I could say on the subject.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The letter will be read.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

DECEMBER 30, 1882.

SIR: The work, designed in the act of Congress, "the permanent approach to the north wing of the Capitol," has been advanced as far as it was possible to obtain the materials for it from the quarry, in the short interval between the last and the present sessions.

It was necessary to the stability of the structure that, at the angle of the two lines of marble retaining wall, the masonry should be somewhat extended to the westward. To have carried it no farther than was strictly essential to this purpose would have left a raw, ragged, and unseemly piece of work, in conspicuously close connection with the walls of the Capitol. Enough of the marble-work upon the line of the north retaining wall of the terrace has been laid to avoid this result, the main wall being carried out at the bottom to the first vertical line of the design.

Hearing from you that it has been questioned if this part of the work was authorized, I beg to say that I have presumed the action of Congress in both Houses to represent the intention of your joint committee, and this intention to have proceeded from the considerations which I had the honor to lay before it early in the last session. The committee will remember that I then exhibited a series of plans, elevations, and other illustrations of the entire terrace, and advised that the work should be begun at the points since designated "permanent approaches to the north and south wings." The reason for this advice was that a moderate appropriation would enable so much of the plan to be carried to completion, in the intervals of the sessions of Congress, as would supersede the existing make-shift plank walks, of which complaint had been made by Senators, and leave the ground free from incumbrances and disorder. Later, I aided the chairman of the House Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds in presenting the proposition to the House Committee on Appropriations, using the drawings, arguments, and estimates which had been prepared for your joint committee. At the close of the session, and a few hours before the vote was taken in the Senate fixing the appropriation, I also explained the proposition, using the same drawings and the same arguments to several members of the Appropriations Committee of the Senate.

In neither of the drawings used nor in any argument or representation made by me on these occasions were the permanent approaches shown or considered as constructions detached from other parts of the terrace. The only drawing made especially to illustrate the proposition, the adoption of which I advised, distinctly presented that portion of the work called in question. This drawing now hangs on the walls of the House Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. I had no reason to suppose, nor did it ever occur to me, that any member of Congress, among all to whom the drawings were exhibited, could suppose that the construction ordered would be advisable except as a part of the entire plan of the terrace. This, as a whole, had years before been adopted by Congress, and the entire work under my direction had from the outset been accommodated to it.

All of the essential facts thus recalled being of record with your committee or within the personal knowledge of its members, I do not think that the slight amount of work that has been done incidentally to the construction of what is, strictly speaking, the "approach" to the Capitol from the north, the object being as stated, will be regarded as unwarrantable.

I take this occasion to observe that the stone, brick, concrete and marble work that has been done under this first appropriation for the terrace exhibits the quality and character of nearly all of the work intended. The cost has been within the estimated amount, and a new estimate has been made for the entire work upon the basis of prices thus experimentally determined, the result of which tallies closely with that presented to your committee before the adoption of the design by Congress in 1874. At these prices, the cost of advancing the terrace along the entire north face of the Capitol, a distance of two hundred and fifty feet, and of providing within it an addition of eighteen large rooms to the basement accommodations of the Capitol, will be $80,000; the cost of the entire terrace and stair-ways, with an addition to the accommodations of the Capitol of ninety rooms of the average dimensions of the present committee-rooms, will be $800,000.

Very respectfully yours,

FRED'K LAW OLMSTED,
Landscape Architect.

Hon. E. H. ROLLINS,
Chairman of the Joint Committee of Congress on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, the amendment which I have offered is not intended to censure Mr. Olmsted, nor in any way to disparage his work about the Capitol and the Capitol grounds. I suppose that his reputation has already been established, and that it rests upon works fully as enduring as any to be found about the Capitol or in Washington; but all the same it is better that we should know and that Congress should know beforehand just what is contemplated in the future touching these grounds and this structure.

The letter which has just been read shows that it is contemplated to make some very radical changes in the form and face and appearance of this building. It may be, and quite likely is, the fact that all of the work touched upon in the letter should be done, giving to this Capitol the effect of another story, so that it should appear to be elevated, so that the proportion will to the human eye seem more harmonious. But that is a matter surrounded by so much doubt and by so many questions that it is very proper that before the work is entered upon it should be estimated for in detail; and we should know just what is projected, and whether it is better to throw out a terrace giving the effect of a basement story with large rooms, committee-rooms, storage-rooms, or whatever you will, thereby changing the appearance of this Capitol that has stood here for so many years. That is a thing which ought to be settled fully beforehand, and it ought not be entered upon under any general appropriation that is not fully understood and that does not in terms teach to every Senator and Member of Congress just what is to be undertaken.

I hope nobody will object to the amendment I have offered, which is in the line not of censure or disparagement but of security in the future.

Mr. ROLLINS. Let the amendment be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The proposed amendment will be read.

The ACTING SECRETARY. After line 1534 it is proposed to add:

And hereafter changes and improvements in the Capitol grounds, including approaches to the Capitol, shall be estimated for in detail, showing what modifications are proposed and the estimated cost of the same.

Mr. ROLLINS. I do not think there is any objection to that.

Mr. HAWLEY. It is right.

Mr. HALE. I did not think there would be any objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The first question is on the amendment of the committee striking out "pay of landscape architect" in line 1532.

Mr. HAWLEY. We do not wish to strike that out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair does not understand that that amendment is pressed.

Mr. ROLLINS. I understood the committee to concede that the amendment may not be agreed to.

Mr. HALE. The chairman is not here; but he has no objection I believe to that course.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be regarded as withdrawn unless there be objection. The Chair hears none. The question now is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE].

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I see no objection whatever to the amendment of the Senator from Maine.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that there is an amendment in the summing up which will fall with the other.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. We have been going on in a very loose way for years with respect to the improvement of the Capitol grounds, and a great deal has been left to the discretion of the architect. It is not his fault that we have not prescribed the exact line of improvements that ought to be carried out. When it comes to an alteration of the building as now proposed, I think that ought to be done under the authority of Congress. But I wish particularly to say a word in reply to the Senator from Kentucky, who has adverted to an evil hitherto complained of very generally in our legislation; I mean with respect to the cost of our public buildings.

I think a great deal of the responsibility for the increased cost of our public buildings lies with the Committee on Appropriations, of which the Senator from Kentucky is a distinguished member. We have a Joint Committee of the House and Senate on Public Buildings and Grounds that has usually been intrusted with the consideration of these matters, and we have been in the habit of making appropriations fixing precisely the sum of money to be expended in the construction of buildings. Every bill, I know, that was passed through the committee of the Senate while I was chairman for a year or so limited the amount that the building should cost, and prohibited any further expenditure of money; but it has happened in many instances that after the amount appropriated under the recommendation of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds was expended parties would go before the Committee on Appropriations, outside of the other committee, and get additions to the sum. There are large sums of money in the present bill now under consideration which are intended to be appropriated to finish public buildings that have never been considered by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and many of them without any recommendation from that committee.

Mr. ALLISON. Does the Senator speak of items put on in the Senate?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. No; I do not say by the Senate, but they are in the bill that came from the House. The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds is a joint committee, and in a majority of cases I think the items were put on by the House Appropriations Committee without the action of the Committee on Public Buildings at all.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, let us have a vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE].

Mr. ROLLINS. I think there is no objection to that.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposing a change of the sum has not been acted on. The Chair was under the impression that it was a mere footing, but he finds that it was not.

Mr. HAWLEY. I hope that it will be non-concurred in.

Mr. ROLLINS. I think there is no disposition to reduce the amount.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is to strike out "$65,000" and insert "$50,000," in line 1533.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. GARLAND. I made a motion a little while ago which was laid over——

Mr. ALLISON. Will the Senator allow me a minute?

Mr. GARLAND. I think this had better be disposed of.

Mr. ALLISON. I merely want to correct an error on page 57, line 1374. I call the attention of the Senator from Kentucky to it. The words "first day of January, 1882" should be stricken out and the words "first day of July, 1882" inserted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In line 1374, it is proposed to strike out "January" and insert "July."

Mr. BECK. That is right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the correction will be made.

Mr. ALLISON. I thank the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. GARLAND. I move, on page 95, to strike out from the word "provided," in line 2335, to and including the word "folio," in line 2380.

Mr. HALE. I ask the Senator from Arkansas to allow me to offer an amendment perfecting this clause, as I shall be called away in a few minutes, and then it will not in any way interfere with his motion. It is to perfect the part he seeks to strike out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That motion will of course take precedence of a motion to strike out.

Mr. GARLAND. It can be done just as well afterward, because if the clause is stricken out it can not be amended, and if it stays in it can be amended afterward.

Mr. HALE. I am called away to attend a conference committee, and I should like to put in the amendment now.

Mr. GARLAND. Very well.

Mr. HALE. I move, in line 2357, after the words "Revised Statutes," to insert:

And after January 1, 1884, the salary of the chief clerk of the Court of Claims shall be $3,500 per annum, as fixed in this act for circuit and district court clerks.

Mr. COCKRELL. I raise the point of order on that.

Mr. HALE. Will the Senator withhold it for a moment so that I may explain? It is not precisely the amendment that has been ruled out. Will the Senator withhold his point for a moment?

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not withdraw the objection, but I do not want to have it ruled out before the Senator can be heard.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands the Senator from Missouri to temporarily withdraw the point of order so that the Senator from Maine may be heard.

Mr. HALE. The amendment ruled out provided:

And hereafter the salary of the chief clerk of the Court of Claims shall be $3,500 annually.

The amendment which I now offer provides that after January 1, 1884, the salary shall be $3,500. I only wish to say briefly here, not to detain the Senate or interrupt the Senator from Arkansas, that I have offered this for the reason that the clause incorporated in the bill by the House fixes the salaries of all the circuit and district court clerks at a maximum of $3,500. I know how important the duties are of the Court of Claims. I know that it is a court that is growing in importance. I know that its clerk has many duties and that he performs them faithfully and well. I am sure that it is a subject purely within the jurisdiction of Congress to settle the salaries of these officers. I am informed that the remarkable spectacle has been presented here of the chief-justice of this court appearing upon the floor of the Senate and lobbying against the increase of the salary of this clerk, and I wish to say here that I look upon that as an undue interference with the clear rights of each branch of Congress. I do not recognize that any judge has anything to do whatever with the salary of the clerk of his court, nor has any clerk in any court anything to do with the salaries of the judges. Interference by either should be an offense to Congress. I hope that the Senate will take this matter into its own hands.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, the Senator has gone entirely outside of his legitimate duties in undertaking to criticise the chief-justice of the Court of Claims. I say that when the Senator undertook to insert this amendment, at the instance of this clerk, he was interfering with the rights and privileges of the judiciary. This clerk belongs to that court; he is appointed by that court; he holds his office at their will and pleasure; and what right has he to come in here and solicit the Senator to insert an amendment increasing his salary $500 without the knowledge or consent of a solitary judge of that court? That court is responsible for the clerk, responsible for the administration of his office; and why does the Senator make himself a party to the clerk of that court undertaking to increase his salary without the consent or knowledge of a solitary judge of that court?

Mr. HALE. Let me ask the Senator did not the Committee on Appropriations put this in as an amendment to the clause which the House had inserted treating upon clerks of United States courts?

Mr. COCKRELL. At the instance of the clerk, and the Senator knows it.

Mr. HALE. If the Senator here avows the doctrine that the Senate of the United States has no right to pass upon the salary of a clerk of a United States court without conference with the judges of that court he announces a doctrine that in the future the Senate will never agree to, and which he upon reflection himself will never advance here.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, if I had been instrumental at the instance of a subordinate, of a mere clerk of a court, in inserting a provision in an appropriation bill increasing his salary I would not criticise the chief-justice of that court if he were to come to a Senator and tell him that that act had been done by the clerk without the knowledge and consent of a solitary one of the judges.

Mr. HALE. Why does the Senator call the clerk of a United States court a subordinate of the judges? I do not recognize that.

Mr. COCKRELL. Because the clerk of the Court of Claims holds at the will of the court. They appoint him.

Mr. HALE. But the question of the salary which we appropriate for every year is a clear subject for our judgment.

Mr. COCKRELL. There is no question but that we have a right to regulate the salary of the clerk; but why does the Senator travel outside of his record and his duty to undertake to criticise the chief-justice of the Court of Claims because I made objection to this as legislation, when he stands representing the clerk of the Court of Claims here trying to get his salary increased without the knowledge or consent of the court, and thereby tacitly throwing upon the Court of Claims the responsibility of an effort to increase the salary of their clerk?

Mr. HALE. I will tell the Senator precisely why I did what he calls traveling outside of what I have a right to bring up here. It was because it was to me an offensive thing, as it was to other Senators, for the chief-justice of that court to appear upon the floor under the privilege that he has as an ex-Senator and importune and solicit Senator after Senator, as I believe he did the Senator from Missouri, to make this point.

Mr. COCKRELL. Not so. He did not.

Mr. HALE. That was offensive to me. I want to see no more of it. I never want to see that spectacle again.

Mr. COCKRELL. Nor do I want to see a Senator here standing and pleading for a subordinate of a court against the wishes of the entire court, taking up as a special pleader the cause of a subordinate of a court and trying to ride over that court to increase his salary. The Senator came here as the representative of that clerk for the purpose of getting his salary increased long before the judge of that court came here to tell a Senator who represents the State from which he was appointed that that amendment had been put in without the knowledge or solicitation of any member of the court and at the instance of the clerk of the court, whose special counsel the distinguished Senator seems to be on this floor.

Mr. HALE. Now, the Senator should get his facts right as well as his arguments, and the one will be as difficult as the other. I have nothing whatever personally to do with the clerk of this court. He was not appointed from my State. I have never seen him on the floor of the Senate. I do not think he has solicited or lobbied or implored in any way. I have no sort of connection with him as being a constituent of mine or in any way connected with me. I simply voted in the Committee on Appropriations, and the committee agreed, to put him on with the other clerks, and it is a thing that ought to have been left to the Senate to settle; there ought not to have been any outside interference.

The Senator need not become excited; he need not become aroused. He is a man who as quickly as I would be restive if he saw any interference with the perogatives of the Senate. We can settle this matter without there being any undue alarm or excitement. Let the Senate settle this question as it does all other things without its being besieged and besought by outside influences.

I can assure the Senator that that is all I care to say about it. I do not think the Senator will make a point of order on this.

Mr. COCKRELL. I never was in as good humor in my life as I am now I think [laughter], and that influences me to insist upon the point of order in order that we may get through with the bill, and that I may have the pleasure of going with the Senator from Maine to a conference committee and disposing of the business that is pressing.

Mr. HALE. I think we should dispose of it a great deal better by having a vote on the proposition and letting the Senate pass on it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order is sustained. The question recurs on the motion of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. GARLAND] to strike out.

Mr. GARLAND. I have moved to strike out all after the word "provided," in line 2335, to the word "folio" in line 2380, and the question of order which has just been raised and which has been sustained by the Chair illustrates exactly the force of the motion I have made. This is general legislation incorporated in an appropriation bill regulating the fees of all the clerks of the courts of the United States, commencing with the Supreme Court and going down to circuit courts and district courts in all the States. There may be a necessity for legislation on this matter; the attention of Congress has been called to it for several sessions past; but this is not the proper place to insert this legislation.

There are several features in these lines that are crude and undigested, that do very great injustice to the district court clerks, to the circuit court clerks, and to the Supreme Court clerk as well. This matter is before the Judiciary Committee, and they expect at the next session to bring in a measure covering the whole subject; but I insist that within the spirit of the rules of this body, one of which has just now been applied by the President of the Senate, this is such legislation as should be stricken from the bill. Therefore I make the motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas to strike out from the word "dollars," in line 2335, down to and including the word "folio," in line 2380.

The words proposed to be stricken out were read, as follows:

Provided, That where the same person holds the office of a clerk in both the circuit and district courts of any district he shall be allowed by the Attorney-General to retain for his personal compensation of the fees received by him, after the payment of office expenses, the prescribed maximum for one office only, to wit, the sum of $3,500 per annum; and this proviso shall apply in its full extent to the clerks of courts mentioned in section 840 of the Revised Statutes: And provided further, That the clerk of the supreme court of the District of Columbia shall make to the Attorney-General his semi-annual report of fees and emoluments in the same manner and under the same regulations as clerks of the other courts of the United States, under and in accordance with section 833 of the Revised Statutes, the maximum of whose compensation, after the payment of office expenses and other allowances granted by the Attorney-General, shall not exceed the maximum of $3,500, and the balance of said fees and emoluments of his office shall be paid into the Treasury according to the provisions of section 844 of the Revised Statutes: Provided, That the Clerk of the Supreme Court of the United States shall not hereafter retain of the fees and emoluments of his office for his personal compensation over and above his necessary clerk-hire and the incidental expenses of his office, certified to by the court or by one of its justices appointed by it for that purpose and to be audited and allowed by the proper accounting officers of the Treasury, a sum exceeding $6,000 a year, or exceeding that rate for any time less than a year; and the surplus of such fees and emoluments shall be paid into the Treasury as provided by law in cases of clerks of the circuit and district courts of the United States: And provided further, That so much of section 3 of the act of February 28, 1799, as relates to the compensation of said clerk for his attendance in court is hereby repealed: And provided further, That the Supreme Court is hereby authorized and empowered to prepare the table of fees to be charged by the clerk thereof, and until the same is thus prepared the fees therein charged for recording or copying any paper or record shall not exceed 14 cents per folio.

Mr. BECK. Before that vote is taken I desire to say a word or two. There are great evils, I think, existing in the fees paid to court clerks, and especially to the clerk of the Supreme Court of the United States and the clerk of the supreme court of the District of Columbia.

Something having been said about clerks appearing before us, I will mention that I happened to be one of the sub-committee of three before whom the young man whose increase of salary has been ruled out on a point of order came. I never saw him before, but he seemed to be a very respectable young man, and stated his case and the reasons why he should have $3,500 as well as the others; and the clerk of the supreme court of the District, a very respectable old man, whose name I have now forgotten——

Mr. HARRIS. Meigs.

Mr. BECK. Came here and showed he was getting $6,000 while he had one deputy getting $4,000, I think, and a lot of other deputies getting God knows how much—I do not know that anybody knew quite how much; and we found that the clerk of the Supreme Court was getting fifteen, twenty, or twenty-five thousand dollars in one form or another. Whether this is proper legislation or not, the House has inserted it here, and we have no right to make a point of order upon it, and neither House has a right to criticise what the other House has done in regard to questions of order. The House has presented to us a provision on a matter which certainly requires regulation, and for years and years this thing has been going on and no effort has been made that I know of to regulate it. If this provision is retained and some injustice is done by it, the judges of the Supreme Court and the judges of the other courts and the Judiciary Committee will see next session what the evil is, and it will be promptly remedied; but judging from the past, unless this provision is retained or something like it, these clerks will run on year by year as they are doing now.

Here is one provision in line 2372:

That so much of section 3 of the act of February 28, 1799, as relates to the compensation of said clerk—

The clerk of the Supreme Court—for his attendance in court is hereby repealed.

I turn to that statute, and it reads:

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That the compensation to the clerk of the Supreme Court of the United States shall be as follows, to wit: for his attendance in court, $10 per day, and for his other services, double the fees of the clerk of the supreme court of the State in which the Supreme Court of the United States shall be holden.

In addition to all his fees, I suppose—I do not know, but I assume from the repeal of this—that he gets $10 a day for walking into court, besides all his other fees, walking from his office across the hall. The statement was made before us that his fees are enormously large. I do not see why the clerk of that court should receive more than six, seven, or eight thousand dollars a year, some liberal compensation for the services of a first-class man. This evil has been known and attention has been called to it time and again, and the House of Representatives has in this form sought to remedy it. Unless it is done I do not know when a remedy will be applied. You will observe, too, that we allow him $6,000 a year in our amendment, and the judges of the Supreme Court have a right to regulate the clerk-hire he shall be allowed to have. The clause reads:

That the clerk of the Supreme Court of the United States shall not hereafter retain of the fees and emoluments of his office for his personal compensation over and above his necessary clerk-hire and the incidental expenses of his office, certified to by the court or by one of its justices appointed by it for that purpose, and to be audited and allowed by the proper accounting officers of the Treasury, a sum exceeding $6,000 a year, or exceeding that rate for any time less than a year.

He will have ample justice, because one of the judges of his own court or the whole court can certify whatever he needs, and they will be sure to certify enough. It will bring him down to something like the salary of a Senator or a Cabinet officer. He will not be very seriously interfered with.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Does this compensation extend only to the services of the chief clerk?

Mr. BECK. To the chief clerk, with allowances such as the court may authorize him to pay for all the assistants he needs.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. The Senator well knows that the business of the Supreme Court can not be conducted by one clerk.

Mr. BECK. I suppose it may not be conducted by less than half a dozen. The judges can certify whatever is necessary to pay him and provide for the pay of his assistants. Why should he take $10 for walking across the hall? Why should he get $25,000 or $30,000 a year for his services? Why should he not have a fixed salary like everybody else? Why should the clerk of the Supreme Court of the United States or of a district court draw fees just as he pleases? Why should there not be some general regulation? If the Judiciary Committee have not found time to devise some means, the House of Representatives have in this provision done justice to all these men by limiting the fees to $3,500 a year, and when the shoe begins to pinch some of them, as I suppose it will, the clerk of the Supreme Court, who is brought down from $20,000 or $25,000 to five or six thousand dollars, or about a Senator's pay, means will be found to correct any evils that exist.

While this may be crude, the judiciary can modify it. If I had any reason to suppose that we were going to get it corrected at this session of Congress I would not object to having the clause stricken out; but that can not be done. Let us put them on the footing now proposed by the House, and let the Judiciary Committee next December regulate it in a form that may be more satisfactory.

Mr. HALE. I do not think that the Committee on Appropriations believed that this revision of the fees and salaries of the clerks of the United States courts was precisely the right thing or a permanent measure; but the House of Representatives, under its undoubted right, finding a great abuse, finding a greivance that had been allowed to go along for years without interruption, saw fit to seek to arrest it and make a provision that is certainly liberal to everybody.

The fees of the clerks of some of these courts are now enormous. They are such as nobody on examination would desire to see perpetuated. All that has been done by the House of Representatives, in which the Committee on Appropriations has joined, is to regulate the matter of salary. It is not revolutionary legislation; it is not overturning existing law; it is not legislation that interferes with the body of law touching anything else excepting the salaries which are treated in this bill and in other appropriation bills.

Although it might be technically subject to the point of order if offered as an amendment in the Senate, coming in as a House provision it is not open to that sort of objection. It simply seeks to deal with salaries. It leaves the clerk of the United States Supreme Court with a salary of $6,000, $1,000 more than a member of Congress gets, and provides $3,500 for the clerks of the other courts.

Some of the things adverted to by the Senator from Kentucky were very noticeable and striking as they appeared before the committee. It was shown that for years this had been allowed to go on until certain clerkships are filled with officials receiving large pay, with no jurisdiction over the matter, and going on from time to time growing and gaining until they amount to sums that nobody on a revision would seek to have maintained.

All that is sought here is that this, as the Senator from Kentucky says, may be regulated and controlled in a reasonable degree; and if the Committee on the Judiciary will take this up next session, as they never have done yet, and provide a proper fee-table and basis for all these clerks, undoubtedly Congress will then gladly accept it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Committee on the Judiciary at the next session, if it is constituted as it is now, I think I can safely say for a majority of its members, if not for all, will not take up anything if the Committee on Appropriations are to dispose of the question now. The Committee on Appropriations may take it up, as they do all other things that apply to the administration of the Government.

Mr. HALE. That will only leave it as it has been heretofore.

Mr. EDMUNDS. No, the Senator is mistaken about that. No member of the Committee on Appropriations, no other Senator, has introduced any resolution or bill upon this subject and sent it to us. If that had been done it would have been attended to. For one, I confess that I never heard until this winter, and that quite recently, that there was any excess of fees or wrong going on, if there be any now, and there probably is, in respect of an excess in these two courts. Therefore, the Committee on the Judiciary can not be accused of having neglected their duties any more than any other Senator may be accused of neglecting his duty in not introducing a proposition upon this subject, upon a matter that had not been called to his attention. That is where it stands.

If the Committee on Appropriations are to be thought now the appropriate organ of the Senate to investigate these questions and endeavor to rectify them (as a part of the appropriations of the Government), you can do the same thing as to every other branch of the public service. On all the appropriation bills that we have had heretofore except the Post-Office appropriation bill, where we did leave legislation on, the Committee on Appropriations themselves have steadily and persistently, and I am very glad to say wisely, rejected everything, and asked us to sustain them in rejecting everything that savored of legislation, as being unwise and improper on an appropriation bill. Now that it comes to the question of regulating the courts of the United States, the Committee on Appropriations have changed their ground, it appears, and propose to regulate that; and they say that if the regulation turns out to be unwise and improper, as it clearly will in a great many respects, the Committee on the Judiciary afterward may correct it. Why so? Why not have the Committee on Appropriations correct it? Certainly the Committee on the Judiciary, if the Senate say that is the proper jurisdiction, will not undertake to do it as it is now constituted. Of course it may not be constituted so again.

Take two or three of these things and see where you are going to land. First, here is a provision that where the same person holds the office of clerk of both a circuit and district court of the United States he shall have the salary of only one of those offices. The salary of these offices is $200 a year, and no more; the rest is fees, and in the circuit and district courts those fees are limited by law, that they shall not exceed altogether $6,000, which I think is the limitation. Take the State of Maine, to begin with. The clerk of the circuit and district court there with the amount of business done would be unable to carry on the business of those courts and get a pay that would support a wife and one child, or a wife alone, if he unfortunately has not any child. Take the State of New Hampshire; it would be still worse. Take the State of Vermont; it would be worse still, because there is very little litigation and the fees are very small. Then you can go around to the State of Florida; I happen to see the Senator from Florida in my eye. I think you may take the State of Georgia even; you may take the State of Mississippi; you can take Arkansas; you can take Nebraska. I am not so sure about Nebraska, because there is a good deal of litigation going on there. Take Nevada, take Oregon, take all the rural States where for the good of mankind and in a settled order of society litigation is small; you are going to provide that the clerks of these courts shall not get even a pittance, because this is sweeping. Take the southern district of the State of New York and you can make the provision very safely, but you must discriminate carefully, district by district and State by State, in order to do justice.

The Committee on Appropriations, I have no doubt, know a great deal more about this business than the Committee on the Judiciary does, but that is the simple fact about that one instance. To be sure, the argument of my friend from Kentucky is, "Never mind, let us do wrong just now, and the Committee on the Judiciary next year, or some other time, can correct it;" but that is not wise and just legislation.

Now that this subject has been brought to the attention of Congress, I am sure that Senators will feel that whoever constitute the Judiciary Committee of the Senate at the next session of Congress should take the matter in hand, and systematize the matter, and correct whatever evils exist. As it is now, this amendment will commit immediately gross injustice upon people who are necessarily employed in the administration of justice in a great many of the States of this Union.

There is no more reason for putting such a provision on this appropriation bill than there is all the other legislation that we have been doing. Undoubtedly the fees of the clerk of the Supreme Court of the United States, and very likely of the supreme court of this District, and I dare say of the southern district of New York, even with the limitations now upon them, ought to be corrected; and the moment attention is drawn to it and anything is sent to the Committee on the Judiciary, Senators may be sure that the committee will do what it can do to correct them by proper legislation.

I hope, therefore, that the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas will be adopted. If we are to be consistent of course it must be.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. From what was said the other day by the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] I supposed the Committee on Appropriations was on the line of reform so far as incorporating general legislation in appropriation bills was concerned, because he was particular to say to the Senate that the committee struck out everything in the naval appropriation bill that had the appearance of general legislation. He felt it his duty to state to the Senate that that was the judgment of the Committee on Appropriations respecting the legislation on that bill. It is strange that an exception should be made in this case against the committee presided over by the distinguished Senator who has just taken his seat, who is so anxious to discharge fully the duties of the Judiciary Committee. Surely he has pointed out enough difficulties already in this amendment that will come about if it goes through in this crude form.

The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK], a while ago, spoke in a very general way with respect to the amount of fees that these clerks receive, but we have got no data before us, no report, no authentic statement from any quarter to show exactly what the fees are, how they are paid, out of what fund they are received, or anything of that kind; but the general declaration is made that they are excessive.

It seems to me that this thing ought to be gone into carefully to prevent the injustice spoken of by the Senator from Vermont. I have heard it said that the clerk of the Supreme Court of the United States receives from $25,000 to $30,000 a year, but I do not know where the proof of that lies.

Mr. BECK. We allow him $6,000 in this bill, and he can not be hurt when he gets that.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. What does the law give him now?

Mr. BECK. Ask the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I ask the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BECK. My information is that it is a very large sum, much more than any employé of the Government ought to have.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Is there any law to-day that gives the clerk of the Supreme Court of the United States $20,000? If so, I want to know where it is. If there is such a law let us repeal it at once. Bring in a bill and let us consider it by general consent.

Mr. HAWLEY. I think I can give the Senator a little information on the point he is inquiring about.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I should like to hear it.

Mr. HAWLEY. It has been very carefully ascertained.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President——

Mr. HAWLEY. I will occupy the floor but a moment.

Mr. BECK. I was about to say that I am now advised that from the investigation which was made in the other House it was shown that the clerk of the Supreme Court received last year $29,400. That is stated on authority.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Did that come out of the Treasury of the United States?

Mr. BECK. It comes out of the people in great part.

Mr. HAWLEY. The Senator from Florida made an inquiry and I was going to give the information as near as I can get it at this moment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Certainly.

Mr. HAWLEY. The inquiry was made elsewhere. The clerk of the Supreme Court, according to his own statement, received in 1880 $36,120.17, and paid out $16,170.79, leaving him net the sum $19,949.38. For the year 1881 his total receipts were $44,845.80, the total expenditures $15,368.69, the net balance $29,477.71. He is the only clerk, I understand, whose fees are not fixed by law directly. That is certain which can be rendered certain, the law says. By the act of May 8, 1792, re-enacted February 28, 1799, the compensation of this clerk was fixed "for his attendance in court $10 per day, and for his other services double the fees of the clerk of the supreme court of the State in which the Supreme Court of the United States shall be holden." Thereby he was referred to the courts of Maryland for his fees and allowed to double them. This is the only law I understand now warranting any fees whatever. Some of the fees of the clerk of the court of appeals of Maryland, and they are doubled in this court, are given in tables as follows: Recording, &c., per folio, 8 pounds of tobacco, or 16 cents, now 28 cents; entering judgment, 47 pounds of tobacco, or 94 cents, now equal to $1.64½; and so on. There is quite a long table. A committee of the other House, whose duty it was, made an elaborate inquiry into the matter.

I am a much younger legislator than the Senator from Vermont, but I am surprised to hear him say that he only heard of this matter recently. I have heard every single year of the limited number of years that I have been in Congress complaints about the ill-regulated and extravagant fees of the clerk of the Supreme Court and the various offices of it, the great fees charged for copies, and the extraordinary salary. I believe there is but one salary in the United States that exceeds that of the clerk of the Supreme Court, and that is the salary of the President of the United States.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. When was the statute passed to which the Senator refers?

Mr. HAWLEY. In 1799.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. It just shows this: that the business of the court of course has increased, and the hand of legislation has not been brought in to make a change corresponding with the increase of business. I suppose that that was a very reasonable provision when it was made in 1799, when there were but a few cases in the court, or even at a later day, and the increase of the salary has been in consequence of the great increase in the business of the Supreme Court. I think that when Judge Marshall was on the bench there were not more than thirty-two cases on the Calendar. The law of which the Senator from Connecticut complains, at the time of its enactment was a reasonable provision, but the business of the court has gone on and now there are four or five hundred cases where there were formerly thirty.

This is surely a matter that ought to be regulated by the Judiciary Committee, and I think it is very far out of the province of the Committee on Appropriations to undertake to do this thing. There is no doubt an evil here and it ought to be rectified, and the fees if excessive ought to be cut down; but I think it is equally as great an evil to undertake in this crude way to do it on an appropriation bill. This money that is spoken of is not money taken from the public Treasury; it is not money that the Committee on Appropriations is called upon to appropriate. The Committee on Appropriations has nothing to do with the money that the clerk of the Supreme Court receives in fees. It does not come out of the Treasury; it is taxed against the unsuccessful suitors who happen to go into court.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Does not the Senator think that it ought to go into the Treasury?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Possibly it ought, but the business of the Committee on Appropriations is not to legislate money into the Treasury; it is to legislate it out, which they do very promptly. It seems to me that the Committee on the Judiciary ought to be intrusted with the reform required in this case. I think there ought to be some change of the law.

Mr. SLATER. I desire to know if the question is divisible. If it is I should like to have a separate vote upon that part of the motion to strike out embraced from line 2335 to the word "statutes," in line 2344, which has relation to the clerks of the circuit and district courts. I am not very well informed on this question, but I am very certain that in the Pacific States this provision would work a very severe hardship and produce very great confusion. For that reason I should like to have a separate vote on that question if it can be divided in that way.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the opinion of the Chair the motion to strike out can be divided, and a separate vote can be taken on the part indicated by the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. ALLISON. I only desire to say a few words on this amendment. I will say to the Senator from Vermont that the Committee on Appropriations has no desire whatever to interfere with the proper functions of any other committee of this body. The Committee on Appropriations would never have undertaken to regulate or dispose of this question on an appropriation bill, but we found it here coming from the House of Representatives, and we felt that it was a matter, as our attention had been called to it, that in many respects needed reformation. It is of no more value to the Senate that the Committee on Appropriations should move to strike this out than that the Senator from Arkansas should move to strike it out. When it is stricken out, as proposed here, it is still in the bill and will be the subject of conference. The real trouble in this matter is the difficulty we have with another body that has rules which allow this sort of legislation.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But you have put it off all the other bills.

Mr. ALLISON. We have put off, as the Senator from Vermont very properly says, most of the legislation we found on other appropriation bills; but this is a matter regulating the courts and reducing the compensation, and it seemed to be excessive in some instances, and we did not feel in the Committee on Appropriations that it was our particular duty to recommend that this provision should be stricken out. I merely wanted that understood.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is divisible, and the Secretary will read the part the Senator from Oregon [Mr. SLATER] moves to strike out.

The PRINCIPAL LEGISLATIVE CLERK. After the word "dollars," in line 2335, it is proposed to strike out the proviso down to and including the word "statutes," in line 2344; as follows:

Provided, That where the same person holds the office of clerk in both the circuit and district courts of any district, he shall be allowed by the Attorney-General to retain for his personal compensation of the fees received by him, after the payment of office expenses, the prescribed maximum for one office only, to wit, the sum of $3,500 per annum; and this proviso shall apply in its full extent to the clerks of courts mentioned in section 1840 of the Revised Statutes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. SLATER].

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 13, noes 10; no quorum voting.

Mr. EDMUNDS. We may as well take the yeas and nays, and settle the question.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 29, nays 19; as follows:

YEAS—29.

Anthony,	Edmunds,	Jackson,	Sherman,
Barrow,	Garland,	Jones of Florida,	Slater,
Blair,	Harris,	Jones of Nevada,	Voorhees,
Brown,	Harrison,	Kellogg,	Walker,
Call,	Hawley,	Lapham,	Windom.
Cameron of Wis.,	Hill,	Miller of N. Y.,
Coke,	Hoar,	Morrill,
Davis of Ill.,	Ingalls,	Rollins,

NAYS—19.

Aldrich,	Frye,	Maxey,	Sawyer,
Allison,	Gorman,	Morgan,	Vance,
Beck,	Groome,	Pendleton,	Van Wyck,
Conger,	Logan,	Pugh,	Vest.
Davis of W. Va.,	McDill,	Ransom,

ABSENT—28.

Bayard,	Farley,	Jonas,	Platt,
Butler,	Ferry,	Lamar,	Plumb,
Camden,	George,	McMillan,	Saulsbury,
Cameron of Pa.,	Grover,	McPherson,	Saunders,
Cockrell,	Hale,	Mahone,	Sewell,
Dawes,	Hampton,	Miller of Cal.,	Tabor,
Fair,	Johnston,	Mitchell,	Williams.

So the motion to strike out was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the residue of the clause moved by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. GARLAND] to be stricken out.

Mr. BECK. I ask for the yeas and nays on that.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The remaining proviso which it is moved to strike out will be read.

The Principal Legislative Clerk read as follows:

And provided further, That the clerk of the supreme court of the District of Columbia shall make to the Attorney-General his semi-annual report of fees and emoluments in the same manner and under the same regulations as clerks of the other courts of the United States, under and in accordance with section 833 of the Revised Statutes, the maximum of whose compensation, after the payment of office expenses and other allowances granted by the Attorney-General, shall not exceed the maximum of $3,500, and the balance of said fees and emoluments of his office shall be paid into the Treasury according to the provisions of section 844 of the Revised Statutes: Provided, That the clerk of the Supreme Court of the United States shall not hereafter retain of the fees and emoluments of his office for his personal compensation over and above his necessary clerk-hire and the incidental expenses of his office, certified to by the court, or by one of its justices appointed by it for that purpose, and to be audited and allowed by the proper accounting officer of the Treasury, a sum exceeding $6,000 a year, or exceeding that rate for any time less than a year; and the surplus of such fees and emoluments shall be paid into the Treasury as provided by law in cases of clerks of the circuit and district courts of the United States: And provided further, That so much of section 3 of the act of February 28, 1799, as relates to the compensation of said clerk for his attendance in court is hereby repealed: And provided further, That the Supreme Court is hereby authorized and empowered to prepare the table of fees to be charged by the clerk thereof, and until the same is thus prepared the fees therein charged for recording or copying any paper or record shall not exceed 14 cents per folio.

Mr. BECK. I have the information now very accurately that the Senator from Florida [Mr. JONES] asked me to give him, presented by a committee thoroughly competent to obtain it. These are the facts: The clerk of the Supreme Court of the United States, according to his own statement, received in 1880 $36,120.17, and paid out $16,170.79, leaving him the sum of $19,949.38. For the year 1881 his total receipts were $44,845.80; his total expenditures were $15,368.69, and the net balance of fees was $29,477.11.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Has the Senator got the receipts for 1882?

Mr. BECK. No, but for 1881.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The fees were probably larger for 1882.

Mr. BECK. The details were given as follows:

The charges and fees for the October term of 1880 were substantially as follows:

For fees in the cases	$32,466 86
For admissions to the bar	2,270 00
For salary, $10 per day, 105 days	1,050 00
For recording opinions of the court, October term, 1879	1,610 00
	37,396 86

There were other items and perquisites in small amounts, and some of the above amount has not been paid, but his gross receipts were for that term as stated by the clerk the sum of $36,120.17.

The incidental expenses of his office for the October term, 1881, as stated before, were $15,368.69, made up as follows:

Charles B. Beall, deputy clerk	$3,000 00
H. C. McKenney, assistant clerk	1,800 00
James D. Maher, assistant clerk	1,500 00
Assistant clerk (vacancy)	1,020 00
Assistant clerk (vacancy)	1,020 00
One messenger	420 00
Printing opinions of the court	2,200 00
For copyists, postage, buckets, brooms, ice, &c	4,408 69
	15,368 69

Of the last item the clerk has not furnished a bill of particulars. He says it is largely made up in copying, for which he paid at the rate of 10 cents per folio.

The same fees are taxed against the United States as against other litigants for like services, and are paid by the Treasurer of the United States from the appropriations annually made to pay clerks of courts on an account rendered by the clerk and certified by the Chief-Justice.

The amount paid them by the United States for several years past will appear by the following letter:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, FIRST COMPTROLLER'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., February 3, 1883.

SIR: In answer to your inquiry this morning I have to state that the fees earned from the United States by the clerks of the Supreme Court of the United States during the terms specified below have been allowed on the adjustment of their accounts at the Treasury, and the sums named have been paid:

October term, 1877–'78	$5,833 22
October term, 1878–'79	7,488 12
October term, 1879–'80	5,839 59
October term, 1880–'81	4,875 45
October term, 1881–'82	5,516 46

Very respectfully,

WM. LAWRENCE, Comptroller.

Hon. EDWIN WILLITS,
House of Representatives.

I desire only to say that when the House of Representatives have gone to the bottom of this thing and have cut down this salary to $6,000 and given him all the other assistance he needs, if he runs up to $15,000, it is time this great wrong was stopped. No mere clerk should receive $29,000 a year as this clerk has been getting. The Senate may strike it out if they like to. Here is the record of the fact.

Mr. GARLAND. I will detain the Senate but a very few minutes. The years 1881 and 1882, as read by the Senator from Kentucky and a few moments ago by the Senator from Connecticut, are notoriously, so far as litigation in the Supreme Court is concerned, exceptional years. Any one who is familiar with the reports of the decisions of that court or who will examine the three volumes covering those two years will see that it was a time when the large bond cases and railroad cases were litigated there, and the amounts of money paid into the court were much larger than in previous years.

A good deal has been said here that is not proper to be said, but I have made some examination in the clerk's office of that court, and I am assured by the very best of evidence that can be secured that when the revenues of that office for 1882 are accounted for they will go but very little more than half above those of 1881, which seems to be the largest year. Injustice is done this office because you have taken now as your guide those two exceptional years. I wish the Senate would bear that in mind.

I am perfectly willing that the clerk of the Supreme Court shall have a fair and honorable compensation, a good compensation, for I never did believe in a cheap compensation for anything or for anybody. A cheap doctor is the way to the grave; a cheap lawyer is the way to the gallows; a cheap anything is not worth having.

The Senate is called upon to strike out the fee of this clerk of $10 for attending the court, an allowance that he has had for years and years, not for dancing attendance across the hall, as the Senator from Kentucky says, but he must absolutely be there at the right hand of the judges through their entire sitting to attend to them. The Senate will bear in mind that it is not proposed to give him the fee of a marshal or of a janitor of a building, but to strike out this $10 a day and leave him nothing.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. But by the amendment of the committee we allow him $6,000 a year.

Mr. GARLAND. I am speaking of the attendance. Six thousand dollars a year is a mere pittance.

Mr. BECK. That is a thousand dollars more than a Senator gets.

Mr. GARLAND. It is $1,000 more than a Senator gets, and the Senator from Kentucky instead of performing the duties of that office would rather split rails at 75 cents a hundred. Talk about $5,000 being adequate compensation for a member of Congress! I do not consider that it is one-half the compensation that should be paid.

Mr. BECK. The judges of the district courts all over the country generally get only $3,500.

Mr. GARLAND. That is true. I would rather do the labor of a judge of a district court than to do the labor of this clerk, so far as the labor is concerned. I know what I am talking about when I am speaking of this matter. But that is not all. You absolutely turn the Supreme Court by a provision here into an auditing office to go over the accounts of the clerk and certify them. That is a matter that is unheard of. It is an innovation that is illegitimate and improper. It does not belong to this legislation. I ask the Senate to stop and reflect. I think the clerk of the Supreme Court should have a good compensation. I do not think $6,000 is enough. We are putting an innovation in here at this late hour of the day that is unheard of so far as this court has been conducted, now for a hundred years almost. I ask the Senate to pause before they do this thing. Let the fees not only of this clerk but of all other clerks belonging to the judicial establishment of the country be regulated by proper legislation, and for one I will take a hand very cheerfully in doing that, but I ask the Senate not to leave this provision upon this appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. GARLAND] to strike out the proviso, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. PUGH (when Mr. JONAS's name was called). I wish to state that the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. JONAS] is paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SEWELL].

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 16, nays 26; as follows:

YEAS—16.

Anthony,	Cameron of Wis.,	Harris,	Slater,
Barrow,	Davis of Ill.,	Hoar,	Vest,
Brown,	Edmunds,	Jones of Florida,	Voorhees,
Call,	Garland,	Kellogg,	Walker.

NAYS—26.

Allison,	Gorman,	Maxey,	Rollins,
Beck,	Groome,	Miller of N. Y.,	Sawyer,
Blair,	Hawley,	Morgan,	Vance,
Coke,	Jackson,	Pendleton,	Van Wyck,
Conger,	Jones of Nevada,	Plumb,	Windom.
Davis of W. Va.,	Lamar,	Pugh,
Frye,	Lapham,	Ransom,

ABSENT—34.

Aldrich,	Ferry,	Jonas,	Platt,
Bayard,	George,	Logan,	Saulsbury,
Butler,	Grover,	McDill,	Saunders,
Camden,	Hale,	McMillan,	Sewell,
Cameron of Pa.,	Hampton,	McPherson,	Sherman,
Cockrell,	Harrison,	Mahone,	Tabor,
Dawes,	Hill,	Miller of Cal.,	Williams.
Fair,	Ingalls,	Mitchell,
Farley,	Johnston,	Morrill,

So the motion to strike out was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The provisos just voted upon remaining in the bill and the former proviso having been stricken out, it will be necessary to change the words "and provided further," in line 2344, so as to read "provided."

Mr. ALLISON. There will be no objection to that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection, and that change will be made.

Mr. BROWN. I desire to offer a single amendment at the end of the bill which I submitted to-day to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, and I think it will not be objectionable. I offer it at the request of a member of the House of Representatives, because there was an omission. As I understand, the assistants or messengers of the committees in the House of Representatives, except the Ways and Means Committee, and the Committee on Appropriations, are detailed from the staff of the Doorkeeper, and they draw regularly $1,400 per annum. The Ways and Means Committee and the Committee on Appropriations each select their own messenger and he gets only $1,000. There was $200 additional compensation put in the appropriation bill by the House for the messenger to the Committee on Appropriations, but by some oversight or mistake they failed to put in a like amount for the assistant to the Committee of Ways and Means. The Committee of Ways and Means met about the middle of November, as I understand, to consider the tariff bill, and they were in session a good length of time before Congress met. Then the assistant was here all that time employed by them all day and occasionally at night, and he had to incur considerable additional expense.

Mr. ALLISON. I will say to the Senator from Georgia that I will consent as far as I have any power that the provision he wishes to move may go in with the understanding that it shall meet the approval of the House Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BROWN. I do not desire it unless it does.

Mr. ALLISON. I understand that it is an omission which they intended to correct.

Mr. BROWN. That is what I am informed. If it does not meet their approval, of course I shall expect the conference committee to strike it out, but if they strike it out they ought to strike out the other clause relating to the pay of the assistant clerk of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. ALLISON. I suggest that it be put in as an amendment to that paragraph.

Mr. BROWN. Very well. I move to amend the last paragraph of the bill by adding:

And to pay John R. Christy, being the difference between his salary at $1,000 and that of a messenger at $1,200 per annum, from July 1, 1882, to June 30, 1883, $200, the same to be immediately available. But this appropriation shall not be construed as an increase of said salary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BROWN].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LAPHAM. I now desire to offer the amendment of which I gave notice when the clause of the bill was reached in the reading. In line 89 I move to strike out "one" and insert "two" before "hundred;" so as to make the clause read:

The post-office at Brooklyn, New York: For continuation, $200,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New York [Mr. LAPHAM].

Mr. LAPHAM. Let me state the facts, Mr. President. A large number of bills for the erection of public buildings were passed at the first session of this Congress. Among them was one for a post-office or a public building at Brooklyn, at a cost of $800,000. Only $300,000 of that was included in this bill last year. At the same time, at the city of Rochester, a building to cost $300,000 was provided for, and $200,000 of that amount was appropriated. This bill contains $70,000 more for that building. At the same time a building at the city of Syracuse was authorized at $200,000; $100,000 was appropriated for that, and now $70,000 more is added. Therefore this proportion of $200,000 to the whole sum does not make it at all equal to what has been already appropriated for the other public buildings which were authorized by the same Congress. Rochester has had two-thirds of its appropriation; Syracuse has had more than two-thirds of its appropriation; and this appropriation will amount to only $100,000 more than one-half of what was provided for in the bill originally.

The sum of $500,000, $300,000 appropriated last year and $200,000 which I propose to have appropriated now, are necessary to enable the authorities of the city of Brooklyn to purchase the site and lay the foundation for the building which they are to erect. With the sum of $100,000 only added, it will be impossible for them to do it. I am told that the Committee on Appropriations declined, upon the application of the authorities from Brooklyn, to insert $200,000 for the reason that they were paying a larger sum for the site of the building than ought to be paid. Upon that subject I beg to refer Senators for one moment to two or three or more cases which bear a strong analogy to the case of Brooklyn and show a very strong contrast to what it is claimed Brooklyn should do with reference to the purchase of the site.

In the city of Cincinnati, in Ohio, the site for the public building cost $708,036.60, and there has been expended on the building already $4,717,454, and in this very bill $250,000 more is provided for the building at Cincinnati. Brooklyn has a population double that of Cincinnati. Brooklyn is the third city in the United States in population, and therefore I submit is entitled to better consideration than has been given to it by the committee in this respect.

Let me take another case. The site of the public building in Boston, Massachusetts, cost $1,329,095.84. There has already been expended upon it $5,729,295, and in this very bill $100,000 more is appropriated. Yet Brooklyn has a population of 200,000 more than the city of Boston.

Let me take another case. The site of the public building in the city of Baltimore cost $550,000. There have been expended upon that already, up to the 1st of September last, $1,054,000, and in this very bill $125,000 additional appropriation is given to Baltimore. The population of Baltimore is a little more than one-half that of Brooklyn.

Take the case of Philadelphia. The site of the public building in that city cost $1,490,200. There have been expended upon that building $5,650,000, and in this very bill the Committee on Appropriations give them $400,000 more. Philadelphia is the only city in the list to which I have referred that has a population exceeding that of the city of Brooklyn.

I repeat, the city of Brooklyn is the third city in the United States. It has been asking for the past thirteen years for provision to be made for a public building in that city by the Government of the United States. At the last session of this Congress it secured the passage of a bill, but only $300,000 were appropriated in the sundry civil act toward the construction of the building, and they want $200,000 more to enable them to purchase the site and lay the foundation. I trust that the Senate will consent to appropriate the sum asked.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New York.

Mr. ALLISON. I raise a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. BECK. I want to say a word before the point of order is raised.

Mr. ALLISON. It is certainly not in order.

Mr. BECK. This is a provision above all others that I desire to call attention to as renewing the old bad system of going on without estimates and defying the law. On the twelfth day of July, 1882, Congress passed the following bill:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to purchase a site for, and cause to be erected thereon, a suitable building, with fire-proof vaults therein, for the accommodation of the post-office, internal-revenue offices, and other Government offices, at the city of Brooklyn, State of New York. The plans, specifications, and full estimates for said building shall be previously made and approved according to law, and shall not exceed for the site and building complete the sum of $800,000.

There is a peremptory order of Congress putting that limitation upon it. They desire now to get $200,000 more in addition to the $300,000 given them last year to spend for a site, and they avowed to us that it will cost a million and a half, and they will not pledge themselves to build it for that. There has been no plan, no estimate, no suggestion made that they intend to build it for $800,000. In the face of the fact that the total cost was limited by law to $800,000, it is proposed to spend $500,000 for the site, with an admission that $1,000,000 will not more than build it. The Architect of the Treasury tells us that he does not pretend to say it will be built for less than $1,500,000. I say we ought to stop this thing here and now. I would rather strike out the $100,000 given by the House than add any more to it. If the authorities of the city of Brooklyn and gentlemen representing that great city will come and say they want a building costing $2,000,000 and submit plans and estimates, showing the necessity for it in that great city, I would vote $2,000,000 more cheerfully than I would vote $100,000 in defiance of the law we have passed, until they do conform to the law and give us some assurance that we are not going back to the old system under which the New York post-office and the Boston post-office and a dozen other buildings were erected. We have in the last six years carefully and steadily sought to put down and have passed a law to prevent the repetition of these things. The chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, who I see before me, has been very careful whenever the thing was brought to him to see to it that everything was done before the appropriation was made. I do not propose that the city of Brooklyn shall come in now and defy our authority.

Mr. GROOME. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order is raised. Is this amendment recommended by a standing committee?

Mr. LAPHAM. I can not say that it is.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not.

Mr. GROOME. Before the point of order is passed on, I should like to say one word. An allusion has been made to the public building in Baltimore of such a character as to indicate that that building has cost more than was originally intended. The original appropriation of $550,000 about which the Senator from New York spoke was made expressly for the purpose of purchasing the site and it was contemplated that the building would cost largely more. Nothing has transpired as yet to indicate that that building will cost more than was originally expected.

Mr. LAPHAM. I do not see how the point of order can lie against this amendment. We passed at the last session of this Congress a bill authorizing the erection of a public building in Brooklyn to cost the sum of $800,000. That was the estimate. It does not need the estimate of any committee. I am not asking any appropriation beyond what is provided in the act itself. It will be time for the honorable Senator from Kentucky to visit his anathemas upon Brooklyn and upon us when we ask for more money than is named in the law authorizing the erection of this building. We are only asking now for five of the eight hundred thousand dollars. When we come to the doors of Congress and ask for more than is named in the act I shall expect to hear the Senator from Kentucky, who seems to delight as much in denunciation as in anything else. He says upon this floor to us what he pleases with respect to the application, but while we are within the sum named in the act which authorized the building, I submit that neither he nor any other Senator has just cause of complaint, and I submit with great respect that this point of order can not be raised against a proposition to include in the sundry civil bill an appropriation within the sum named in the public act for the erection of this building in the city of Brooklyn. It is not a case that requires any estimate of a committee. We have the estimate of Congress and the solemn act of Congress upon the subject.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, is this subject disposed of?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No, sir; a point of order is raised. There is an existing law providing that a public building shall be built at Brooklyn costing $800,000. The Chair thinks the amendment is in order, because it is to carry out the provisions of that existing law, to say how much shall be appropriated this year, and it is for the Senate to say whether the appropriation shall be made or not. The question is on striking out "one" and inserting "two" in line 89.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope that will not be done.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New York [Mr. LAPHAM].

Mr. LAPHAM called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

Mr. ALLISON. Here is a public building authorized with a limited expenditure of $800,000, and this amendment of the Senator from New York is intended to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to buy a site that shall cost $500,000.

Mr. LAPHAM. That is a mistake.

Mr. ALLISON. I happen to know what the object of these people is about this building. They came before the committee and wanted us to increase the appropriation for the very purpose of paying $400,000 or $500,000 for a site.

Mr. LAPHAM. "Four hundred thousand dollars or five hundred thousand dollars" is not five hundred thousand dollars. They want this sum in order to purchase a site and erect the foundations of this structure during the coming season. That is what they are wanting it for, and they are acting in good faith. Why this prejudice should exist against carrying out an act of this Congress passed at the last session, I am unable to comprehend.

Mr. EDMUNDS. And from the Committee on Appropriations too.

Mr. LAPHAM. From any committee, the Committee on Appropriations or any other committee. I can not fathom it; I do not see why any such feeling as this should exist in respect to the measure.

The Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. JACKSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT].

Mr. PUGH (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. MITCHELL. I paired, reserving the right to make a quorum. I vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 24, nays 21; as follows:

YEAS—24.

Aldrich,	Davis of Ill.,	Hoar,	Mitchell,
Anthony,	Edmunds,	Jones of Nevada,	Morrill,
Blair,	Frye,	Kellogg,	Rollins,
Call,	Garland,	Lapham,	Sawyer,
Cameron of Wis.,	Hawley,	Mahone,	Vest,
Conger,	Hill,	Miller of N. Y.,	Windom.

NAYS—21.

Allison,	Davis of W. Va.,	Maxey,	Vance,
Barrow,	Groome,	Morgan,	Voorhees,
Bayard,	Harris,	Pendleton,	Walker.
Beck,	Harrison,	Plumb,
Brown,	Ingalls,	Ransom,
Coke,	McDill,	Slater,

ABSENT—31.

Butler,	George,	Jones of Florida,	Saulsbury,
Camden,	Gorman,	Lamar,	Saunders,
Cameron of Pa.,	Grover,	Logan,	Sewell,
Cockrell,	Hale,	McMillan,	Sherman,
Dawes,	Hampton,	McPherson,	Tabor,
Fair,	Jackson,	Miller of Cal.,	Van Wyck,
Farley,	Johnston,	Platt,	Williams.
Ferry,	Jonas,	Pugh,

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VANCE. I am authorized and instructed by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate to offer the following amendment, to come in at the end of line 2474, on page 101:

To enable the Acting Secretary of the Senate to pay the officers and employés of the Senate borne on the annual and session rolls on the 3d day of March, 1883, one month's extra pay at the rate of compensation then paid them by law, which sum shall be immediately available.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I understand there are a few employés here who are not on any roll, and that this provides for all the employés, whether on the roll or not. I understand there are a few employés about the Senate who are on neither of the rolls, that are paid a per diem, and it is intended to cover all, as I understand.

Mr. VANCE. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE].

Mr. HOAR. Will the Chair be good enough to state the question again?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The ACTING SECRETARY. At the end of line 2474 it is moved to insert:

To enable the Acting Secretary of the Senate to pay the officers and employés of the Senate borne on the annual and session rolls on the 3d day of March, 1883, one month's extra pay at the rate of compensation then paid them by law, which sum shall be immediately available.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to say one word. The employés of the Senate are paid for the session as for four months under existing law, and I desire to test the sense of the Senate upon this amendment, because if it is the sense of the Senate that we shall pay this additional month's salary, I desire for one to know what it means.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. It is intended to pay all, not only the session employés but the annual employés also, I understand. It is thirteen months' pay in some cases for one year's service.

Mr. GARLAND. Do I understand the Senator from Iowa to say that if this amendment prevails there will be two months' pay added to our employés?

Mr. ALLISON. Under the appropriation for employés of the Senate and the House a long session is reckoned at seven months and a short session at four months. A month's extra pay of course gives all the employés of both Houses five months' pay for this session.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. And thirteen months for the year.

Mr. CONGER. I do not think that is in any permanent law. That was for one year. Why should it be claimed now to defeat this that it was a permanent law? I think it can not be a permanent law.

Mr. VOORHEES. I should like to understand this question and I ask the attention of the Senator from Iowa. He has made a statement which I do not understand. Is it held by the existing law that all the Senate employés receive a month's extra pay for this session and a similar time extra for a long session without any additional legislation upon the subject? If that is the case, it is the first time I have ever heard of it.

Mr. RANSOM. It is impossible that such a law can apply to the annual officers.

Mr. ALLISON. It does not appiy of course to the annual officers.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Why should it not?

Mr. ALLISON. They are paid per annum. They can not be paid for thirteen months in one year. I am speaking only of the session employés.

Mr. VOORHEES. I sympathize with the Senator from Iowa in his desire to see this matter fixed so as to do the best that can be done. I take it we shall do pretty much what we have done heretofore. The House generally has its way and bullies us out of ours. I know it has been so for the last three years, that they have made us yield to their arrangement and provision for their employés and made us yield our wish in regard to our own.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Does not my friend think that if the House pays for five months the Senate ought also to do it?

Mr. VOORHEES. Yes; and I should be glad to see the conference committee take that ground, and I do not know but that my friend from West Virginia will be a member of it——

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Oh, no; but if I were I should insist on the Senate employés having the same pay as the House employés.

Mr. VOORHEES. I should be glad to think that would be insisted on and adhered to when you get into conference better than my experience in the past shows that it has been. I should be glad that the Senate conferees, whoever they may be, would feel instructed to stand by the sense and wishes of the Senate with one-half the pertinacity the Representatives of the House do, and then we should have justice done to our employés.

Mr. BECK. I desire to state to the Senator from Indiana the mistake that was made last year, if we are going into this little private matter now. Out of excessive courtesy to the House the Senate failed to strike out the House provision for their employés last year; and when we placed our own on the same footing with theirs, they refused to agree to our provision, and therefore retained their own.

Mr. VOORHEES. I remember it perfectly.

Mr. BECK. We have not been so polite this year, but have stricken out their provision, so that if we agree to this they will have a chance to agree with us; and whether this passes or not our employés will be treated as well as theirs, or neither will get anything extra.

Mr. VOORHEES. That is right.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, I think there is perhaps a shadow of justice in allowing additional compensation to those employés who are borne upon the session-rolls and are paid simply for the time that the Senate is sitting here. They have of course to make their preparations to depart, and there is some necessary consumption of time before they can resume their other avocations. But with respect to those who are borne upon the rolls at an annual salary, I do not think that there is the slightest excuse for this additional compensation. At the expiration of this session of the Senate which expires on the 3d of March they will draw their annual compensation for nine months, until Congress meets in December, without rendering any other public service whatever. They will have the emoluments of their office and will be masters of their own time, to employ it as they see fit. I can see no reason that would not apply to every other officer of the Government. If the employés who are borne upon the rolls at an annual salary should have a month's additional compensation, I do not see why we should not, nor do I see why the President should not and every other officer of the Government. There is no reason in it; there is no justice in it; and I should regret very much to have the Senate agree to what I conceive to be a very vicious and unjust precedent.

Mr. ALLISON. I have the law to which I alluded a while ago.

And wherever the words "during the session" occur in the foregoing they shall be constred to mean four months.

That covers the employés of both House and Senate; I mean session employés.

Mr. HARRIS. Is that an appropriation bill or a general law?

Mr. ALLISON. It is the appropriation bill passed last year, which covers the present fiscal year and applies to this short session.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is the general legislation on appropriation bills that is forever permanent. That is all.

Mr. INGALLS. So that employés of the Senate who are paid for the session will receive their compensation to the 4th day of April; and if we pass this amendment that is now here they will be paid to the 4th day of May, which will be two months' compensation without rendering any service.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE] in behalf of the Committee on Contingent Expenses.

Mr. CONGER. I do not want any misunderstanding. This law says:

And wherever the words "during the session" occur in the foregoing, they shall be construed to mean four months.

That is in this bill, one appropriation bill.

Mr. INGALLS. That appropriation expires on the 30th of June, 1883.

Mr. CONGER. Yes; I thought it was in the appropriation of that year, and I said so.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That covers the present case.

Mr. INGALLS. It covers the current year until the 30th of June.

Mr. CONGER. I do not know what appropriation this is.

Mr. ALLISON. It is the act of last session.

Mr. CONGER. It only applies to the appropriation of that year.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to ask the Senator from Michigan a question for information. Does he intend to give these employés two months' extra pay or one?

Mr. CONGER. One.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then it is very easy to frame the amendment so that there shall be no mistake about it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE].

The question being taken, there were on a divison—ayes 12, noes 15.

Mr. EDMUNDS. No quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is not a quorum voting.

Mr. CONGER. I desire to say, in regard to the pay of employés and clerks of the two Houses, there is no word about "session" in regard to their payment in this appropriation bill. They are to be paid so much per month. The word "session" is used in the law of last year for some purpose, but there is nothing in it in reference to the length of time or the payment by the session of clerks.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I suggest to the Senator if there is any doubt about it it could be easily made definite, as the Senator from Vermont has said. I do not want to amend the amendment, but it can be made definite. Everybody admits that the employés ought to have one month's extra pay, I understand, except those on the annual roll. I suppose there is no Senator here who does not wish that done.

Mr. ALLISON. I call for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair was endeavoring to see if there was a quorum.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The shortest way is to have the yeas and nays.

Mr. CONGER. If the conference committee understand that there shall be a month's extra service and it is included in either provision that is all I care for.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The yeas and nays have been called for on the amendment. That is the shortest way to get a quorum.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CALL. It seems to me very clear that this amendment ought to be adopted. There can be no question but that it provides for one month's pay. Suppose the appropriation bill of last year had said this session should be construed to last four months and the employés should receive four month's pay, would not this amendment to this bill happening at this time avoid it and prescribe the law and insure them one month's compensation? There can be no question about that.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Will the Secretary read the amendment again?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The Acting Secretary read the amendment of Mr. VANCE.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. It includes the session and annual employés.

Mr. BROWN. I move to amend it by saying instead of one month's pay, "one month only of extra pay."

Mr. ALLISON. I suggest to the Senator from Georgia that he simply provide that the session employés shall be paid until the 4th day of April, 1883.

Mr. BROWN. I have no objection to that. I understand we only want to give one month.

Mr. ALLISON. Confine it to special and session employés.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator from Georgia be good enough to specify his amendment?

Mr. BROWN. The amendment I offer is, after "one month," to insert the words "only of;" so as to read:

One month only of extra pay.

Mr. VANCE. I accept that amendment. The object is to secure one month's extra pay.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Carolina accepts the amendment of the Senator from Georgia, so as to read "one month only of extra pay." Shall the yeas and nays be called?

Mr. EDMUNDS. We must have them to get a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. But the Chair has counted and discovered that there is a quorum present.

Mr. ALLISON. It would be better to say that these employés shall be paid until the 5th day of April, 1883; I mean those not borne on the annual roll?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator can put that on by way of proviso.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Read the amendment at the desk as it now stands.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

To enable the Acting Secretary of the Senate to pay the officers and employés of the Senate borne on the annual and session rolls on the 3d day of March, 1883, one month only of extra pay, at the rate of compesation then paid them by law, which sum shall be immediately available.

Mr. INGALLS. That includes the annual clerks.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That apparently includes the annual clerks, and if this existing law now provides for it, for aught I see it will make a double pay for that month, and whether the Senate wants to do that or not I do not know. The Committee on Appropriations ought to know.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not know what the Senate wants.

Mr. VEST. Does this legislation apply to all the officers of the Senate, those who draw annual salaries as well as the session employés?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The Acting Secretary read the amendment.

Mr. INGALLS. If you insert the word "not" before "borne," and strike out the word "session," you would include those whom you wish to pay.

Mr. VEST. Does that apply then to the Secretary of the Senate, to the Sergeant-at-Arms, and all the other officers who are paid annually?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would not like to answer the question. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations probably can answer it.

Mr. ALLISON. Of course the Sergeant-at-Arms and our Acting Secretary and all our other friends here have annual salaries, and they are officers and employés of the Senate, and of course would be covered by this provision.

Mr. VEST. And so they would receive a month's extra salary?

Mr. ALLISON. According to the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. VEST. It does not apply to Senators. [Laughter.]

Mr. ALLISON. I believe we are not officers of the Senate. [Laughter.]

Mr. VEST. I have all my life detested the character of a small economist. In all the legislative bodies I have ever served in I have voted, I believe, for the largest amount of compensation I could consistently with my conscience vote for; but if we employ officers and they understand what they are doing, where is the necessity, where is the principle, where is the justice of our voting one month's extra pay to them? The whole thing is wrong, and we are juggling with each other when we undertake to do it.

I have the kindest feelings for the employés of the Senate. I should like, personally, to make them a donation out of my personal and private fortune, if I had any, but not having it I am not able to do so. But why should we continue this sort of thing? Here are gentlemen who are very anxious to receive these positions knowing what they are to receive by the year, knowing what they are to receive by the month, and for a single position there are generally about a thousand applicants or a hundred at least; and still, after all the scramble to get these places, at the end of every session we are asked to vote for one month's extra pay. We should either vote larger salaries or we should stop this sort of thing.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move to amend the amendment as I have written it in pencil on the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be reported.

The ACTING SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend the amendment so as to make it read:

To enable the Acting Secretary of the Senate to pay the officers and employés of the Senate not borne on the annual rolls on the 3d day of March, 1883, one month only of extra pay at the rate of compensation then paid them by law, which sum shall be immediately available.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont to the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. CALL. After line 348, on page 15, I move to insert:

For a light-house at Volusia Bar, $5,000.

I hope the chairman of the committee will make no objection to this.

Mr. ALLISON. I make the point of order on the amendment. It is not estimated for.

Mr. CALL. Will the chairman state the point of order?

Mr. ALLISON. The point of order is that it is not estimated for.

Mr. CALL. I hold in my hand, which has been submitted to the Committee on Appropriations, the recommendation of the Treasury Department for that specific appropriation and the estimate for it.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 7637) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for prior years, and for those certified as due by the accounting officers of the Treasury in accordance with section 4 of the act of June 14, 1878, heretofore paid from permanent appropriations, and for other purposes; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 7191) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, and for the armament thereof, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

POST-ROUTE BILL.

Mr. HILL, from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7679) to establish certain post-routes, reported it with amendments.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that the deficiency bill be laid before the Senate.

The bill (H. R. 7637) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for prior years, and for those certified as due by the accounting officers of the Treasury in accordance with section 4 of the act of June 14, 1878, heretofore paid from permanent appropriations, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is it in order to read that bill the second time without unanimous consent to-day?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No, sir.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not make any objection. I merely wanted to know what the law was. There may be some other bill that it will be worth while to know about.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill has been read the second time and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. GARLAND and Mr. SLATER submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them respectively to the deficiency appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7595) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL] is entitled to the floor on his amendment.

Mr. CALL. I hold in my hand the estimate of the Treasury Department and the recommendation for this work which was sent to the Committee on Appropriations. I send it to the Secretary to be read, and also the recommendation of the Light-House Board.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE LIGHT-HOUSE BOARD,
Washington, April 20, 1882.

SIR: Referring to your letter of April 19, inclosing a letter from the Committee on Commerce of the House of Representatives, dated April 18, forwarding a number of bills for the opinion of the board, and among them H. R. bill No. 4796, to authorize the establishment of certain lights on Saint John's River, Florida, I have to say that the board finds itself unable to recommend its passage.

The board is of the opinion that if its jurisdiction was extended over the Saint John's River, as it now is over several of the largest Western rivers, that it could furnish all the lights needed in this river at a less sum than would be required to establish the permanent structures contemplated in this bill.

The board begs leave to suggest that the desired result could be better attained by passing a bill providing for the extension of its jurisdiction over the river for the establishment of such lights, day-beacons, and buoys as may be necessary for the use of vessels navigating that stream; that the board be authorized to lease the necessary ground for all such lights and beacons as are used to point out changeable channels, and which, in consequence, can not be made permanent, and that $10,000 be appropriated for this work.

Very respectfully,

GEO. DEWEY,
Commander, U. S. N., Naval Secretary.

Hon. SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

Mr. ALLISON. What is the date of that letter?

The ACTING SECRETARY. April 20, 1882.

Mr. CALL. Read the other letter.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., February 20, 1883.

SIR: Respectfully referring to a letter of the 2d instant from Mr. W. B. Watson, of Jacksonville, Florida, forwarded by you to this Department, with request for information in regard to the necessity for the establishment of a light on Volusia Bar, Saint John's River, Florida, I have the honor to transmit herewith a copy of a letter of the Light-House Board, dated the 17th instant, stating that the district officers have made reports strongly in favor of the desirability of a light on said bar, the estimated cost of the same being $5,000.

Very respectfully,

H. F. FRENCH, Acting Secretary.

Hon. WILKINSON CALL, United States Senate.

Mr. ALLISON. I renew the point of order. There is no estimate for this.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This is not an estimate within the sense of the rule.

Mr. CALL. If the Chair so decides, I suppose I must submit; but here is a letter of the Treasury Department referring to the Light-House Board particularly this light on Volusia Bar with the report of the board for $5,000 and the recommendation of the Secretary. He says that he recommends—he expressly uses the word "recommends"—and he says the cost will be $5,000. Why that is not an estimate I can not conceive. It has been referred to the Light-House Board, the true authority, and it is only one of half a dozen. Every year since I have been here I have made this same application and sent in the same amendment to the bill, referring it to the Committee on Appropriations, and obtained the same recommendation from the Secretary of the Treasury; and yet I am told that this is not an estimate and the committee have refused to consider it. I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. ALLISON. Of the seven light-houses provided for in this bill two are on the coast of Florida. I do not think the Senator from Florida has very much cause for complaint.

Mr. CALL. Have I a right to say anything?

The PRESIDENT pro tempove. The Senator from Florida has the floor.

Mr. CALL. Then, sir, I wish to say that as for the two light-houses the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations refers to, they are of no consequence whatever to the people of Florida. They belong to the foreign and coastwise commerce of this country, and do not in any respect concern the interests of the people of Florida; but the Saint John's River has upon it more trade and travel and commerce than any river in this country except the Ohio and the Mississippi.

I have a letter here from General Sandford, a prominent citizen of New England, now living in Florida, who calls attention to the fact that more than 100,000 people, largely from the North—from the Senator's own State—travel on that river night and day. More than thirty steamers constantly travel upon the Saint John's River; and when the little sum of $5,000 is asked for, and recommended by the Light-House Board, sent to me by the Secretary of the Treasury with the recommendation, and stating the estimate to be approved of $5,000, I am told it is not an estimate in the sense of the rule. The rule says:

Proposed in pursuance of an estimate of the head of one of the Departments.

I think that is as full a compliance with the rule as can be obtained.

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON], chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, is not justified by the interests of the public service or the fulfillment of the public trust committed to him as chairman of a committee of this body in raising this point of order. There is neither propriety nor reason in the point of order. It is stated to be that there is no estimate for this little appropriation of $5,000 by the head of a Department. The facts will decide. The Acting Secretary of the Treasury sends, in reply to a request from me as Senator for an estimate and a recommendation to go before the committee, an official letter to me as a Senator, stating that the Light-House Board recommends this appropriation, and estimates the cost at $5,000. This is said to be a personal or private correspondence, although it concerns an estimate for a public purpose and a recommendation for a committee, and is from a public official, a head of a Department, and addressed to me officially as a Senator. Further, he incloses a letter addressed to the chairman of a committee of this Congress, making both an estimate and a recommendation. Still the Senator from Iowa insists it is not an estimate, although the inclosure is addressed to Congress, and in express words is both a recommendation and estimate. He must claim that it is not an estimate because it is not in the Book of Estimates made in the beginning of the session. Nothing can be an estimate which is not in a book prepared and sent to Congress at a particular time; that is, although it is in fact and in words an estimate, and made for the purposes of an estimate, and has all the qualities of an estimate, and satisfies all the ends and objects of the rule, it fails to be an estimate unless made on a particular day and sent to these Treasury lords, not by such an inferior person as an ordinary Senator, but a special messenger. If the committee applied this new reasoning to every one imperatively they would have very many of the items of this bill stricken out.

The point of order is based on the proposition that although the subject of the amendment has received the consideration of the head of the Department and the cost been reckoned and a statement made for the purpose of being placed before Congress by the Department, yet it loses all these qualities and fails to perform these ends if it is transmitted to or through a Senator or sent as an inclosure in a letter to him. I shall not do more than state these propositions which are gravely and frequently stated by the committee to sustain points of order. They need no reply.

An estimate by a head of a Department is a consideration of a subject and of its probable cost and a statement of the same. If these facts exist it is an estimate by a head of a Department, and meets both the letter and objects of the rule, whether borne on a silver salver to the aristocratic gentlemen on the Appropriations Committee or sent in a letter to a plain and ordinary Senator.

The amendment I propose was recommended to both the last Congresses by the Light-House Board and the Treasury Department, and the official letters to this effect have been before the committee and are now here before the Senate. But, Mr. President, for four years I have sought in vain to reach the deaf ears of the committee with some considerations touching the public service in connection with this great river. I have received neither consideration nor attention. I can only protest against it, and condemn this indifference to the public interest and this danger to the lives and property of the people of all parts of the United States who every year travel on this noble river.

More than 100,000 people are borne on this great river every year. Thirty steamboats are constantly borne on it, from ships of magnificent dimensions and of great value to small launches. More than $10,000,000 of property annually passes over it, yet the committee can not see the public interest for giving $5,000 for lights upon it. Yet if we look into the bill which they have reported we shall find a great many items which might well be diminished enough to make more than fifty times the amount necessary for thoroughly lighting this river. Among these items are $10,000 for an exhibit of the United States Fish Commission in London in May, 1883; to take part in electrical experiments at Paris, $12,500; for protection of sea-otter hunting-grounds, for the benefit of a monopoly, and seal-fisheries in Alaska, $25,000, and other items for this purpose, making $41,000 which the committee appropriate for the protection of the sea-otter as against $5,000 refused for the protection of a hundred thousand human beings and ten millions of dollars of property.

For scientific observation in the Arctic seas, $33,000.

For surveys and gaugings Mississippi River and tributaries, $150,000.

To pay Potomac Steamboat Company damages caused by neglect of United States naval officers in running down the Excelsior in Hampton Roads, $19,000.

Furniture for new quarters of Navy Department, $30,000.

For improving Capitol grounds, $50,000.

For payment of Cherokee Indian claims, about $700,000.

For propagating cod, mackerel, and striped bass, lobsters, and other useful marine animals, in Massachusetts, $25,000.

For carp-ponds at Washington, $30,000.

For Fish Commission, in all, about $131,000.

To buy Rochambeau papers, $20,000.

To buy records and briefs of late Matthew H. Carpenter, $8,000.

I have not sought to arraign the committee for these lavish appropriations, but I think in view of their vast and profuse expenditures they might have strained a fastidious conscience so as not to raise a technical point of order on $5,000 for the protection of lives and property on the Saint John's River, Florida, when they are so largely Northern lives and northern property.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the opinion of the Chair this is merely a correspondence on this subject, and not an estimate with a view of recommending an appropriation. It is a correspondence on that subject. Did the Senator from Florida appeal from the decision of the Chair?

Mr. CALL. I will not appeal, though I think it is like the general conduct of the Committee on Appropriations, very unfair, very unjust, and very partial. I merely wish to say to my people that this is the fourth time I have made application for this simple act of justice and none but those who are on the committee and their friends can obtain such appropriations.

Mr. HILL. I offer the following amendment at the end of line 1383, after the word "necessary," to add:

That the sums appropriated by the two foregoing paragraphs shall be immediately available.

Mr. ALLISON. There is no objection to that. I intended to offer it.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CONGER. On page 68, line 1658, after the word "dollars," I move to insert:

The same to be immediately available.

So that the clause shall read:

And of the sum hereby appropriated, $80,000 (the same to be immediately available) shall be expended for surveys in the Territory of Dakota.

I may say that the surveyor-general says that he can make more economical contracts by having the same available for the whole summer season than he can by having it divided the 1st of July, throwing part of the work into the fall and part over until the next spring, which makes it necessary for parties to go out with their outfit twice. I suppose there is no objection to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. CONGER].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SLATER. I move to amend, in line 1653, page 68, after the word "in," by inserting "California, Nevada;" so as to read:

Or where for any cause not provided for by law in California, Nevada, Oregon, and Washington Territory he is unable to get the necessary surveys.

That I think ought to be done, inasmuch as the paragraph was not struck out.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. That I understand increases the amount to be paid for surveys.

Mr. SLATER. Oh, no.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. It is to be paid for the surveys per mile. There are now in the bill Oregon and Washington Territory.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is to get so much per linear mile. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. SLATER].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ANTHONY. I offer the following amendment, to come in on page 58, after line 1403:

To enable the Secretary of the Navy to pay H. H. Nichols for the engraving of the Bowditch Navigator, published by order of the Navy Department, $2,581.79: Provided, That the account be found correct and justly due.

Mr. ALLISON. From what committee does that come?

Mr. ANTHONY. The Committee on Printing.

Mr. ALLISON. That account does not seem to have been audited. If the account was audited, I should see no objection.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It should go on the deficiency bill then.

Mr. ANTHONY. It is not to be paid unless the Secretary of the Navy finds the amount correct and justly due.

Mr. ALLISON. We could pay a great many claims in that way. The rule is not to allow anything except audited claims. This provides that the proper officer may audit this. I make the point of order on it.

Mr. ANTHONY. Then I will thank the Secretary to read the amendment immediately preceding this, to see if it is not liable to the same point of order.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

To enable the Secretary of the Navy to pay the Potomac Steamboat Company the amount found to be due them by a board of naval officers appointed to ascertain the damage occasioned by the negligence of the officers in command of the United States naval tug Fortune in running down the said company's steamer Excelsior, in Hampton Roads, Virginia, December 4, 1882, $19,957.15; and the acceptance of this sum shall be in full for all claims which the said company now has against the United States because of said collision.

Mr. ANTHONY. That is the clause immediately preceding where this amendment comes in. It is of the same character.

Mr. ALLISON. The item immediately preceding has been found due by a board of naval officers appointed by the Secretary of the Navy under a law.

Mr. ANTHONY. This has been found due by a committee of Congress. Let me state this case. The Navy Department published the Bowditch Navigator. There were some cuts in it. They sent the cuts to the Printing Office and they came by the estimate within $250, which is the lowest sum that can be engraved without advertising. They gave him the cuts to engrave, and afterwards, according to the account of the Printing Office—it was in Mr. Defrees's time—the Navy Department sent to him a larger amount of engraving, more than he was authorized to contract for without advertisement, and then the chief clerk went and countermanded the order, but the order had already been partly executed, and the Navy Department sent still other engraving, according to the account from the Printing Office. There is some difference in the stories that the two tell, but there is no doubt whatever about the fact that this man was told (this being in the recess of Congress) that when Congress met the Committee on Printing would authorize, which the committee has the right to do by statute, the engraving of this work without advertisement. When Congress met in December we were called upon and asked to authorize what already had been done without our authority. That we did not think proper to do. The result is that this poor fellow has done this work, done it well, and has received no pay. He is a very worthy, honest man. He did it on the assurance that he was acting within the law, but he cannot get his money.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order is withdrawn, the Chair understands. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ANTHONY].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KELLOGG. I offer the following amendment. On line 338, page 15, after the word "dollars," insert:

For the erection of a light at Southwest Pass, Vermillion Bay, Louisiana, $15,000.

Mr. ALLISON. I make the point of order on that.

Mr. KELLOGG. I offer this amendment from the Committee on Commerce, but I am not exactly in the same situation with the Senator from Florida in respect to his amendment. We have not any lighthouse provided for in this bill in Louisiana or on the Gulf coast, and this is a very important matter. I hope that the Senator from Iowa will not insist upon this point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What is the point of order?

Mr. ALLISON. That it is not estimated for, is not in the list of light-houses, and the Light-House Board have not recommended it in their regular estimates.

Mr. KELLOGG. Neither have they recommended any except two or three. I hold in my hand, as the Senator from Florida said he did in his, a letter from the Light-House Board, and also a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, recommending this appropriation. I report it from the Committee on Commerce. It seems to me, as I am authorized by the Committee on Commerce to make this report to the Senate, and they recommend the allowance of this appropriation, I am within the rule.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It has not been referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Have the Committee on Appropriations had it before them?

Mr. KELLOGG. I have been evidently a victim of misplaced confidence—not that I find any fault—a kind of pious fraud has been perpetrated on me. I asked the chairman of the committee the other day if it was necessary to refer this to the Committee on Appropriations, and I understood him to say it was not absolutely necessary that I should do so.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. KELLOGG. I hope the chairman, who has misled me, not intentionally, of course, will not insist on the point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There are mitigating circumstances. [Laughter.]

Mr. KELLOGG. I plead mitigating circumstances and throw myself on the indulgence of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Make your appeal to him, sir. The Chair has no right to indulge anything. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. KELLOGG. I do not know that I want to claim the indulgence of the Senate to have the correspondence read. It will not do any good, I reckon. ["No!" "No!"] If I were here another session I would never trust the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations in a matter of advice. [Laughter.]

Mr. HAWLEY. I offer the following amendment, in line 1041, after the word "dollars," to insert:

For extra-duty pay to two hundred and twenty enlisted men of the Signal Service, at 35 cents per day, $28,105.

Mr. ALLISON. I make the point of order on that.

Mr. HAWLEY. It is not liable, I think, to the point of order. I submit it to the Chair of course. The existing law under which these men are enlisted in the Signal Corps gives skilled men placed on certain classes of work extra-duty pay, and these men have had this before and it is estimated for under existing law in the estimates submitted this year. To fail to give it to them would be to fail to give them what they have had all the while and would be a practical reduction of the pay of these skilled operatives to the extent of about $125 a year. Their pay I understand now is something over $900, about $940. At any rate I submit to the chairman who has made this point of order, that this is only allowing what is customary, and it is estimated for, and if not paid it is a reduction of the pay of an excellent and intelligent class of skilled workmen.

Mr. ALLISON. That question the committee considered very carefully. I should be glad if the Senator from Connecticut would point me to the portion of the Book of Estimates where this extra-duty pay is estimated for.

Mr. HAWLEY. I have not examined the details, but I was told and believe that the estimates are made upon the same basis as the preceding year, during which they have had what money was necessary to give these men the extra-duty pay. I see it is on the one hundred and ninety-seventh page of the Book of Estimates:

Incidental expenses Signal Service:
Extra-duty pay for two hundred and twenty enlisted men, at 35 cents per day, $28,105.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It seems to have been estimated for.

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes, sir; under existing law.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope it will not be agreed to.

Mr. HAWLEY. I hope it will. They have had it every year. To omit it is a reduction of pay without any reason.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY].

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Is it extra pay?

Mr. HAWLEY. It is technically extra-duty pay of the Army, which they have always had for skilled work.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 10, noes 14; no quorum voting.

Mr. HAWLEY. I ought to call for the yeas and nays on this, because it is a reduction of $125 a year from a class of men who are not overpaid—skilled men in the Signal Corps. I do not think it is the right place for an economy to that extent, a reduction of about 15 per cent. on their pay. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I understand the amendment provides for extra compensation.

Mr. HAWLEY. It is technically extra-duty pay, which under the Army regulations is paid enlisted men taken and sent upon certain skilled work, artisans or men of extra merit. Telegraphers and others have a certain extra allowance, 35 cents a day. These men have also had it. This is not in the popular sense of the term extra pay at all. It has always been part of their regular pay.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. If it is regular pay why do you say "extra-duty pay?"

Mr. HAWLEY. It is regular pay for extra work.

Mr. ALLISON. These are not enlisted men in the service here.

Mr. HAWLEY. They are enlisted and mustered into the service.

Mr. ALLISON. They may be enlisted, but are, in fact, employed in the Signal Service Office as clerks.

Mr. BECK. Will the Senator from Connecticut tell us what their monthly pay is now?

Mr. HAWLEY. I can not give it, but one of them told me the total pay was $940 a year. There are some few who have more than that.

Mr. BECK. I understand now they receive from $64 to $82 per month, varying somewhat.

Mr. HAWLEY. That would be about $960 a year for the highest.

Mr. BECK. A soldier gets from $13 to $17 per month.

Mr. HAWLEY. But besides the soldier's $13 or $17 per month he gets his rations and clothing, and these things are commuted to the other man. He gets an enlisted man's monthly pay, and the clothing and rations are duly commuted, and the enlisted man of the regular Army when put upon skilled work as a mechanic or telegrapher gets this 35 cents a day.

Mr. CONGER. These are the Signal Corps observers. They are the men upon whom you rely for observations all over the country; and if that service is good for anything at all it needs the highest kind of skill. This pay the law gives these men now and it has given it to them heretofore, and leaving it out now reduces the pay of the class of men who have done this service to the country.

Mr. HAWLEY. It is a reduction of 15 or 18 per cent. without any good reason.

Mr. BECK. I do not want to debate this. We have heard the Chief of the Signal Service, and we went over this bill with a great deal of—I was about to say leniency to many things that did not strike me favorably and others still less so; but when the Chief of the Signal Service made his presentation of the case in regard to this extra pay it met with no favor in committee. Looking at the Signal Service as favorably perhaps as any other member of the committee, if this is going to be pressed now to this extent my opinion is that it will not promote the Signal Service or its present organization; nor will it tend to secure permanency to it under its present management. We did as much as we could. I do not want to make any remarks that may look invidious; but when we came to go over this part of it, this was a little thing that even those who were best disposed thought they could afford to let go.

Mr. HAWLEY. I will not trespass on the Senate, but whatever criticism may be made upon the general management of the head of the bureau or anybody connected with it nothing of that kind has anything to do with my proposition, which is simply to continue to the enlisted men, the worthy and intelligent and faithful men there, the pay they had last year. That is the whole of my proposition.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I understand that these men get three or four times as much as other men in the service.

Mr. HAWLEY. Not so at all.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. How much is the pay of these men?

Mr. HAWLEY. They get paid under army laws and rules. Of course they can not be fed in a company mess, because they are scattered about in squads of two or three; rations are commuted, and clothing is commuted, and quarters are commuted; these things are turned into cash.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. How much do they get?

Mr. HAWLEY. The Senator from Kentucky has just stated it. The highest runs up to $84 a month, or about a thousand dollars a year. I do not know any case quite as high as that; I supposed it was about $940.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. How much does an enlisted man get?

Mr. HAWLEY. Sixteen dollars a month for his pay. Then he is fed the year round and clothed the year round and all his transportation and everything he needs is furnished to him. Commute that to the ordinary enlisted man at fair rates and you will find it amounts to something.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. It is certainly safe to say that these men get twice as much as enlisted men.

Mr. HAWLEY. You can not make such figures out of it to save your life. The Senator is entirely mistaken.

The Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SLATER (when his name was called). On this vote I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. KELLOGG].

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 15, nays 28; as follows:

YEAS—15.

Anthony,	Frye,	Hoar,	Platt,
Blair,	Harrison,	Lapham,	Sawyer,
Conger,	Hawley,	Miller of N. Y.,	Windom.
Davis of Ill.,	Hill,	Mitchell,

NAYS—28.

Allison,	Davis of W. Va.,	Lamar,	Pugh,
Barrow,	Edmunds,	McMillan,	Rollins,
Bayard,	Garland,	Maxey,	Vance,
Beck,	Gorman,	Morgan,	Van Wyck,
Cameron of Wis.,	Harris,	Morrill,	Vest,
Cockrell,	Ingalls,	Pendleton,	Voorhees,
Coke,	Jackson,	Plumb,	Walker.

ABSENT—33.

Aldrich,	Ferry,	Jones of Nevada,	Saunders,
Brown,	George,	Kellogg,	Sewell,
Butler,	Groome,	Logan,	Sherman,
Call,	Grover,	McDill,	Slater,
Camden,	Hale,	McPherson,	Tabor,
Cameron of Pa.,	Hampton,	Mahone,	Williams.
Dawes,	Johnston,	Miller of Cal.,
Fair,	Jonas,	Ransom,
Farley,	Jones of Florida,	Saulsbury,

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. MORGAN. On page 97, after line 2382, I move to insert:

Provided, That no money shall be paid from the sums appropriated in this act for the fees of United States commissioners or of special attorneys which accrued or became due in any previous fiscal year.

I find that the expenses for United States commissioners during the fiscal year 1882 incurred and paid were $80,327.21, and the committee appropriate $130,000 for next year. That is the same amount of money that was appropriated last year, $130,000 for this same purpose, the payment of United States commissioners, of which the Department has spent only $80,327.21.

There is something wrong about this business evidently. I do not know how to account for it. The chairman of the committee, I think, can not account for it; I doubt if anybody can except the Department itself; but I infer, from looking back over the statements that are found in the report of the Attorney-General, that the money which will be appropriated for instance for the next fiscal year will all be applied to the extinguishment of unliquidated or unsettled demands in preceding fiscal years.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That can not be done.

Mr. MORGAN. The Senator from Vermont says that can not be done; but I suppose it is done. That is either done or there is a very large overestimate for expenses, for the distance between $80,000 and $130,000 is quite considerable on an item of this kind.

I propose to limit the expenditure to debts incurred during the fiscal year for this description of service. What I fear is being done is that they use the appropriations to go back over preceding years, or, if not, for some purpose that I do not understand. There is some gap about this matter that ought to be accounted for.

Mr. EDMUNDS. There is no doubt that the Committee on Appropriations can explain it at once. They understand the operation of this affair.

Mr. MORGAN. I shall be glad to hear an explanation.

Mr. ALLISON. The Committee on Appropriations feels bound, of course, to make such explanation as it can.

The appropriation last year was $130,000, and the estimate this year is $160,000. The Attorney-General, or his representative, stated to us that these items were as little as he could possibly administer the Department of Justice in all its ramifications with, and the committee believe that the Attorney-General stated truthfully when he so stated. If the Senator from Alabama finds that in some prior year only $80,000 of this sum was expended, that is a very satisfactory statement.

Mr. MORGAN. Here is the statement of the Attorney-General.

Mr. ALLISON. It is probable that during that year they were able to economize.

Mr. MORGAN. That was the last fiscal year.

Mr. ALLISON. Ending last July. If the Senator thinks the amount is too great I shall be willing to reduce it somewhat, and thus enable the committee to make further investigation and confer with the people who know more about it than we possibly can.

Mr. MORGAN. We might possibly make a mistake by cutting down the amount that the Attorney-General has estimated for, but we shall make no mistake if we confine the expenditure of this money to the current fiscal year and require him to report a deficiency, if there is a deficiency for the preceding year.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I would suggest, with greatest possible modesty, to the Committee on Appropriations that it is just within the power of one's comprehension who knows anything about the law that all the claims and expenses of these commissioners for a given fiscal year are not reported at the end of that precise year when they square the accounts, because the law allows the appropriation to be drawn upon for one or two years afterward for liabilities before incurred. But the Committee on Appropriations know how all that is, and how justice is administered. That is worth thinking of, I suggest to the committee.

Mr. MORGAN. I prefer to have it thought of on the amendment that I propose, which will confine the expenditure to the fiscal year. That will be safe. If there is any trouble about it we can supply the trouble on a deficiency bill.

Mr. ALLISON. All the committee wants is to have the service continued.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. GROOME. I propose the following amendment, to come in after the word "expended," in line 2242:

Provided, That there may be bound for each Senator, Representative, or Delegate in Congress one copy of each book or document issued or ordered by authority of Congress during the term of service of such Senator, Representative, or Delegate; but this provision shall not be construed as allowing any binding as aforesaid to be done of any books or documents issued during any former Congress of which said Senator, Representative, or Delegate was not a member.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Is there not some provision of that kind now?

Mr. ALLISON. That was the provision which was ruled out on a point of order.

Mr. ANTHONY. This is not the same that was ruled out before on a point of order. Nobody objects to it.

Mr. HOAR. Nobody objects to this.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the amendment of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GROOME].

The amendment was agreed to.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 7631) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I move that the bill just sent from the House be read and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What bill is that?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The river and harbor bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I object to the second reading of it.

The bill (H. R. 7631) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, was read the first time by its title.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I object to the second reading of the bill to-day.
Mr. McMILLAN. I ask that the bill be printed.
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be printed.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7595) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes.

Mr. MORGAN. I offer this amendment, to come in at line 1515 on page 62:

For testing under the direction of the inventor, and for his expenses in connection therewith, Frank Moore's instrument for determining the error of the compass, $1,000.

I wish to make a very few remarks about that. The Secretary of the Navy has had this instrument tested by a board of naval officers, who are satisfied that it is going to be of very great value——

Mr. ALLISON. I make the point of order on the amendment suggested by the Senator from Alabama.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order can not be made while the Senator from Alabama has the floor.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not seek to take the Senator from the floor.

Mr. MORGAN. I expected the point of order would be made, and I have only one answer to it: De minimis lex non curat. This is a very small matter, but it is very valuable indeed; at least that is the testimony of naval officers. It could not have been put in any estimate for the reason that the invention was not known at the time the estimates were made out. Therefore the Secretary of the Navy has been bound to content himself with the recommendation which I have, which has been entered here, and sent to the Committee on Appropriations. He is anxious that this appropriation should be made. Mr. Moore, the inventor of this very remarkable instrument, is a man totally destitute of means; he has nothing; and in order to get the test of it it appears to be necessary that he should have provision on naval vessels on which the instrument is to be tried. There can be no doubt, I think, that it is an accurate and complete corrector of the variations of the compass, and the naval officers believe it will answer this purpose in any kind of a sea, or at any time between 8 o'clock in the morning and 8 o'clock in the evening, at any time during which the sun may shine in the day; that it will correct the errors of the compass, and it is done instantaneously. The light falls upon the instrument and its record is made instantaneously for the correction of the error; a very remarkable discovery. The Secretary of the Navy is anxious that the inventor should have the opportunity of testing it.

Of course the point of order will carry it by, but the Senator from Iowa will perhaps regret that he felt himself bound to make the point of order at some time or other.

The Navy of the United States ought to have this invention, and it is a very small expenditure. I have no personal solicitude about it; but the Secretary of the Navy has, and desires it to be done.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order is sustained. Are there further amendments?

Mr. LOGAN. I move, on page 72, after line 1760, to insert:

That that portion of the Cherokee Nation of Indians residing west of the Mississippi River, and known and designated as "Western Cherokees," or "Old Settlers," by and under the name and style of the "Old Settler Cherokee Indians," be, and they are hereby, authorized within one year next after the passage of this act to present their claim or claims against the United States by petition to the Court of Claims of the United States under the Cherokee treaties of 1828, 1833, 1835, 1836, and 1846, according to the tenor and effect of said treaties at the dates of their respective ratifications; and, to the end that justice may be done, such court shall examine all settlements heretofore made under said treaties and acts of Congress and other acts and proceedings relating thereto, and correct all errors that may have been made by any accounting officers or other authority of the Government of the United States in marshaling and settling the accounts for the said "Old Settlers," in improper charges, erroneous calculations, misconstruction of laws and treaties, or misapplication of funds. And the said court, in the examination of said "Old Settlers" claim, shall consider the same with reference to, and be governed by, the said treaties, and all such laws, acts, and proceedings as relate to or affect said "Old Settlers," and shall render judgment on the equity of said claim under the said treaties and acts and proceedings, and either party may appeal to the Supreme Court.

Mr. ALLISON. I make the point of order on that amendment.

Mr. LOGAN. I understood the Senator from Iowa to agree to it.

Mr. ALLISON. No, sir; that is too complicated a question to be put upon this bill.

Mr. LOGAN. I so understood the Senator, or I certainly should not have offered it. I submitted it to the Senator. I did not know that he would have any objection to it whatever.

Mr. ALLISON. I did not have time to even read it, as the Senator knows.

Mr. LOGAN. It is a mere reference of the question to the Court of Claims. That is all there is to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. HARRIS. I am directed by the Committee on Epidemic Diseases to move an amendment to the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be reported.

The ACTING SECRETARY After line 709 it is proposed to insert:

For the National Board of Health:
For pay and expenses of members of the board and the secretary, $7,000; for miscellaneous investigations, $10,000; for pay of disbursing agent, clerks, and laborers, $5,800; for rent, light, fuel, telegrams, and postage, $1,700; for stationery and furniture, $1,000; for incidental expenses, $300; in all, $25,800.

Strike out from line 710 to line 716 inclusive and insert the following:

And the National Board of Health, with the approval of the President of the United States, is hereby authorized to use a sum not exceeding $100,000 of the unexpended balance of appropriations made for the National Board of Health prior to June 30, 1882, for the maintenance of its inspection service, and to aid State and local boards in preventing the introduction of contagious or infectious diseases into the United States from foreign countries or into one State from another.

Mr. ALLISON. I make the point of order upon that amendment.

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator state his point of order?

Mr. ALLISON. In the first place there is no authority to make any appropriation under existing law for the next fiscal year except for the necessary salaries of these officers, if there is authority for that purpose. By the limitation of the law of June 2, 1879, the board expires on the 1st day of July next.

Mr. HARRIS. On the 2d day of June next.

Mr. ALLISON. The Board of Health after that time is a naked board, without any specific authority except that of giving advice to certain officers of the Government.

Mr. HARRIS. Under the act of March 3, 1879, the National Board of Health was created. In April, 1879, it was organized. It is to-day a legally existing institution. This amendment is reported by one of the committees of this body. It was regularly introduced in the Senate and referred to the Committee on Appropriations. That it is in order I think is beyond the possibility of doubt or question, but until the question of order is settled I do not propose to say more.

Mr. GARLAND. It is reported under the twenty-seventh rule by a standing committee.

Mr. HOAR. Where do they get authority?

Mr. ALLISON. By the act of June 2, 1879.

Mr. HARRIS. The act of June 2, 1879, only gives additional powers to an existing institution.

Mr. HOAR. Does not this amendment give them power to expend money for a certain purpose which they would have no power to advance at all under existing law?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. According to the recollection of the Chair, the existence of the National Board of Health expires on the 2nd of June.

Mr. HARRIS. The Chair is a little mistaken if such is the recollection of the Chair. There is no limitation under the act of March 3, 1879, as to the existence of the National Board of Health. There was an act approved June 2, 1879, giving additional powers to it, that does by the tenth section expire four years from its approval, which will be the 2d of June, 1883.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the National Board of Health will be in existence as a legal corporation after the 1st of July next, then the amendment having been reported from a standing committee would be in order.

Mr. HOAR. Where would the National Board of Health get any authority of law to take particular action in regard to epidemics after that time?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair does not know.

Mr. HOAR. This proposes to give them a new legal authority. Suppose it were the Attorney-General of the United States who was authorized to do——

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator allow me to say that I will divide my amendment and offer first that part of it that goes down and includes line 9 of the printed amendment? I will modify it and offer it in that form at present.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let it be read as modified.

The PRINCIPAL LEGISLATIVE CLERK. After line 709 it is proposed to add:

For pay and expenses of members of the board and the secretary, $7,000; for miscellaneous investigations, $10,000; for pay of disbursing agent, clerks, and laborers, $5,800; for rent, light, fuel, telegrams, and postage, $1,700; for stationery and furniture, $1,000; for incidental expenses, $300; in all, $25,800.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I inquire of the Senator from Tennessee whether the statute now authorizes the National Board of Health to make investigations?

Mr. HARRIS. It does.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Miscellaneous investigations?

Mr. HARRIS. It does authorize the National Board of Health to make certain investigations. There was on an appropriation act of a year ago some limitation as to the extent of those investigations.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Will the Secretary read the portion of the amendment referring to investigations?

The Principal Legislative Clerk read as follows:

For miscellaneous investigations, $10,000.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. That is new authority which this amendment proposes to confer upon the National Board of Health.

Mr. HARRIS. I think every lawyer except my friend from Wisconsin would take it to mean such investigation as it may legally make.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Then there is no necessity for it in, if the board has the authority now without such a statute. Any lawyer except my friend from Tennessee would know that it is not necessary to be in at all if that is the case.

Mr. HARRIS. I intended to make no sharp point upon my distinguished friend from Wisconsin.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I do not know what the Senator intended to do. All I know is what he did do.

Mr. HARRIS. I think it is necessary as a matter of appropriation; and that is the point of view in which those lines are proposed, and not intended to enlarge, or limit, or change in any sense, to any extent, the authority of the board.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. So far as that is concerned, I make the point that it is new legislation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there is any new legislation in the amendment, of course it is out of order; but if it is not new legislation, having been reported from a standing committee to carry out the provisions of existing law, it is in order.

Mr. HARRIS. Under existing law there are a number of diseases which the National Board of Health are authorized to investigate and report upon. They are not specified in the amendment. The amendment proposes to appropriate according to the estimates for those investigations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS].

Mr. ALLISON. Does the Chair rule that the amendment is in order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If it is to carry out existing law, and at the same time unless it is pointed out to the Chair to be legislation, the Chair must rule it to be in order.

Mr. ALLISON. Then I desire to say a word upon the question of this Board of Health.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair refers to the fore part of the amendment. The last part may confer authority.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to address myself to the fore part of the amendment. After the 2d day of June, 1883, the National Board of Health will have no power or authority except that conferred by the original act of March 3, 1879. Am I right or wrong in that?

Mr. HARRIS. There were one or two acts passed subsequently to the 2d of June, 1879, that slightly enlarged their powers, but the most material of the powers that it exercised heretofore, I am perfectly frank in saying to the Senator, were given by the act approved the 2d of June, 1879.

Mr. ALLISON. So I understand. The second section of that act provides that the duties of the National Board of Health shall be "to obtain information upon all matters affecting the public health, to advise the several Departments of the Government, the executives of the several States, and the commissioners of the District of Columbia, on all questions submitted to them, or whenever in the opinion of the board such views may tend to the preservation and improvement of public health." I submit that for the purposes contained in that section it is little less than a broad farce to pay the salaries and office expenses that are proposed in the amendment suggested by the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I regret exceedingly at this late hour of the night and this late day of the session to recognize the duty, as it is certainly my duty, to offer this amendment. I am quite well aware of the fact that there exists a prejudice, and as I think an unjust prejudice, against the National Board of Health; exactly why or wherefore I have never understood and am not now able to understand, yet I recognize the fact.

I will not take time now to go into details or fully remind Senators of the fearful consequences of the epidemics of 1873, 1878, and 1879 in certain sections of the country, epidemics which decimated the populations of certain localities, the city of my home being a great sufferer for at least three of the years that I have mentioned, and one of the least fatal of these epidemics I chanced to have been compelled to remain there. I need not remind the Senate of the fact that during the epidemic of 1873, less severe, much less fatal than that of 1878 or that of 1879, yet in that epidemic for a period of six or eight weeks business was suspended and all business houses closed; there was not a sound to be heard upon the most populous and business streets of that city from early morn till morn again, except the sound of the wheels of the hearse as it bore the last victim to the cemetery, followed perhaps by a single carriage or buggy with one, two, or three of the members of the bereaved family. There was not a single busines house that remained open except the office of the physician and the drug-store. The calm of death was hanging perpetually over that stricken city for the term of six weeks or two months.

We had a much more serious epidemic in 1878, and another in 1879. By the act approved 3d of March, 1879, the National Board of Health was created. By the act approved on 2d of June, 1879, largely increased powers were given to the Board of Health. Immediately after this it established its rules and regulations. In 1878, when we had no national board of health, commerce was absolutely blockaded. Take a single port, that of Cairo, Illinois, and the exports and imports, as shown from authentic data, to and from the infected region in 1879 when we had a national board of health regulating this matter, the freights to and from that single port amounted to more than 100,000 tons in 1879 than for the same period in 1878, when we had no national board of health, while the passenger business in 1879 was simply regulated, not stopped. In 1878 it was an embargo, while in 1879 commerce was not stopped, simply regulated.

The rules and regulations that have been adopted and enforced by the National Board of Health have not only greatly increased the security of the whole Mississippi Valley from the importation of contagion from foreign countries into this country and from one State into another, but it has inspired a degree of confidence in the people of that valley and of the country they had never been able to enjoy when they had to rely upon the State and local boards, every one of which we know is in sympathy with the commercial interests of their respective cities and localities.

That additional security is regarded by the people who are thus exposed to that very great danger as a thing of the highest importance and greatest value.

It was estimated by the President of the United States, and by a committee of this body and of the other House, after the most thorough and careful investigation of that subject which could be given, that in the material wealth of this country not less than from one hundred millions to two hundred million dollars were lost by reason of the epidemic of 1878, to say nothing of the impaired health of our people and the twenty thousand new-made graves which resulted from that epidemic.

There is not a sanitary organization in America that has not recommended the continuance, the preservation of the National Board of Health. I know of but one single local or State board in this whole country that has not recommended and is not now recommending that it be sustained and continued. These organizations and people who have given the greatest attention and care to the subject, these people who have taken the greatest interest in it and are best qualified to judge, have, from one end of this land to the other, the Louisiana board of health excepted, recommended to this Congress that the National Board of Health be sustained and continued, and that the powers given it by the act approved 2d of June, 1879, be re-enacted.

I know, or have abundant reason to believe, that the State board of health of Louisiana and the organization known as the Marine Hospital Service have continuously sought to destroy the National Board of Health. Mr. President, I will not at this time enter into an inquiry as to the motives prompting these organizations. I regret to say that when I may hereafter have occasion to do so the facts will not be prejudicial to the National Board of Health, and may show a disposition on the part of these organizations to aggrandize themselves at the expense of an organization vastly more meritorious and important to the country than either of them.

I of course shall acquiesce as best I can in whatever judgment the Senate may pronounce in respect to the question; but believing as I do believe that it is a matter of the highest importance to a very large proportion of the people of the country that the Board of Health shall be sustained, and that it shall be clothed with ample powers to enable it at least to prevent the importation of contagious and infectious diseases from foreign countries into this, or into one State from another, I shall of course vote to sustain it. I shall regret very much the fact that it shall be either starved out of existence, which is the most unmanly method of disposing of it, or stricken down by an act repealing the act creating it.

Mr. President, I shall not at this late hour of the night and this late day of the session consume more of the time of the Senate in discussing it; but regarding it as I do as vastly more important to the people of this country than any institution in existence which is costing even ten times as much as this board costs to sustain it, I shall therefore desist from further remarks and ask for a vote on the amendment.

Mr. LAMAR. Mr. President, I do not intend to occupy the time of the Senate further than to express my hearty concurrence in the views which have been submitted by the honorable Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS].

The continuance of this board depends upon the action of the Senate upon this amendment. I believe its discontinuance would cause much alarm and dismay among a large portion of the people of this country. The existence of the board and its authority tends to harmonize and regulate what would otherwise be the inconsistent and antagonistic regulations of local boards. It is one which more than any other cause has given hope to our people in the South and assurance of efficient help under the ravages of a terrible pestilence.

When they were suffering from these ravages before, the beneficence of the North touched the hearts of the Southern people and elicited their deepest gratitude. It would fall with disheartening effect if the Congress of the United States by its action upon this amendment should show itself indifferent to the danger to which they are exposed.

Mr. GARLAND. When the act of 1879 was passed giving these powers to the National Board of Health the argument urged against it was that these were matters that the State boards of health were competent to take care of and would take care of. It has transpired since that all the State boards of health, except the one at New Orleans, Louisiana, have sent their petitions to Congress, which have been referred to the Committee on Epidemic Diseases, begging for the continuance of the National Board of Health, and expressing their inability to care for the health of their particular States and localities. I think that makes the argument complete why if this board should have been created and given these powers it ought to be continued.

I make this statement, indorsing most heartily the statement that has been made by the two Senators who have preceded me.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS].

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 19, noes 17; no quorum voting.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask for the yeas and nays. ["No!" "No!"]

Mr. EDMUNDS. There is no quorum. We must have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin (when his name was called). Upon this question I am paired with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. FRYE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BROWN], but he authorized me to vote in case there was no quorum, and it looks so suspiciously like that, that I will vote.

Mr. SLATER (when his name was called). I was paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. KELLOGG], but I transfer that pair to my colleague [Mr. GROVER] and vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. ROLLINS. The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. RANSOM] is paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MAHONE].

The result was announced—yeas 22, nays 18; as follows:

YEAS—22.

Barrow,	Davis of Ill.,	Jackson,	Slater,
Bayard,	Garland,	Lamar,	Vance,
Beck,	Gorman,	Maxey,	Vest,
Call,	Groome,	Pendleton,	Voorhees.
Coke,	Harris,	Pugh,
Conger,	Hoar,	Sawyer,

NAYS—18.

Allison,	Harrison,	Logan,	Rollins,
Anthony,	Hawley,	McMillan,	Van Wyck,
Blair,	Hill,	Morgan,	Windom.
Edmunds,	Ingalls,	Platt,
Frye,	Lapham,	Plumb,

ABSENT—36.

Aldrich,	Fair,	Jones of Florida,	Morrill,
Brown,	Farley,	Jones of Nevada,	Ransom,
Butler,	Ferry,	Kellogg,	Saulsbury,
Camden,	George,	McDill,	Saunders,
Cameron of Pa.,	Grover,	McPherson,	Sewell,
Cameron of Wis.,	Hale,	Mahone,	Sherman,
Cockrell,	Hampton,	Miller of Cal.,	Tabor,
Davis of W. Va.,	Johnston,	Miller of N. Y.,	Walker,
Dawes,	Jonas,	Mitchell,	Williams.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the point of order made as to the other part of the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, sir; I make the point of order upon it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is clear legislation.

Mr. HARRIS. I think, if the point of order is made on the other, the Chair has ruled rightly in regard to it.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senate concur in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. HARRIS. I ask for a separate vote on the committee amendment striking out the paragraph beginning in line 1111.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there any other special reservation? If not, the question is, Will the Senate concur in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole, except the one indicated by the Senator from Tennessee?

The amendments were concurred in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment reserved by the Senator from Tennessee will be reported.

The PRINCIPAL LEGISLATIVE CLERK. The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, struck out the following clause, beginning in line 1111:

To complete the road from the city of Chattanooga to the national cemetery, near that city, $2,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary to finish said road.

Mr. HARRIS. I hope the Senate will refuse to concur in that amendment, because the road is impassable now, and it can not be completed unless this appropriation is made.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is it a public road of the State of Tennessee?

Mr. HARRIS. It is a road leading from the city of Chattanooga to the national cemetery at that place, upon which the Government has expended about $10,000.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is it a public road of the State of Tennessee?

Mr. HARRIS. I am not aware that it is. I am inclined to think it is not.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am inclined to believe it is.

Mr. HARRIS. I am not sure; I only represent what the board of trade and certain people of the city of Chattanooga represent to me. Of my personal knowledge I can not answer the Senator. The fact I am assured is true, however, that the road is absolutely impassable, and if it were a public road of the State of Tennessee I do not think it would be so.

Mr. BECK. The objection the committee made to this item grew out of the fact that in the "act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes," approved August 7, 1882, the following provision was inserted:

For the road from Chattanooga to the national cemetery, Tennessee: For the completion of the roadway from Chattanooga National Cemetery to the city of Chattanooga, Tennessee, $5,000: Provided, That none of the money appropriated by this and the preceding paragraph shall be expended unless in each case the amount appropriated shall complete said roadways.

Somebody has violated the law, and we ought not to make any more provisions until we know why that was not followed. We are defied at every point and by everybody, and we yield to them and make more appropriations as though there was no wrong in violating the law.

Mr. CONGER. In that cemetery lie the remains of 15,000 Union soldiers, visited by their friends during all seasons of the year. If there is no proper means of reaching it from the city of Chattanooga or from any place where people may go and visit the resting-place of their dead, this Congress should make the appropriation, no matter whether the last money was expended properly or not.

Mr. EDMUNDS. May I ask the Senator whether we have any official information from the Secretary of War, who is supposed to have expended this money, as to what the state of this road is, and where is the official information from any board of trade or anybody else who wants to have more money spent there?

Mr. CONGER. I have not seen any such report in regard to it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. There does not seem to be the slightest——

Mr. CONGER. Gentlemen have stated what the condition of the road is, and the House has stated how much is necessary to finish the road. Suppose it is a few hundred dollars more or a few hundred dollars less than the amount originally believed to be necessary, the appropriation should be made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendment was non-concurred in; there being on a division—ayes 15, noes 25.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 7115) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Thames River near New London, in the State of Connecticut, and declare it a post-route;

A bill (H. R. 2816) to remove the legal and political disabilities of Samuel H. Lockett, of Alabama;

A bill (H. R. 7682) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at some accessible point within ten miles below and five miles above the city of Kansas City, Missouri; and

A bill (H. R. 7148) to establish a railway bridge across the Illinois River, extending from a point within five miles of Columbiana, in Greene County, to a point within five miles of Farrowtown, in Calhoun County, in the State of Illinois.

HOUSE BRIDGE BILLS.

Mr. CONGER. I ask that the bills which have just come from the House of Representatives be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will lay before the Senate bills from the House of Representatives for reference:

The bill (H. R. 7682) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at some accessible point within ten miles below and five miles above the city of Kansas City, Missouri, was read the first time by its title.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. VEST. I ask the Senate to pass upon the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I shall have no objection to passing upon it after it has been referred and reported.

Mr. VEST. I will say to the Senator from Vermont that the bill is identical with one reported by the Committee on Commerce and which is now pending. It is the same bill word for word.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That may be perfectly true, and when the committee have satisfied themselves on that point I certainly shall not object, but I do not want at this stage of the session to pass a bill in that way.

Mr. VEST. I will say further to the Senator from Vermont that the company which proposes to construct this bridge requires the passage of this act to enable it to cross the river, and unless the bill is passed at this session it will necessitate a delay until December.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I shall not object to its immediate consideration if the committee report it to-morrow morning.

Mr. VEST. The committee has already reported exactly the same bill.

Mr. HOAR. The regular time for laying bills before the Senate, except by unanimous consent, is in the morning, after the reading of the Journal. I suggest to the Chair to withhold the bill and lay it before the Senate to-morrow morning after the reading of the Journal. The Senator will then stand just where he does now, with the bill before the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think the bill had better be referred, and reported in the morning.

Mr. VEST. There is no necessity for referring it. It is the same bill which has been already reported from the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. INGALLS. No one knows that it is the same bill until it is compared.

Mr. VEST. I have compared it since it came from the House.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Not since it came over here.

Mr. VEST. Yes, I have looked at it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I can not consent to its consideration to-day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair supposes that the best way would be to refer it.

Mr. PLATT. I understood the Senator from Missouri to say that he did not want to have it referred.

Mr. VEST. There is no necessity for referring it, because we reported the same bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let it be read the second time and be placed on the Calendar, if that course is desired.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] suggests that it be withheld and laid before the Senate in the morning.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is much better to have it read the second time and placed on the Calendar. It can be taken up without any objection by me to-morrow, when I see that the two bills are exactly the same.

Mr. PLATT. That course is the best.

The bill was read the second time by its title, and ordered to lie on the table.

The bill (H. R. 7148) to establish a railway bridge across the Illinois River, extending from a point within five miles of Columbiana, in Greene County, to a point within five miles of Farrowtown, in Calhoun County, in the State of Illinois, was read twice by its title.

Mr. PLATT. Let that lie on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will lie on the table also.

The bill (H. R. 7115) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Thames River, near New London, in the State of Connecticut, and declare it a post-route, was read twice by its title.

Mr. PLATT. I ask that that lie on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will lie on the table.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 2816) to remove the legal and political disabilities of Samuel H. Lockett, of Alabama, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

PRINTING OF BILLS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will not order these bills to be printed unless some Senator requests it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. They can be printed and we can get them here by 10 o'clock in the morning.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. One of the clerks suggests that that can not be done.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It can.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let them be printed.

Mr. PLATT. Bills precisely similar have been printed and reported by the Committee on Commerce.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The order to print will be made.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. PLUMB. I desire to make a report from the conference committee on the Post-Office appropriation bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let that wait until morning.

Mr. PLUMB. I will let it lie on the table.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move to proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. VEST. I want to move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of what is known as the shipping bill, to take it up and let it lie over, so that it shall be the bill coming over for consideration to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The standing order of the Senate is the consideration of House pension bills.

Mr. VOORHEES. And when they are disposed of to take up bills on the Calendar at the point where the consideration was left off.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is the standing order.

Mr. VEST. I shall make the motion that the Senate now take up the shipping bill, with the view to consider it in the morning as the unfinished business. I simply want the bill to come before the Senate as the first thing in the morning for consideration.

Mr. HARRISON. Have we not made an order with reference to taking up House bills in their order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. So the Chair understands.

Mr. VEST. I consider it my duty, under the instructions of the Committee on Commerce, to make the motion, and then will let the Senate determine it. I propose to do all I can to bring the shipping bill to the consideration of the Senate. I shall ask for the yeas and nays on the motion. If the Senate do not propose to consider the bill at this session let them say so on the record.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But the trouble is the Senate has ordered that it will not.

Mr. VEST. Then I move to lay aside that order.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But it is an order of the Senate that you can not lay aside.

Mr. VEST. I suppose a majority vote can do it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. You can not lay it aside any more than a rule. It is a standing rule now.

Mr. INGALLS. The Senator can give one day's notice.

Mr. EDMUNDS. You can give a day's notice.

Mr. PLATT. What is the order of the Senate in relation to pension cases?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The standing order is to consider pension cases generally.

Mr. PLATT. Does that mean cases reported favorably?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It means all. Does the Senator want to have the order read?

Mr. PLATT. No; I do not care about it now.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After twenty minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and, on motion of Mr. ANTHONY (at 1 o'clock and 10 minutes a. m., Friday, March 2), the Senate adjourned to meet at 11 o'clock a. m., Friday, March 2.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, March 1, 1883.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. F. D. POWER.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed with an amendment, in which the concurrence of the House was requested, a bill (H. R. 1410) to amend the pension laws by increasing the pensions of soldiers and sailors who have lost an arm or a leg in the service.

PRINTING OF HOUSE DIGEST.

Mr. BEACH. I call for the regular order.

Mr. SPRINGER. I rise to make a privileged report. I report from the Committee on Printing the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the order of the House of February 23, 1882, directing the printing of two hundred and fifty additional copies of the Digest of the Rules and Practice of the House for the first session of this Congress, which by oversight was not executed by the Public Printer, be so modified or changed as to authorize the printing and binding of two hundred and fifty copies of the Digest for the present session, under the terms of the said resolution of February 23, 1882.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. SPRINGER moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

FORTIFICATION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FORNEY. I rise to submit a privileged report. I present the report of the committee of conference upon the fortifications appropriation bill.

The report is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7191) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, and for the armament thereof, for the year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

Amendment numbered 1: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 11 of said amendment strike out the words "three hundred," and in lieu of the sum proposed in the amendment insert the sum of $400,000; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 2: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed in said amendment insert the sum of $20,000; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 3: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed in said amendment insert the sum of $75,000; and the Senate agree to the same.

WM. H. FORNEY,
J. H. KETCHAM,
THOS. RYAN,
Managers on the part of the House.

H. L. DAWES,
JOHN A. LOGAN,
F. M. COCKRELL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement accompanying the report was read, as follows:

The managers on the part of the House of the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the fortifications appropriation bill submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action recommended in the report:

If the report is adopted the act will read as follows:

"That the sum of $175,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the protection, preservation, and repair of fortifications and other works of defense for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, the same to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War; also the following for the armament of fortifications, namely:

"For the armament of seacoast fortifications, including heavy guns and howitzers for flank defense, carriages, projectiles, fuses, powder, and implements, their trial and proof, and all necessary expenses incident thereto, including compensation of draughtsmen on gun construction while employed in Ordnance Bureau, and for conversion of 10-inch smooth-bore cannon into rifled guns, making and testing two 12-inch cast-iron rifled breech-loading cannon, in lieu of such of the guns the construction of which has not been commenced, as were provided for by the "act making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, and for the armament thereof, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881, and for other purposes," approved May 4, 1880, making and testing two breech-loading steel guns, one 8-inch and one 10-inch, making mortars and gun-carriages, mounting 15-inch guns, making and testing two guns banded or wrapped with wire, testing devices for breech-loading guns, testing projectiles, &c., in accordance with the report of the Select Committee of the Senate on the Subject of Heavy Ordnance and Projectiles, $400,000.

"For the purchase of machine guns of the latest improvement, $20,000.

"For torpedoes for harbor defenses, and the preservation of the same, and for torpedo experiments in their application to harbor and land defense, and for instruction of engineer battalion in their preparation and application, $75,000: Provided, That one-half of this sum may be used in the purchase of torpedoes of the latest improvement."

The bill as agreed upon in conference appropriates $670,000, being $70,000 less than as it passed the Senate, $330,000 less than the estimates, and $295,000 more than the appropriations for the current year.

WM. H. FORNEY,
THOS. RYAN,
J. H. KETCHAM,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. I observe that the committee of conference has agreed to an increase of $295,000 upon the appropriations made in the bill as passed by the House. Does not the gentleman consider this an unnecessary increase?

Mr. FORNEY. I do not. By means of this increase we provide for six guns of large caliber. Under the bill as now reported we shall get two 12-inch cast-iron guns (the present law provides for three); two breech-loading steel guns, one 8-inch, the other 10-inch; and two guns wrapped with wire. The committee of conference thought it necessary that these guns should be made.

Mr. HOLMAN. Will the gentleman explain the difference as to ordnance between the bill as it passed the House and the bill as it comes from the committee of conference?

Mr. FORNEY. The bill as it passed the House appropriated only $100,000 for everything connected with ordnance.

Mr. HOLMAN. But mentioned no particular kind of ordnance.

Mr. FORNEY. No, sir. The Senate amended the bill by increasing this appropriation from $100,000 to $450,000. That amendment of the Senate contained a requirement that three hundred of our 15-inch guns should be placed in the various forts; but we have struck that out. It also provided that under the law now existing there should be made three 12-inch cast-iron guns; we have changed that provision so as to require but two to be made. The amendment also provides, as I have said, for two breech-loading steel guns, one 8-inch and the other 12-inch, which will cost at least $80,000. The conferees on the part of the House believed it necessary that we should have some guns of this character.

Mr. HOLMAN. Where are they to be placed?

Mr. FORNEY. At New York or Boston, I suppose.

Mr. VANCE. How much is provided in the bill now for the purchase of machine guns?

Mr. FORNEY. Twenty thousand dollars. For torpedoes and torpedo experiments we appropriated last year $100,000. This bill as it passed the House gave for this purpose $50,000, which the Senate increased to $100,000. The conference committee has compromised on $75,000.

I move the adoption of the report.

The report was adopted.

Mr. FORNEY moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MORNING HOUR DISPENSED WITH.

Mr. MOORE. I desire to introduce a resolution of inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is called for.

Mr. PAGE. I move to dispense with the morning hour for the call of committees for reports.

The morning hour was dispensed with (two-thirds voting in favor thereof).

LIMITATION OF DEBATE.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and limit debate to one minute on the remaining portion of the river and harbor bill, with the exception of that part relating to the Mississippi River, on which I move debate shall be limited to one hour.

Mr. ANDERSON. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California will state his motion.

Mr. PAGE. I move to suspend the rules and limit the debate in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union on all the remaining portion of the river and harbor bill except the Mississippi River.

Mr. COX, of New York. I object to that.

Mr. PAGE. And on all amendments thereto.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. Does that include that portion of the bill which has not been read at all?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. Or considered?

Mr. ANDERSON. A regular gag.

Mr. COX, of New York. I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. By unanimous consent a second will be considered as ordered.

Mr. COX, of New York, and Mr. ANDERSON objected.

The SPEAKER appointed Mr. PAGE, and Mr. COX of New York, as tellers.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 102, noes 45.

Mr. COX, of New York. Does it require a two-thirds vote?

The SPEAKER. It does not.

So the motion to suspend the rules was seconded.

The SPEAKER. The question now recurs on the motion of the gentleman from California [Mr. PAGE] to suspend the rules as indicated.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 99, noes 52.

Mr. PAGE. Have two-thirds voted in the affirmative?

The SPEAKER. They have not.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let us have the yeas and nays.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan, and Mr. ANDERSON demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. WILLIS. Will the Chair please state the proposition?

The SPEAKER. The motion of the gentleman from California [Mr. PAGE] is to suspend the rules and limit debate on the unconsidered part of the river and harbor bill to one minute.

Mr. PAGE. It does not prohibit the offering of amendments.

The vote was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 134, nays 84, not voting 73; as follows:

YEAS—134.

So (two-thirds not voting in favor thereof) the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. DWIGHT. I desire to announce that the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. CONVERSE, is detained from the House by reason of ill-health. I understand if he were present he would vote "no."

The following pairs were announced:

Mr. SKINNER with Mr. HEWITT of New York.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Iowa, with Mr. AIKEN.

Mr. DUGRO with Mr. CABELL. Mr. DUGRO would vote "no."

Mr. BELFORD with Mr. CONVERSE.

Mr. BRUMM with Mr. COLERICK.

Mr. MASON with Mr. MATSON.

Mr. WADSWORTH with Mr. BLACK.

Mr. CORNELL with Mr. HERNDON.

Mr. WHITE with Mr. WILSON.

Mr. SPAULDING with Mr. ERMENTROUT.

Mr. HENDERSON with Mr. REAGAN.

Mr. BLACKBURN with Mr. SPARKS, on this vote.

Mr. SPARKS. Mr. Speaker, I learn that friends have paired me with Mr. BLACKBURN, who would vote the other way, as I had been complaining somewhat and did not expect to be able to be present this morning. I withdraw my vote.

On motion of Mr. TALBOTT, by unanimous consent the reading of the names was dispensed with.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PAGE. I now move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, to further consider the river and harbor appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. CANNON in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. The unfinished business is the further consideration of the river and harbor appropriation bill.

Mr. HISCOCK. I would like to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HISCOCK. What is the business first in order?

The CHAIRMAN. The unfinished business, being the further consideration of the river and harbor appropriation bill.

Mr. HISCOCK. I object to its consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection being made, under the rule the committee will rise and report the objection to the House.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CANNON reported that the House being in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, objection was made to the consideration of the unfinished business, being the river and harbor appropriation bill, when, under the rule, the committee had risen and directed him to report the objection to the House.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Will the House direct the committee to further consider the river and harbor appropriation bill?

Mr. HISCOCK. Would it be in order now to state the reason why I objected to proceeding with the consideration of the river and harbor bill, my object being to reach the deficiency bill?

Mr. PAGE. I object.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I understood the motion of the gentleman from California, when we went into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, was to proceed with the further consideration of the river and harbor appropriation bill?

The SPEAKER. That motion would not have been in order. It was proper, of course, for the gentleman to state the purpose for which he made the motion; but it would not be in order to entertain such a motion.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. No point of order was made upon the motion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair put the question which was in order upon the motion to go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, but not for any specific purpose. The Chair remembers very well the statement.

Mr. CAMP. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CAMP. If the House shall decide not to consider the river and harbor appropriation bill, I wish to ask whether the deficiency bill would not be next in order?

The SPEAKER. That will come up properly when this question is disposed of.

Mr. PAGE. I hope the gentleman from New York feels easy now.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will submit the question: Will the House direct the committee to proceed to further consider the river and harbor appropriation bill?

Mr. HISCOCK. On that I ask a vote by tellers, which will perhaps obviate the necessity of demanding a vote by yeas and nays.

Mr. ANDERSON. No, it will not.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 74, noes 79.

Mr. PAGE. Tellers.

Mr. ANDERSON. Yeas and nays.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, 32 members voting in favor thereof—1 more than one-fifth of the last vote.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 124, nays 105, not voting 62; as follows:

So the House directed the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to proceed with the consideration of the river and harbor appropriation bill.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. THOMPSON, of Iowa, with Mr. DUGRO, who would have voted "no."

Mr. HALL with Mr. BLACKBURN.

Mr. ERMENTROUT. I withdraw my vote. I am paired with Mr. SPAULDING.

Mr. KLOTZ. I withdraw my vote. I am paired with the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. EVINS], who I see has not yet returned to the House. If present, he would vote "ay" and I should vote "no."

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. I move to dispense with the reading of the names.

Mr. McCOOK. I object. Let us have the names read. It will be interesting.

The names of members voting were read.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Pending the announcement of the vote,

Mr. ALDRICH, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found duly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (S. 889) to provide for the erection of a public building in Jefferson City, in the State of Missouri; and

A bill (S. 1785) for the relief of David Mordecai and J. Randolph Mordecai, composing the commercial firm of Mordecai & Co., of Baltimore, Maryland.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The result of the vote was then announced as above stated.

Mr. PAGE moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union resumed its session, Mr. CANNON in the chair.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and by order of the House resumes the consideration of the unfinished business, being the bill (H. R. 7631) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

The pending paragraph was lines 371 and 372, as follows:

Improving Ohio River: Continuing improvement, $250,000.

The Clerk reported the pending amendment offered by Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky, as follows:

After the word "dollars," in line 372, add: "$50,000 of said $250,000 to be expended at the Grand Chain, or so much thereof, as may be necessary to provide five feet of water at low-water mark."

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee rose last night it was dividing on this amendment and a quorum did not appear on a vote by tellers.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I desire to announce I was detained from the House last evening by serious illness in my family. If present, I should have voted for the amendment.

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky. I agree that the amount shall be $25,000; and in that form I understand there will be no objection to my amendment.

Mr. BRIGGS. I made the point of order that there was no quorum. There is evidently a quorum present now and I do not insist on the point.

Mr. THOMAS. I offer as a substitute the following:

Of which sum not less than $25,000 shall be used in improving the Grand Chain rapids.

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky. I accept that.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky as modified.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

Mr. DAWES. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the amendment just adopted the following:
"And $10,000 may be expended for continuing the improvement of the harbor at the mouth of the Muskingum River, Ohio."

The question being taken on the amendment, it was not agreed to.

Mr. WASHBURN. I ask that the committee be called to order. There is so much confusion that gentlemen do not know what is going on.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will come to order.

Mr. WILLIS. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the amendment last adopted the following:
"And provided further, That an amount not exceeding $35,000 may be used for continuing the improvement of the Indian Chute at the Falls of the Ohio."

Mr. DAWES. I rise to make the point as to a quorum on the last vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The point is made too late. No further division was demanded, and the result was declared.

Mr. WILLIS. I desire to be briefly heard on the amendment I have offered. It does not increase the appropriation one dollar; it simply indicates in the line of what has already been done that an amount not exceeding $35,000 may be expended at the Falls of the Ohio, where, as I have the evidence before me, in the last four months five of the largest steamers we have on the Ohio River have been wrecked because of the failure to make this improvement. The amendment provides that the engineer may in his discretion use $35,000 of the amount at that point.

The estimates are for $70,000. The work has already been begun and is in progress. And I say to the committee, now at high water it is impossible for the steamboats to go either up or down the Ohio River at that point; and that has been the state of facts for six months in consequence of the erection of a wing dam. This is intended to remove that embarrassment. It is in accord with the recommendation of General Weitzell, of Colonel Merrill, and of the Department, and it does not appropriate a dollar more than the bill.

Mr. PAGE. Can not this be wisely left to the discretion of the Department?

Mr. WILLIS. Not any more wisely than in the other case.

Mr. PAGE. I understand this amendment does not increase the appropriation. If the committee desires to have it inserted, I shall not object.

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. DAWES. I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the amendment just adopted the following:
"And that $10,500 may be expended for continuing the improvement of the harbor at the mouth of the Muskingum River, Ohio."

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. ERRETT. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert after the amendment just adopted the following:
"That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to take such action as may be necessary to convey to Thomas Mulvehill, of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, all the amount of land erroneously conveyed back to the United States as set forth in a message from the President of the United States to Congress January 19, 1883." (Executive Document, page 46.)

Mr. PAGE. I understand this is simply to correct a mistake, an amount of land having been deeded to the United States in excess of the amount required for certain improvements.

Mr. ERRETT. It was merely a blunder in the deed.

The amendment was adopted.

The Clerk read lines 375 to 380, as follows:

Improving Hazy Lake Channel of Sault Saint Marie River, Michigan, via the Middle Neebish: Continuing improvement, $150,000.

Mr. WASHBURN. The word "hazy" should be "Hay." I ask that the correction be made.

The CHAIRMAN. In the absence of objection the correction indicated will be made.

The Clerk read the following:

Improving Chippewa River, Wisconsin: Continuing improvement, $2,500.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to strike out the clause just read. There is so large a number of these appropriations which do not seem to be justifiable that it seems almost invidious to designate a particular one. But in a report made to this House on the motion, I think, of the gentleman from California [Mr. PAGE], by the Secretary of War, there are some very instructive facts stated, which I trust will not be entirely lost sight of.

I think, indeed, that this report of the Secretary of War is one of the most valuable documents we have received from that Department or from any other Department of the Government for many years. It tends in a very large degree to correct the extraordinary character of reports which come to Congress through the engineers, who seem to be largely employed in urging considerations why appropriations should be made for the various local as well as general highways of the country.

If there is in the whole round of our official literature a thorough piece of sarcasm, I think it is to be found in this report to which I refer. I ask the Clerk to read the portion of the report which I have marked, in connection with this appropriation.

Before he does so, I wish to call attention to the fact that it seems to be assumed that this bill must pass, that these appropriations must be made; that this bill shall be neither increased nor diminished; that, indeed, there is inside of this House a close corporation, which having made up its mind to pass a given bill and to take a given number of millions of dollars from the public Treasury, no considerations are to induce a deviation from that policy. Now, I wish that bit of sarcasm to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

IMPROVING CHIPPEWA RIVER, WISCONSIN.

Continuing improvement..... $35,000

The protection of the high sand-banks is desirable, having the effect to hold back sand which eventually finds its way to the Mississippi, thereby obstructing the navigation of that stream. Expenditures for the improvement of navigation on the Chippewa, however, are mostly in the interest of the logging and lumber trade of that valley, and the work will largely consist in the removal of artificial obstructions heretofore created by these same interests; and further, the improvements must be carried on in such manner as to interfere with none of these interests. The artificial obstructions are boom-piers, sheer-booms, dams, floating logs, and the refuse from saw-mills. In one case a boom spans the entire width of the river. Floating logs are the greatest obstruction to steamboat navigation.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to call attention now to the extraordinary fact that you are asked to appropriate money for the improvement of a stream which, according to the statement of the Secretary of War, is only a lumbering stream, used for lumbering purposes, with booms extending entirely across the river; and the improvement of the stream consists in the removal of the artificial obstructions created by the very men who are interested in its navigation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BEACH. I will take the floor and yield my time to the gentleman.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am very much obliged to my friend from New York.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I desire, Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BEACH] yields his time to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN].

Mr. HOLMAN. I am very glad to see that the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. HUMPHREY] proposes to defend this item.

I do not indulge the hope, after what has already transpired, that I shall be able in the least degree to arrest the attention of this committee. Whenever a large body of gentlemen have made up their minds that a given bill shall go through, right or wrong, argument seems to be entirely useless.

Here is a stream, shown by the report of the Secretary of War, the very latest information we have, to be a lumbering stream, used for the purpose of lumbering alone, with booms extending clear across the stream, and the removal of those very artificial obstructions is the only improvement that can be made.

We last year appropriated $35,000 for this improvement, and it is now proposed to appropriate still more for carrying on the improvement. There is a bit of sarcasm in the first portion of this report of the Secretary of War on this improvement which should not fail to arrest the attention of gentlemen:

The protection of the high sand-banks is desirable, having the effect to hold back sand which eventually finds its way to the Mississippi, thereby obstructing the navigation of that stream.

The improvement consists in holding back the sand-banks from being washed into a river thousands of miles in length, where the banks of that river and also of its tributaries consist of these banks of sand.

Mr. WASHBURN. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him a moment?

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly.

Mr. WASHBURN. This appropriation is not for the purpose of removing the high sand-banks, but for another purpose entirely.

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly it is for another purpose. Let me read to my friend what that purpose is, for I am apprehensive that this report has been entirely overlooked:

Expenditures for the improvement of navigation on the Chippewa, however, are mostly in the interest of the logging and lumber trade of that valley, and the work will largely consist in the removal of artificial obstructions heretofore created by these same interests.

That is to say, this is a lumbering stream and the improvement is to remove the artificial obstructions created by those lumbering interests.

And, further, the improvements must be carried on in such manner as to interfere with none of these interests. The artificial obstructions are boom-piers, sheer-booms, dams, floating logs, and the refuse from saw-mills. In one case a boom spans the entire width of the river.

Yet under the constitutional limitation of power to appropriate money for national purposes you last year appropriated $35,000, and it is again proposed to appropriate more money for such a purpose as this. And that, too, in defiance of the well-considered expressions of the President of the United States submitted to the last session of Congress, in which in part at least he tries to call the attention of Congress to the doctrines of our fathers: that you have no right to take money from the public Treasury, drawn from the industries of the whole people, for the benefit of special and private interests. Now, what is this but a special and private interest to be promoted by expenditures from the public Treasury?

Mr. HUMPHREY. I desire to call attention to this Chippewa River. I have traveled it from Reed's Landing to Eau Claire, a distance of sixty miles, on steamboats. There are three steamboats that ply on this river.

Mr. HOLMAN. This report is the latest information we have on that subject.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Do not interrupt me. I did not interrupt you when you had the floor.

This appropriation of $2,500 is for the completion of the jetties which were commenced six or seven years ago. These jetties are at the mouth of the river where it empties into the Mississippi, at Reed's Landing, at the foot of Lake Pepin. This work, which is almost completed, is as much for the improvement of the navigation of the Mississippi River as that of the Chippewa, because anybody who has traversed that river knows that at Reed's Landing there is a large sand-bar. There is also what is called Bœuf Slough, which the Mississippi River Log Company were authorized by a bill passed here three years ago to use. This company takes from sixty to seventy million logs every year.

Mr. HOLMAN. But what was done with the $35,000?

Mr. HUMPHREY. I am going to tell you. Last year Congress made an appropriation of $35,000 to protect the yellow banks of the Chippewa River. The Secretary of War, it seems, did not use that appropriation, which is the appropriation the gentleman from Indiana has been talking about. Now I claim to know as much about this subject as the Secretary of War or anybody else. Those yellow banks are washed every year from the base of a bluff two hundred and fifty feet high, stretching for a distance of four to five miles about twenty miles above the mouth of the river, or a little above Durand, Wisconsin. When the Chippewa runs in a southwesterly direction it strikes that bluff and washes acres upon acres every spring, taking that silt into the Mississippi River. The Mississippi can never be improved below Lake Pepin unless you protect those yellow banks. This is what the engineer has said. The Secretary of War did not use that money; but if you undertake to improve the Mississippi River you must expend from $20,000 to $40,000 twenty miles up the Chippewa or you throw away all the money you expend below Lake Pepin. The Chippewa has a commerce of $7,000,000 per annum; that amount went out of the river last year.

Mr. FLOWER. It goes in rafts.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I beg the gentleman's pardon; there are three steamboats plying regularly.

Mr. FLOWER. Most of it goes in rafts, which are loaded at Eau Claire.

Mr. HUMPHREY. No, sir; the Omaha Railroad takes much of the lumber from Eau Claire.

Mr. FLOWER. It does not take it by boat.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I do not yield to the gentleman; I simply desire to say that this appropriation of $2,500 is to complete the jetties, a work recommended by the Secretary of War years ago. The appropriation of last year is held in abeyance; but although that money was not used last year it must be used, for this work is more for the benefit of the Mississippi River than for the Chippewa.

Mr. HOLMAN. It has not been used yet, I believe?

Mr. HUMPHREY. No, sir; but when the Secretary of War comes to understand the facts he will use it.

[Here the hammer fell].

Mr. WASHBURN. Mr. Chairman, the appropriation now under consideration is not the one of last year, referred to by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], nor is it for the same purpose. That appropriation, which has not been expended, was for removing the yellow banks. I rose, however, to call the attention of the committee to the fact that the Chippewa River is really a very important stream so far as the commerce of the State of Wisconsin is concerned. The entire commerce of that river, as shown by the report of the Chief of Engineers, is something like $7,000,000. It is true that this business is very largely lumber business, consisting of lumber-rafts, log-rafts, &c.; yet there are two lines of steamers plying this river during the whole season of navigation, from Reed's Landing (where the river enters the Mississippi), as far as its navigation extends. The Secretary of War in his report says:

The result of the work to date has been in the highest degree beneficial to the navigation interests of the stream. Lumber rafts are no longer detained by bars at the confluence of the Chippewa and Mississippi, a fact fully appreciated by those accustomed to detention before the work of improvement commenced.

The report further states:

Steamboats commenced running April 21, and ceased running November 16. Two steamboats plied between Reed's Landing and Eau Claire; one steamboat plied between Reed's Landing and Dunnville.

The report then goes on to give the large amount of tonnage, the receipts for carrying passengers, &c. This river is in my immediate section of country, and I know of what I speak. This is a legitimate appropriation. The amount is small, and the object is to complete a work long since commenced. There is no propriety whatever in striking it out.

Mr. ANDERSON. I move to strike out the last word. Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not know personally about this particular river. The Secretary of War probably does know. But I rise to call attention to something which I think the country should know something about, and that is, while it may not be true in this case—I do not know about this case, and do not allege it to be true in this case—yet there have been improvements made in river and harbor bills under the guise of developing the commerce of the country which were simply and solely for the benefit of large lumber companies to float down their logs free. I would not be surprised if the two steamboats to which the gentleman referred are two boats owned by a lumber company for the purpose of pulling their logs down.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I know those lines do not.

Mr. ANDERSON. Then this is an exception, for very frequently they are, and very frequently these men who have capital enough to buy large tracts of land, and who have capital enough to put men in logging camps and bring out those logs and make a handsome profit, are not the men to do what other men with capital engaged in business must do, build their own ways, but have the audacious impudence to come to the Congress of the United States and say to the Government, say to the tax-payers, "You have got, in order to develop the commerce of the country, to take some ditch and put water enough in it, or pull stumps enough out of it, or pull away booms across it in order to let us bring down our logs." When you come to developing an important point such as Chicago or Toledo, when you come to develop a great river, I would be willing to vote any amount of money which could be judiciously expended; but when, under the guise of a national improvement, you come to take the money of the people and put it directly into the pockets of those companies, I would see you all—[applause and laughter]—well, happy in Heaven before I would vote for it. [Laughter.]

Mr. FLOWER. Such appropriations make this bill ridiculous.

Mr. HUMPHREY. The gentleman does not know anything about it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I now ask for a vote on my motion to strike out the clause.

Mr. ANDERSON. I should like to read, in support of the statement I have made, an extract from the engineer's report:

Under date of December 7, 1880, Ingram, Kennedy & Co., of Eau Claire, Wisconsin, extensive dealers in lumber, lath, and shingles, say:

"Had it not been for the work done by the Government at the mouth of the Chippewa, we could not have run our rafts or boats during the low water of the past season."

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the motion of the gentleman from Indiana to strike out the clause.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 18, noes 62.

Mr. ANDERSON. No quorum has voted.

The CHAIRMAN appointed Mr. HOLMAN and Mr. HUMPHREY as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 50, noes 97.

So the motion was disagreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Fox and Wisconsin Rivers, Wisconsin: Continuing improvement, $150,000, $5,000 of this sum to be available for the improvement of the channel between Green Bay and Depere: Provided, That before any money shall be expended the Secretary of War shall appoint a commission of five, two of whom to be officers of the United States Engineer Corps, and three civilians, whose duty it shall be to carefully examine the improvements made and proposed, and report to the Secretary of War whether in their judgment the interests of commerce and navigation will be advanced sufficiently to warrant the continuation and completion of this project. If their report be favorable, this appropriation is made available. If in the judgment of the board the work should not be continued, it shall be their duty to report to the Secretary, and he to Congress, what disposition should be made of the work. The Secretary of War is hereby authorized to fix the compensation of the members of this board, and a sum sufficient to defray all expenses connected with this examination is hereby made immediately available out of the sum appropriated. And the said commission shall inquire and report the extent to which the public works on this river are used to furnish water-power to private persons and corporations, and where and by whom so used, and whether such persons or corporations pay any compensation for such privileges.

Mr. HOLMAN. I reserve all points of order on that paragraph.

Mr. RANDALL. I move to strike out "five," in line 392, and insert in lieu thereof "three;" then strike out the words "two of whom," and in line 394 the words "and three civilians;" so the proviso will then read as follows:

Provided, That before any money shall be expended the Secretary of War shall appoint a commission of three, to be officers of the United States Engineer Corps, and whose duty it shall be to carefully examine, &c.

My object in the amendment is that we shall not be put to the expense of employing three civilians. I believe that a board of three officers of the United States Army will be sufficient to accomplish what is sought by this paragraph.

Mr. PAGE. I do not wish to interrupt the gentleman from Pennsylvania, but the committee is disposed to accept the gentleman's suggestion.

Mr. BRAGG. I object to it.

Mr. PAGE. Very well.

Mr. BRAGG. I desire to offer an amendment to the section in a line prior to that which the gentleman from Pennsylvania proposes to amend.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman propose an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. BRAGG. I propose an amendment to a prior line in the paragraph, and I insist I called the attention of the Chair before the gentleman from Pennsylvania was on the floor.

Mr. RANDALL. I will relieve the Chair of that. I will withdraw mine until the gentleman's amendment has been adopted or rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. By consent the amendment may be withdrawn.

Mr. BRAGG. There is no question of consent about it.

The CHAIRMAN. There is a question of consent. The Chair had recognized the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. BRAGG. I rose and addressed the Chair before the gentleman from Pennsylvania offered his amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. It is simply a question of recognition.

Mr. RANDALL. I will relieve the Chair, as I have stated, by withdrawing my amendment for the present until after the gentleman from Wisconsin shall have been heard. But I give notice that I will renew the amendment immediately afterward.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin is recognized.

Mr. BRAGG. Then I desire to move to strike out the words "and Wisconsin," in line 387. Upon that amendment, Mr. Chairman, I desire to address myself to the remarks made by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. MCLANE] on yesterday. I have not time, sir, within the five minutes allowed me under the rules of this debate to join the gentleman, who talks so eloquently and fluently of the little veins and the large arteries of commerce. I have not time to strike a poetic vein and with him describe the soft dew-drop falling upon the mountain-side, and follow it in its course thence to the rivulet, from the rivulet to the creek, from the creek to the river, from the river into the Gulf or the mighty Atlantic, and then turn and glorify myself by talking about the great national American system of commerce that is to be advanced. But I have this to say, sir, that when gentlemen talk about that sort of thing, having this liquid, pleasant sound about it, and run on into the realms of poetry, they do as most of the poets do, forget in their ardor for the rhythm of words the facts of the subject upon which they talk, and, like the Methodist preacher at the camp-meeting, are pressing on constantly for those good things that are before and which they desire to grasp.

I was told in reply to my remarks on yesterday by the gentleman from Maryland, when I had stated that the Wisconsin River was not navigable by steamboats, that I was entirely in error and the statement was not correct. And I was told also that sooner than take my statement with reference to its condition the gentleman preferred to refer to the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, where the witnesses, grave, learned, and distinguished men, had testified in opposition to my statement, and that he preferred to follow the testimony so given to the statement which I had myself made.

I concede that in the RECORD, as his remarks appear published this morning, the conclusion is that the gentleman from Maryland alluded to the Fox River and not to the Wisconsin, but I desire to say to him just this, that he is as much mistaken in reference to the Fox River as he is about the Wisconsin River. In the first place, I have the case of the Supreme Court lying before me, and there was no testimony taken in it at all. So much, therefore, for the testimony of the grave gentlemen who gave evidence in that case that the river was navigable. The case of the Montello came to the Supreme Court of the United States undefended, because an exception was taken to the libel in the district court and the libel was dismissed. There was no testimony taken at all. And the Supreme Court, in endeavoring to find out where the Fox River was, stated not that there is any evidence but that—

The libel does not impart any information as to the character of Fox River, or its connection with other waters, and it is only from the general allegation of the libel that the vessel transported passengers and merchandise upon the navigable waters of the United States, preceding the allegation as to the transportation on Fox River, that we are justified in inferring that the libel intended to state that Fox River was a navigable water of the United States.

We are supposed to know judicially the principal features of the geography of our country, and, as a part of it, what streams are public navigable waters of the United States. Since this case was presented we have examined with some care such geographies and histories of Wisconsin as we could obtain from the Library of Congress, to ascertain if possible the real character of Fox River, and to render the fiction of the law as to our supposed knowledge of the navigable streams in that State a reality in this case; but from such examination we are still in doubt whether Fox River has any such connection with other waters as to form with them a continued highway over which commerce is or may be carried on with other States or foreign countries in the customary modes in which such commerce is conducted by water.

So much for the statement to this House that the testimony in that case showed that this river had been at some time only navigable by flat-boats but was now navigable for steamboats.

Again, that case was for a libel violating a law of 1838 by not having the vessel registered; and the violation was in 1867, when the Fox and Wisconsin Rivers, neither of them, were under the control of the United States, and neither of them had any improvement going on under the United States. They then were under the control and being improved by a corporation organized and created by the State of Wisconsin, and it was several years subsequent to that time, when the navigation was found out to be wholly and totally worthless and a fraud, that that company retained all the lands they had and sold back the empty hulks to the United States for three hundred and odd thousand dollars, and saddled upon the General Government the further expense of the work and all the damages to private citizens that had been incurred by reason of carrying it on.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MCLANE, of Maryland. I desire to say a word or two in reply to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG].

When the gentleman from Wisconsin rose on yesterday to correct my statement I did not understand him, did not hear him distinctly, and did not make any distinction between the Wisconsin and the Fox. I had no reference to the item in the bill for the improvement of the Fox and Wisconsin Rivers. I was making a general reference to the question of navigability, and in illustration of the law I referred to the decisions of the Supreme Court in reference to the navigability of the Fox River. I did not understand the gentleman from Wisconsin as referring to the Wisconsin River; if I had I would have promptly called to my own and to his attention the error that was between us.

Now, I understand the gentleman to appreciate the difference between us, and to make the same point as to the Fox River that he made yesterday as to the Wisconsin.

Mr. BRAGG. The gentleman is mistaken. The point I make is that the case itself does not make any such statement with reference to the Fox River as given by the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. McLANE, of Maryland. Now, the gentleman from Wisconsin and myself understanding each other perfectly, and the Fox River being in question, he takes exception to my statement yesterday as to what the decision of the court was.

Mr. BRAGG. Oh, no.

Mr. McLANE, of Maryland. If the gentleman has in his hand, as I suppose he has, the report of that case, the Montello steamer case, if he has that report in his hand I should like to have it.

Mr. BRAGG. The gentleman misunderstands me. I am not speaking with reference to the decision of the court.

Mr. McLANE, of Maryland. I referred only to that, and I should like to know what the gentleman from Wisconsin refers to.

Mr. BRAGG. I am speaking as to what the gentleman from Maryland stated was the testimony in the case.

Mr. McLANE, of Maryland. I am referring to that also, and if the gentleman from Wisconsin will send me the book I will read to him what Judge Davis said.

Mr. BRAGG. Judge Davis did not deliver the opinion. The opinion was delivered by Judge Field. The libel was for not registering under the law of 1838.

Mr. McLANE, of Maryland. As the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] gave notice of his intention to renew his amendment I will take time to look at the opinion of the court to which he refers, and will then reply to the gentleman from Wisconsin, and call his attention to the authority and case to which I referred.

Meanwhile I wish it to be understood it was the Fox River I referred to yesterday; and I shall make a further reference to that river to justify what I said yesterday as to the decision of the Supreme Court.

Mr. GUENTHER. I ask for the reading of the amendment offered by my colleague [Mr. BRAGG].

Mr. BRAGG. It is to strike out the words "and Wisconsin" and the letter "s" in the word "rivers."

Mr. HAZELTON. I move to strike out the last word.

I do this that I may say a single word in reply to the general position taken by my colleague from the State of Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG]. He evidently does not believe in the feasibility of the improvement of either the Fox or the Wisconsin Rivers, and desires that that work upon which the Government has already expended a large amount of money shall terminate and cease.

We have had some two or three surveys of the Wisconsin River by the Engineer Department of this Government and one provision something like this. Two or three years ago—I have not time now to find the law—Congress passed a law authorizing a commission to visit the Wisconsin River in low water. General Wright was on the commission, I think. It was a commission of distinguished engineers; and they examined the Wisconsin River in low water and made a report recommending the continuation of the improvement.

A large amount of public money has been expended upon the Fox, and there are there some very fine water-powers created by that improvement, which were incidental to the improvement only; and a water way has been opened along the Fox which is of the greatest value to the commerce of our State.

Now, while I have no particular interest beyond anybody else's in the improvement of the Fox and Wisconsin Rivers, because they are works that are national in their character, and if improved must contribute to the general commerce of the nation, still, let me say that J. K. Warren, one of the most distinguished engineers of this Government, now dead, made a careful survey of both of these rivers; and among the most important reports contained in the engineer archives is that great report of J. K. Warren, in which he makes a report of the cost, and in it lays down different plans by which the Fox and Wisconsin Rivers can be made navigable and made to contribute largely to the highest interests of commerce in this nation.

If we are to vote upon the estimates of engineers; if we are to take their judgment, then my colleague's whole argument stands absolutely without any foundatian whatever in opposing this great work.

How am I to vote here except upon the judgment of engineers? How am I or any other man to understand whether we are fooling away the money from the national Treasury unless we rely absolutely upon these reports made by engineers distinguished in reputation and capacity?

I am no engineer, I am no sailor or navigator, and I rely upon the reports of the Department.

Mr. WISE, of Virginia. I should like to ask the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. HAZELTON] a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. WASHBURN. I rise——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman rise to oppose the amendment or to speak in favor of it?

Mr. WASHBURN. I rise to oppose the amendment.

Mr. HAZELTON. This merely provides for a re-examination of the river by the same engineeers who have already reported in favor of this improvement. There is not a dollar to be appropriated unless they again find in its favor. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. WASHBURN. I trust the pending amendment will not be adopted. I desire to say to the Committee of the Whole that there was a disposition on the part of the Committee on Commerce not to recommend any appropriation for this work. I think I may say that it was the opinion of the committee that it was a work that had better be dropped; that the benefits that would result from the completion of this work would not be commensurate with the large expenditures that would have to be made.

The committee finally decided that instead of making an absolute appropriation they would provide for this board, so that all the facts might be reported to Congress, and then if it should be concluded that the work was not of such importance as to justify its being carried on, some recommendation might be made with reference to disposing of the property of the Government. It seems to me that is just precisely the position in which this matter should be left. Let us obtain this report from a commission of disinterested parties, who will make recommendations with regard to the probable expense, and also give their judgment as to the benefits that will flow from the expenditures should it be made.

Mr. WHITE. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. WASHBURN. Certainly.

Mr. WHITE. I would like to know on what authority we can appropriate $5,000 to be expended in improving the channel between Green Bay and Depere?

Mr. GUENTHER. Because that is a part of the Fox River.

Mr. WASHBURN. It is a part of the whole scheme.

Mr. WHITE. If you can expend $5,000 in that direction, why can not you expend it in any direction?

Mr. WASHBURN. That is a part of the scheme. The original scheme was to create navigation between the Mississippi River and the Great Lakes. That is the scope of this improvement. A vast amount of money has already been expended, and to complete it and make it practically of any value would require the expenditure of an immense additional sum.

The committee felt that before recommending any appropriation they had better call a halt and have this matter carefully examined in all its bearings, and have a report from the commission which it is proposed to raise.

Mr. McMILLIN. Why provide for a commission such as is provided in this bill? Why not have the Engineer Corps make the report?

Mr. WASHBURN. I think it is well to have a representative from business men on that commission; but it is immaterial to me.

The committee rose informally; and Mr. ALDRICH took the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, informed the House that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill of the House of the following title:

A bill (H. R. 7191) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, and for the armament thereof, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

Mr. BRAGG. In reply to my colleague [Mr. HAZELTON], through whose district meanders the beautiful Wisconsin River, and in order to place myself right before such persons as may be scattered along its barren sands who expect in the next few years by virtue of the river and harbor appropriation bill to see the British lion and the French and all other flags floating on vessels as they pass up to Sac City, I say to him, in the language of a very distinguished man of our own State, the first preliminary step toward improving the Wisconsin River is to lath and plaster it. [Laughter.] The sand is at hand and all you have to do is to work up the lime and hair and you may get it so as to hold it sufficiently together to follow the trace of the stream.

I remind him that when the Saint Paul Company, then the Mississippi Railroad Company, built its bridge at Sac City, across the Mississippi River, when promises were high that the Hennepin Canal would be finished so that vessels of war could go through that canal into Lake Michigan, up the Sturgeon Bay Canal, up the Fox River improvement and down into Wisconsin, before they allowed the bridge to be built, they required a draw to be put in it after the manner of draws in bridges on the Ohio River, in order to enable these vessels to pass through so that there should be no disturbance of navigation.

Experts were called before a committee of our Legislature, and they testified before us and located the channel of the stream where the bridge should be built and designated where the draw should be put in. The railroad company built the bridge and put in the draw at the point designated. After the next spring flood the draw was over dry land, and the channel run away down under another arch of the bridge, where it still remains.

General Warren was not in favor of improving the Wisconsin river upon any plan which has been recommended. He thought that the improvement of the river upon any plan whereby the expense would at all correspond with the benefits to be gained was utterly unfeasible; and General Warren, let me tell you sub rosa, was relieved from duty on that work because he could not spend the money as fast as the people wanted him to do it.

Year after year, while we have made appropriations for the Fox and Wisconsin Rivers, the Wisconsin River has been left out in the expenditure of the money, except in the digging of a little canal, about the proper size for a respectable bullfrog, from one river to the other. Since the two rivers have been "improved" the navigation by boats has been driven from both rivers.

When I settled in Wisconsin in 1850 there ran upon Lake Winnebago and upon the Fox and the Wolf Rivers a line of steamboats. There was the Montello, the Badger State, the Appleton Belle, the Peytona, and the Indiana. They carried freight; business was then done in the way of commerce up and down the Fox and Wisconsin Rivers. The United States have taken hold of those rivers; have spent between two and three millions of money, beside the land grant which was given away to a corporation that now claims to own all the water running on the Fox River. That company has now upon its hands from one hundred and fifty to two hundred lawsuits for damages by reason of the overflow of lands and the drowning out of people of the Fox River valley. They have driven out the boats; they have destroyed the commerce, but they have erected valuable water-powers and have built cut-stone spouts to carry the water to factories which are being constructed on that stream for the benefit of private corporations and individuals, who sell out that water by the cubic inch while Uncle Sam pays the expense and keeps the machine in order. That is the result of the "improvement." The commerce, what there was, has been destroyed, partially from that cause and partially from another. There is a railroad running down either bank of the only part of that stream which was ever subject to improvement so as to render it navigable at all in the interest of commerce.

Mr. TOWNSEND of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, ever since I have been a member of the Committee on Commerce the improvement of the Fox and Wisconsin Rivers has year after year come before that committee and has been the subject of serious consideration, the conclusion being in general unsatisfactory. Appropriations have, however, been made from time to time to continue the work, which the committee believed would not be of very great importance when concluded.

This year the question was again carefully considered, and after full consultation with parties interested in that section of the improvement, the committee finally adopted the suggestion that a commission be appointed to consist of two engineers and three civilians, to be selected from all parts of the country other than Wisconsin, so as not to be prejudiced by any local feeling or interest. It was decided that this commission should consider, first, the practicability of concluding the work from an engineering standpoint and its cost; secondly, whether the work when completed would be worth anything to the commerce of the country. The latter branch of the subject was one which it was supposed commercial and business men throughout the country would know most about; hence the proposition that the commission should embrace three civilians as well as two engineers was in my judgment very wise. It was further decided that none of the money should be available for the continuation of this work until the report of this commission should be received and approved by the Secretary of War, who, if the report should be favorable, will be authorized to go on and expend the money.

I know of no better way of disposing of this question for the present than this. It looks to a full investigation of all the facts. Every suggestion such as those presented by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG] will be carefully considered, and I doubt not a wise conclusion will be arrived at. My judgment has always been—and the more I have investigated the subject the more this opinion has been strengthened—that this work when completed will be of no practical advantage. If you send there to make an examination a board consisting of engineers, as has been done on two or three occasions, they will report simply upon the practicability or feasibility of the work from an engineering standpoint. But we propose that this commission shall take a wider and more practical view, such a view as Congress should take in acting upon the question. I trust, therefore, that this clause of the bill will be allowed to remain as it is, for I think it will be productive of the best results.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. Why should we not strike out the clause?

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. GUENTHER. Mr. Chairman, representing most of the territory in which this improvement is located, I am perfectly willing that the qualifications of the members of this commission should be so prescribed as to exclude any possibility or suspicion that any of them may be unduly influenced. All that we want is a fair, impartial examination by unprejudiced and competent persons. Inasmuch as no part of this money is to be available unless the report of the commission should be favorable, I hope that the appropriation proposed in this provision will be made. I will add that the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] is perfectly acceptable to me.

Mr. McLANE, of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, the issue made by the gentleman from Wisconsin on my left [Mr. BRAGG] has been modified this morning; and we both stand before this committee to-day agreeing that it is the Fox River that is in question. As between him and myself the only question at issue is whether there was testimony in the case to show that the Fox River is navigable.

Mr. BRAGG. That is not the question at all.

Mr. McLANE, of Maryland. Pray tell me what it is.

Mr. BRAGG. I stated to you distinctly I referred to the testimony of the witnesses of whom you spoke as to the change made in the stream from a flat-boat stream to a steamboat stream.

Mr. McLANE, of Maryland. Pray, will the gentleman from Wisconsin give me my five minutes? For what I said did refer to the witnesses, and I now hold in my hand the court's opinion to fully confirm what I said. It is not the opinion of the case, however, to which the gentleman from Wisconsin refers.

Mr. BRAGG. Oh!

Mr. McLANE, of Maryland. The case to which he referred reported in 11 Wallace was dismissed because the testimony was not sufficient to sustain the libel or show the navigability of Fox River; but the further testimony was taken which the court considered sufficient, and it is reported in 20 Wallace under the same title, to wit, the Montello case; and that is the case to which I referred. The opinion was delivered, as I stated on yesterday, by Judge David Davis, and he states the case reported in 11 Wallace was dismissed because the evidence was insufficient. Now he says the court has full evidence to show the river was not navigable before this improvement for anything but flat-boats, but when it was improved it became navigable for steamers; and he says it was none the less a navigable stream when it was navigated by flat-boats. That is what I said yesterday, and that is what the gentleman from Wisconsin endeavors to correct to-day. And he cites the case in 11 Wallace where the libel was dismissed, Judge Field delivering the opinion of the court, because the evidence was not sufficient. But the gentleman did not cite the case in 20 Wallace where the court consider the evidence is sufficient, Judge David Davis delivering the opinion of the court. Although the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG] is no poet, he is a Wisconsin lawyer, and I suppose he knew very well the libel which was reported as dismissed in 11 Wallace was entertained and reported in 20 Wallace. That is the record in this case.

Mr. PAGE. Can not we have a vote now?

Mr. BRAGG. I rise to a question of personal privilege. As a Wisconsin lawyer, I desire to call the attention of this committee and of the lawyer from Maryland to the fact that, if he will look at that case, it was for libel in the year 1867, and the United States had never spent one dollar on that river.

Mr. McLANE, of Maryland. I have looked at them both. I have them before me, and I know very well what is the issue between the gentleman from Wisconsin and myself.

Mr. BRAGG. Not one dollar on that river. I do not care what his case states, you will find the act when the United States took charge of it.

Mr. McLANE, of Maryland. I will report the text of the case.

In the Montello case, reported in 11 Wallace, Judge Field says, "the libel does not impart any information as to the character of Fox River, or its connection with other waters;" and then he proceeds to dismiss the libel and observes that "the parties will be able to present by new allegations and evidence the precise character of Fox River as a navigable stream." In the Montello case reported in 20 Wallace note is taken of the fact that the case had been before the court before, as reported in 11 Wallace, but that the libel was defective and the evidence insufficient to determine the question, and that it was remanded on further proceedings to enable the parties by new allegations and evidence to present the exact character of Fox River as a navigable stream, and that as this was now done there was nothing in the way of a correct solution of the inquiry. Judge Davis then proceeds to deliver the opinion of the court and declares that the Fox River is a navigable stream and was a navigable stream before it was improved by the United States, and one of the highways referred to in the ordinance of 1787; and Judge Davis continues with the observation that "the true test of the navigability of a stream does not depend on the mode by which commerce is or may be conducted, nor the difficulties attending navigation; if this were so, the public would be deprived of the use of many of the large rivers of the country over which rafts of lumber of great value are constantly taken to market." And he refers to the fact that Fox River was navigable by Durham boats only, propelled by animal power, when loaded drawing only two feet of water, before it was improved, and yet it was none the less within the jurisdiction of the United States as a navigable stream as it continued to be after its improvement and navigation by steamers.

Mr. PAGE. Let us have a vote.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask before the vote is taken to have the attention of the Chair called to the point of order I reserved on this paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana did reserve the point of order.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to make the point of order, Mr. Chairman, and to confine it to that portion of the paragraph to be found in lines 403 and 404, which read as follows:

The Secretary of War is hereby authorized to fix the compensation of the members of this board.

If the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania be adopted of course the motion to strike this out would be entertained. But I wish to present the question of order whether or not on a river and harbor bill there can be independent legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Indiana to again state his point of order. Is the Chair correct in understanding it is confined to lines 403 to 404?

Mr. HOLMAN. I reserve the point of order on the entire paragraph. Of course that embraces all portions of it. I could not probably move more than one point of order at a time. Without regarding it as overruled I confine my point now to the words I have read, as follows:

The Secretary of War is hereby authorized to fix the compensation of the members of the board.

Mr. PAGE. If the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsyvania should be adopted, there would be no point of order, I imagine.

Mr. HOLMAN. That would be stricken out as a matter of fact. But I desire to present the point of order whether or not there can be independent legislation upon a bill appropriating money for the improvement of rivers and harbors. These appropriations are based, at least such has been heretofore the plan, upon the reports of the Chief of Engineers, transmitted to Congress through the Secretary of War. Of course I concede that to the extent of the works recommended to Congress through the Secretary of War there may be to that extent amendments or appropriations against which the point of order would not lie; but what I wish to inquire is whether or not there can be independent legislation upon a bill of this kind?

Mr. PAGE. Upon the point of order——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not desire to hear the gentleman from California upon the point of order. The Chair is not aware of any rule under which this point of order can be sustained, if the clause is germane, and the Chair thinks this is germane. It is not a new thing——

Mr. HOLMAN. The Chair holds that it does not come under the provisions of the third clause of the twenty-first rule then at all?

The CHAIRMAN. No. This is not a general appropriation bill coming within the purview of Rule XXI. That has been so held, as far as the present occupant of the chair knows, without dissent.

Mr. HOLMAN. So, if the amendment is germane, it is in order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair so holds, and following the line of precedents.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG], which has been reported.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 16, noes 30.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL. I now offer the amendment which I temporarily withdrew.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania will be kind enough to again state his amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. I move to strike out "five," in line 392, and insert in lieu thereof the word "three;" strike out, in lines 392 and 393, the words "two of whom to be;" and in line 394 the words "and three civilians;" so that if it is adopted this paragraph will read:

Provided, That before any money shall be expended the Secretary of War shall appoint a commission of three officers of the United States Engineer Corps, whose duty it shall be, &c.

As the Committee on Commerce have agreed to accept that amendment, I will not detain this committee by giving the reasons for its adoption, because I do not desire to waste any time.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the amendment will be considered as agreed to.

Mr. BRAGG. I object.

Mr. CANDLER. Mr. Chairman, I investigated this matter very carefully in the committee and was opposed to it. Had it been a new project I should not only have opposed it there but I should have opposed it here upon the floor of the committee. But after that investigation, when I found that a great deal of money had been already expended upon this improvement, and when I found earnest advocates in favor of it, I believed it was wise not to vote to strike it out without further investigation. I shall accept, as one of the committee, therefore, the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

I believe we can get as accurate and satisfactory an opinion with less prejudice from three officers of the Engineer Corps than we can from three engineers and two civilians combined; and I hope that this clause will be adopted and the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania acceded to. I think then it will be just to the country for their protection and just to these men who advocate the continuance of this improvement.

Mr. PAGE. I now move that the committee rise for the purpose of limiting debate.

Mr. BRAGG. I have two amendments to this section which I desire to offer.

Mr. PAGE. The gentleman can do that after we go back into committee.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts, having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr CANNON reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union having had under consideration the river and harbor appropriation bill had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. PAGE. I move now that when the House next resolves itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to further consider the river and harbor bill that all debate upon this paragraph and pending amendments shall be limited to five minutes.

Mr. WASHBURN. Make it one minute.

Mr. RANDALL. I desire to offer a further amendment.

Mr. BRAGG. I would like to ask the gentleman from California if there will be an opportunity to explain the amendments I propose to offer?

Mr. PAGE. I will give the gentleman from Wisconsin all of the time allowed for debate if this motion is agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair desires to submit the motion of the gentleman from California.

Mr. PAGE. I propose to modify the motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will hear the modification.

Mr. PAGE. I now move that all debate upon this paragraph and all amendments thereto be limited to ten minutes, not to exclude the offering of other amendments.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman now moves to limit debate upon the paragraph and all amendments to ten minutes. The latter part of the motion is not necessary.

Mr. ANDERSON. I would suggest to the gentleman from California that he limit debate upon amendments now pending. This is a very important subject.

Mr. PAGE. I can not do that.

The motion to limit debate was agreed to.

Mr. PAGE. I now move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to further consider the river and harbor appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. CANNON in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. By order of the House all debate upon the pending paragraph and all amendments is limited to ten minutes.

Mr. BRAGG. I desire to offer as a substitute for the proposition of the gentleman from Pennsylvania what I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the words "Engineer Corps," in line 393, insert:
"But neither of whom shall be connected in any manner with any Government work in the State of Wisconsin."
After the word "civilian," in line 394, insert:
"Neither of whom shall be an employé of the Engineer Corps of the United States, nor of any member of such corps; nor shall he be in any wise interested in any water-power affected by such river improvement, nor in any contract for public work under the control of the United States or any officer thereof; nor shall he be a resident of any county bordering upon either the Fox or Wisconsin Rivers, or through any part of which either of said rivers run."

Mr. PAGE. I hope that will be accepted.

Mr. RANDALL. I give notice that I shall ask a division of the amendment.

Mr. BRAGG. My proposition is, first, after the words "Engineer Corps," leaving the section to stand as it is, to provide that no member of the Engineer Corps who now has charge of any public work in Wisconsin shall be one of that board. My reason is that the pride of caste and of the profession is so great in that corps that if any of his fellows engaged in jobs—or I should say in contracts—in the State, if called to act upon a brother officer's contract where he has lived and built his home, and got a nice yacht and an elegant place to live, he will be very loath to decide he ought to be ousted and turned away.

I move, after the word "civilians," to limit the provision so that no civilian employé of the United States Engineer Corps shall be selected. Why? Because all through our State they have civilian engineers who are doing their work, and, unless limited, they may hire a man who is now their own foreman, who will come in as a civilian engineer and be there to hear their case and decide in their favor.

I restrict them also by providing that no man who shall be such a civilian employé shall have any interest in any water-power that is affected or benefited by the work. I make it also a restriction that no man who is interested in any Government contract over which these Government engineers have control shall be selected, because all those persons stand in an attitude where the influence of the opinion of the engineer in charge is almost conclusive and final.

I then restrict it further, that no one of those men shall be selected from any portion of the country bordering on these rivers from the mouth of the Fox to the mouth of the Wisconsin, so as to relieve their judgment from any prejudice that may be brought to bear by reason of a hope that some time some great benefit may result to some particular locality from the work. And I prefer to have the civilian employé to the engineer, because I regard the judgment of the civilian much better than I do the judgment of the engineer where he is sitting in judgment upon himself; and having encouraged by his reports an expenditure of two and a half millions of money of the Government, he will be exceedingly loath to decide that he had given opinions upon which that money had been uselessly expended.

I can give you perhaps an illustration of the reason why I have not so much confidence in engineers on the subject of their power of management and control of water and how to grant relief. I refer you to the celebrated case of Banks's fleet up the Red River when the Engineer Corps dropped their hands powerless by their sides and all the American engineering science that is now to control the Mississippi was unable to get the fleet of General Banks over the rocks of the Red River. The engineers lay down and went to sleep over it. But the river lumbermen put a little common sense to the task, and their common sense in twenty-four hours floated out the fleet, and as it floated out it floated away all the respect I have for the judgment of that corps over the judgment of anybody else.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. RANDALL. To the first branch of the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG] I have no objection. But I take issue with the gentleman as to the propriety of calling into this commission any civilian. I differ entirely in opinion with the gentleman from Wisconsin—I do it with great modesty—as to the Engineer Corps of the United States Army. My experience and association with these gentlemen has been entirely favorable to their intelligence, their honor, and their character in every way.

Mr. ANDERSON. I shall offer an amendment to strike out $150,000 and insert an appropriation of $5,000, to be expended for the improvement of the channel between Green Bay and Depere. In other words, I want to strike out the Fox and Wisconsin improvements. The facts which have been developed here are simply astounding and startling. There is not any question about it. In the main that money has been used for the benefit of private corporations, and it is money of the United States which has been so used.

It has been stated by some members of the committee that they intended to omit this appropriation; but they did not do it. Now what do we want a commission for to tell us whether we had better omit this appropriation or not? Why can not this House determine that? The taking of United States money under the guise of general commerce to be applied for the benefit of these mill-owners up there is, in my judgment, an entirely wrong idea.

So far as the Fox River is concerned, while it is more nearly a navigable stream than the Wisconsin, yet gentlemen will find the commerce is not very heavy on the Fox River. And furthermore, there have been appropriations I have no doubt for both these streams heretofore. Why, then, when cutting down on your own standard appropriations for improving rivers and harbors—why let these men benefited along your river, and in particular these mill-men and water-power owners, come in here for the purpose of using the money of the United States? I do not think it is right, and I shall vote against it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG], offered as a substitute for the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL].

Mr. RANDALL. I favor the first amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin, which regulates the character of the appointments of Army engineer officers. The other branch of the amendment I hope will be voted down, because I want the amendment striking out the provision as to the appointing of civilians on this commission to be carried.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman demand a division of the question on the substitute?

Mr. RANDALL. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the first division of the substitute.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the words "Engineer Corps," in line 393, insert:
"But neither of whom shall be connected in any manner with any Government work in the State of Wisconsin."

Mr. RANDALL. I have no objection to that.

Mr. PAGE. I hope that will be adopted.

Mr. GIBSON. I rise to oppose the amendment, and I do it for the purpose of defending the character of the officers of the Army.

The CHAIRMAN. All debate upon the pending paragraph and amendments thereto has been exhausted.

The question was then taken upon the first division of the substitute, and it was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the second clause of the substitute.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "civilians," in line 394, insert:
"Neither of whom shall be an employé of the Engineer Corps of the United States, nor of any member of such corps; nor shall he be in any wise interested in any water-power affected by said river improvement; nor in any contract for public work under the control of the United States or any officer thereof; nor shall he be a resident of any county bordering upon either of the Fox or Arkansas rivers, or through any part of which either of said rivers may run.

Mr. RANDALL. I hope that will be voted down; it is entirely inconsistent with my proposition.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. I regard the civilian part of the commission as of far more importance. We have now all the engineer reports we want.

The question was taken upon the second clause of the substitute; and upon a division there were—ayes 27, noes 28.

Mr. BRAGG. No quorum has voted.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. BRAGG and Mr. RANDALL were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 58, noes 90.

So the second clause of the proposed substitute was not agreed to.

The amendment of Mr. RANDALL was then agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL. I desire to further amend by inserting in line 403, after the word "to," the word "expend;" also, to strike out in line 404 the words "fix the compensation of the members of this board;" also, to insert, after the word "examination," the words "and such amount as necessary;" so that the clause will read:

The Secretary of War is hereby authorized to expend a sum sufficient to defray all expenses connected with this examination and such amount as necessary is hereby made immediately available of the sum appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ANDERSON. I now move to amend, in lines 388 and 389, by striking out "$150,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$25,000." In my judgment $25,000 is enough.

The question was taken upon the amendment of Mr. ANDERSON; and upon a division there were—ayes 8, noes 26.

Mr. ANDERSON. No quorum has voted.

Several MEMBERS. Do not make that point.

Mr. ANDERSON. There are $150,000 involved here; $25,000 I think is enough.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. GUENTHER and Mr. ANDERSON were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers proceeded to count, but before concluding,

The CHAIRMAN said: The Chair desires to announce to the committee that no quorum has voted. There is evidently a quorum present, and unless it is the pleasure of gentlemen to vote the business of the committee will be suspended.

Mr. ANDERSON. If we can be allowed a vote in the House on this appropriation of $150,000, I will withdraw my point of no quorum.

Mr. GUENTHER. We can not do that.

Mr. ANDERSON. Then we will go on with the count.

Mr. GUENTHER. We will fight it out right here.

The tellers concluded the count; and reported that there were—ayes 46, noes 102.

So the amendment of Mr. ANDERSON was not agreed to.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I move to amend in line 399, after the word "favorable," by inserting the words "and shall be approved by the Secretary of War;" so that the clause will read:

If their report be favorable and shall be approved by the Secretary of War, this appropriation is made available.

Mr. GUENTHER. There is no objection to that.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WHITE. I now move to strike out the entire paragraph as amended. I desire to be heard on that motion.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order now; all debate upon the pending paragraph has been exhausted.

Mr. HOLMAN. Before the motion to strike out is voted upon I move to amend the paragraph by striking out from the word "continuing," in lines 387 and 388, down to and including the word "expended," in line 391; also, beginning in line 398, strike out these words:

If their report be favorable and shall be approved by the Secretary of War, this appropriation is made available.

I ask that the paragraph be read as proposed to be amended by me.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Fox and Wisconsin Rivers, Wisconsin: The Secretary of War shall appoint a commission of five, to be officers of the United States Engineer Corps, but neither of whom shall be connected in any manner with any Government work in the State of Wisconsin, whose duty it shall be to carefully examine the improvement made and proposed, and report to the Secretary of War whether in their judgment the interests of commerce and navigation will be advanced sufficiently to warrant the continuation and completion of this project. If in the judgment of the board the work should not be continued, &c.

Mr. PAGE. Does that amendment strike out the appropriation?

Mr. HOLMAN. It does; it authorizes only the commission.

Mr. PAGE. That is not right; I hope it will not be adopted.

The committee rose informally; and the Speaker resumed the chair.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, informed the House that the Senate had appointed Mr. MAHONE and Mr. MCDILL in place of Mr. BAYARD and Mr. BECK, excused, as the managers of the conference on the part of the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill of the House (H. R. 5538) to reduce internal-revenue taxation.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], which has been read.

The question was taken; and upon a division there were—ayes 5, noes 34.

Mr. HOLMAN. No quorum has voted.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. GUENTHER and Mr. HOLMAN were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 45, noes 104.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The question then recurred on the motion of Mr. WHITE to strike out the paragraph; which was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Wabash River, Indiana and Illinois: Continuing improvement, $20,000.

Mr. COBB. I move the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out "20" and insert "30;" so as to appropriate $30,000 for continuing the improvement of the Wabash River.

Mr. COBB. Mr. Chairman, everybody knows that the Wabash is an important river—a great tributary to the Ohio and thence to the Mississippi.

Mr. BROWNE. What does it contribute to the Ohio?

Mr. COBB. It contributes large volumes of water as well as great quantities of commerce. When the gentleman and I were boys it floated perhaps as much produce upon its bosom as any river of its length in the country. It passes through the richest country on the globe. There is no valley in the world that is richer than the valley of the Wabash.

The river has been improved; $150,000 have been expended upon it. The Department recommends a further appropriation of $95,000 for this purpose; and the Committee on Commerce reports an appropriation of $20,000, an amount which I submit is altogether inadequate for a river of such importance. It is four hundred and forty miles long, and in its present condition is navigable more than two hundred miles from its mouth, with the exception of the Grand Rapids and one or two other points.

Mr. BROWNE. To what point are the upper waters of the Wabash navigable?

Mr. COBB. To La Fayette. The gentleman does not seem to know anything about a river which is a boundary of his State and runs through it. I have seen upon the Wabash River at my town twenty-nine New Orleans steamers, as large vessels as navigate the Mississippi River. I do not mean to say that I have seen them in recent times, since the growth of railroad communication. But I understand that the object of the river and harbor bill is to give us water ways as a means of transportation competing with the railroads. If this be so, the Wabash River is entitled to a greater appropriation than that proposed in this bill.

I do not care to occupy the time of the committee, but I do insist that this river for the last few years has not received the amount of money which ought to have been appropriated for it—the amount which its volume of water and its importance as a water way justify. I trust the Committee of the Whole will adopt my amendment.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. COBB. I submit the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 417 insert:
"Improving White River, Indiana: Continuing improvement, $20,000."

Mr. COBB. Mr. Chairman, I presume that this amendment will not be adopted. I offer it merely for the purpose of seeing what this committee will do with the report which has been made on this subject.

Here is a stream upon which the Government has already expended $65,000. A further appropriation of $50,000 for its improvement is recommended by the Corps of Engineers to be made for the present year. This stream passes through a very rich section of country—a section not surrounded by railroads as the Wabash River is. The Committee of the Whole might therefore with propriety adopt this amendment as a means of giving to the people along the line of this river the means of transporting their produce.

Let me make a single statement to illustrate the value of this stream. Three years ago I took occasion to examine the statistics, and I found that at the point where the White River intersects the Terre Haute and Indianapolis Railroad there had been shipped from the upper waters of this stream more than 3,000,000 feet of lumber, more than 450,000 bushels of corn, more that 375,000 bushels of wheat, more than 600 carloads of general merchandise. Now, after $65,000 have been expended upon this stream, it is proposed by the committee, as I understand, to abandon the work and let the stream go. There is no railroad adjacent and parallel to this river. It is the only outlet for a large section of rich and fertile country, embracing also vast coal-fields.

Now, will the Committee of the Whole give to these people who live along the line of this stream and within fifteen or twenty miles of it a more convenient and a cheaper method of getting their produce to markets, or will they give to other streams not half so important to the commerce of the country thousands of dollars, and allow this river to remain unimproved because it lies in the great Mississippi Valley, with its rich wheat and corn fields, with its pork and beef that feed the world? Will you withhold an appropriation from this stream and give money for rivulets in the mountains because the members of the Committee on Commerce happen to favor such appropriations? I ask the Committee of the Whole to do justice in this case. This bill as it stands is an outrageous bill. I have attempted to cure some of its enormous defects.

Mr. PAGE. It appears from the engineer's report, on page 1977 (the appendix), that many bridges cross this stream without a draw. These obstructions must absolutely prevent any navigation of the river.

Mr. COBB. Where are those bridges built?

Mr. PAGE. I will read from the report:

A bridge has recently been constructed across the portion of the east fork, for the improvement of which Congress has made appropriations. This bridge is without a draw, and is built without any authority of Congress.

Mr. COBB. Exactly.

Mr. PAGE (continuing the reading):

The bridge of the Evansville and Terre Haute Railroad, near Hazleton, has now no draw worth the name, the bridge in that respect being much worse than it was last year. (See Report of Chief of Engineers, 1881, page 2007.)

The laws regulating the crossing of the smaller navigable rivers are too general and too little understood to be effective.

A definite law giving the requirements to which all bridges on such rivers must conform, and providing means for its enforcement, would be a great step toward peventing obstructions, which the officer charged with improvements is powerless to remove.

Mr. COBB. I understand that perfectly well.

Mr. BROWNE. Now, Mr. Chairman, this amendment touches me in a tender point. I love the White River and my colleague has stated but the truth when he says it passes through one of the richest agricultural regions on the continent. We have commerce—abundance of it. We have large harvest-fields that turn to gold under the summer's sunshine. We have immense corn-fields that turn brown in the autumn frost. We have mills and lumber and everything on the White River. There is but one trouble about it, and that is, it has not got any water [laughter], or at least enough to make it a stream of any consequence to commerce. For that reason I shall vote against the amendment.

Mr. COBB. My colleague lives more than two hundred miles off by the way of this river to its mouth, and I doubt whether he has ever seen one hundred and fifty miles of it next to its mouth. I have never heard of him being in that part of the State but once.

Mr. SPRINGER. When was that?

Mr. COBB. About six or eight years ago, and he will remember perhaps better than I do.

Mr. BROWNE. Yes; it was immediately after Congress made an appropriation to survey the river to Gosport. I went down there because a goose had floated up that far and landed, and was not able to find water enough to get back again. [Laughter.] I sympathized with the goose. [Great laughter.]

Mr. COBB. This river it has been reported by the Engineer Corps can be made navigable, and is now up to Portersvile, eighty miles from its mouth. And if the gentleman makes that issue I can only say he does not know what he is talking about. I know this river runs up to the northeastern part of the State. Its source is way up in the northeastern part, and it traverses the southwestern portion, emptying into the Wabash River. But I know another thing. There is not an hour in the last twenty years, to my knowledge, when boats have not been plying between Portersville and the mouth of the river, where the Engineer Corps have determined to improve it. And Congress has appropriated from year to year for the last five years $20,000 a year. That money has been expended on this river, and the Engineer Corps report to-day that $50,000 can be profitably expended on this river. Notwithstanding the ignorance in regard to this river displayed by my colleague, because he lives where there are no streams, and where his people are wealthy and have been for years and have built railroads and turnpikes, when he comes down into my section of the State he ought to remember we cherish our rivers. And I am in favor of proper appropriations for rivers and harbors; but I do say the favoritism shown for the last four or five years, to my knowledge, in regard to rivers and harbors is an outrage on this great people. These bills ought to be defeated, or else they ought to be corrected and made apply to such water ways as benefit the people.

Mr. BROWNE. I move to strike out the last word. Now, I know my friend is especially the champion of river and harbor appropriations.

Mr. COBB. The gentleman knows that is not true in any sense. [Laughter.]

Mr. BROWNE. I do not understand the gentleman raises any question of veracity.

A MEMBER. It was only said in a Pickwickian sense.

Mr. COBB. It does not go on the RECORD in any Pickwickian sense. The gentleman will understand he can not state a falsehood against me without my denying it. He takes issue with me.

Mr. BROWNE. I desire to repeat, Mr. Chairman, I know my colleague has a very tender regard for river and harbor appropriations. The only trouble with him is he can never get a bill that is precisely to his taste. If you could only put in one of the White rivers in the United States why it would be entirely satisfactory, and my colleague would vote for that with alacrity. The truth is everybody familiar with Indiana knows that White River is not a stream of any importance. I undertake to say if I could have a commission appointed it would be demonstrated that the Congress of the United States have appropriated more money for its improvement than is equal to the aggregate value of all its commerce, including the value of the boats and other means of transportation on its waters.

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman from Indiana must be mistaken; because when he and I were boys the flat-boats went from there loaded with grain and produce of all kinds to New Orleans.

Mr. BROWNE. With grain?

Mr. SPRINGER. Yes, sir; when we were boys that was the only outlet; and the mode of transportation from that country was by flat-boats down that river.

Mr. BROWNE. I am not talking about the younger days of the Republic, when the gentleman from Illinois was a boy. There were many flats in those days. [Great laughter.]

Mr. COBB. Let me interrupt my colleague for a moment. I do not think he heard my remarks——

Mr. BROWNE. Oh, I heard the gentleman call me a liar, but I don't mind that. [Great laughter.] If my colleague desires to apologize I will hear what he has to say.

Mr. COBB. Most certainly I apologize, if that is what my colleague wants, if he has any such interpretation in his mind of my language. Now, will he yield to me for a moment?

Mr. BROWNE. To make an apology? Certainly. [Laughter.]

Mr. COBB. Oh, no; I want to ask a question.

Mr. BROWNE. Just a moment, and then I will yield with pleasure to my friend. Mr. Chairman, seriously the reason why I took the floor to talk on this subject at all was because this is an Indiana stream. Every gentleman who is familiar with my course here knows that I have voted steadfastly against river and harbor appropriations. I voted against them because I believed they included within them streams that were of no national consequence, among other reasons; and that it was a waste of the public treasure to make such provision for them. And when the gentleman there, my colleague, presented this amendment I desired to call to the attention of the committee a stream within my own State affecting my own people, referring to it because I might be held by them to a responsibility for the opposition I assumed.

Now, I am glad to see my colleague zealous in his attempt to secure an appropriation for his constituency. He is entirely right in doing so. I honor him for it. But after he secures it, and I think I am not mistaken about it, he will vote against the bill; and after he votes against the bill and it becomes nevertheless a law, and has reduced the revenues of this Government ten or fifteen millions of dollars, applied to all of these innumerable little streams throughout the country, he will proclaim on the stump, as he did last year during the canvass, that it was a depletion of the Treasury by a Republican Congress. He will hold up this thing as an evidence of Republican profligacy, and make political argument and capital upon it. Now, what I desire is that if my colleague intends to take a part of the "steal," let him stand up and defend it when it has been done.

Mr. PAGE. Unless we can come to a vote, I shall move that the committee rise.

Mr. COBB. If the gentleman will allow me a moment——

Mr. PAGE. I will yield to the gentleman for a moment.

Mr. COBB. I only want to say to my colleague that when he asserts that I stood upon the stump and charged this river and harbor appropriation bill as an evidence of Republican profligacy and extravagance, he is simply mistaken. I did not mention the river and harbor appropriation bill in my speeches. It was not necessary, as there were other issues pending. My people did not require it. There were other matters which were of more importance to the people at that time, and the gentleman certainly does me injustice when he makes that assertion. He was not in my district during the canvass and knows nothing of it. In no public speech of mine did I allude to it in the manner he has suggested, although I voted against the bill.

Now the gentleman says this is a stream of no importance. This river, Mr. Chairman, has two tributaries, two large branches, the East and West Fork, which come together some sixty miles above its mouth, and these Forks are navigable streams and always have been. They propose now to improve twenty miles above the junction of the rivers on the East Fork and make eighty miles of navigable river. Now, he says these two great streams, more than two hundred miles long, which traverse a State like Indiana and drain it, which come together and form a junction sixty miles from its mouth, do not form a navigable stream at any point. I disagree with the gentleman. It indicates to my mind that he has not studied the subject; certainly he knows nothing of that section of the State in which I live if he makes that assertion.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana.

The amendment of Mr. COBB was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Saint Anthony Falls, Minnesota: Continuing improvement, $15,000.

Mr. DWIGHT. I move to strike out "improving Saint Anthony Falls, Minnesota," in lines 422 and 423.

I understand, Mr. Chairman, that that water-power belongs entirely to a private company; that it has no connection with the commerce of the country; that it is simply owned as a private water-power. I would like to know if there is anybody here who can tell why it is that property should be improved at the public expense any more than any other private property belonging to any other private individual in the country.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken.

Mr. WASHBURN. I demand a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 21, noes 65.

Mr. DWIGHT. I call for tellers.

The question being taken on ordering tellers, there were ayes 5—not a sufficient number.

Mr. DWIGHT. I raise the point that a quorum did not vote.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the ruling of the Chair it is too late to raise that point.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. DWIGHT. I move to reduce the amount to $3,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out "$15,000" and insert "$3,000;" so it will read:

"Improving Saint Anthony's Falls, Minnesota: Continuing improvement, $3,000."

Mr. WASHBURN. Perhaps some explanation of this item should be made, though I had not supposed it was necessary. The gentleman from New York [Mr. DWIGHT] moved this same amendment in last session of Congress and it was voted down. He has been very unhappy ever since.

Now, as a matter of fact I desire to say this Government has expended something like half a million dollars in preserving the Falls of Saint Anthony and thereby the stretch of navigation above the falls. This sum of $15,000 is simply to repair damages done by the floods.

So far as any water-power is concerned, there never has been any water-power created by these improvements. The destruction of the falls would have interfered to some extent with the water-power at that point, but the improvement was made for the purpose of preventing the destruction of the falls, and of course the navigation of the stream above there, and about half a million dollars has been expended for that purpose. If the committee feel this work should be allowed to go to destruction, let it adopt the amendment.

Mr. DWIGHT. I wish to ask the gentleman from Minnesota whether this is not private property owned only by individuals, the Government having no interest in it?

Mr. WASHBURN. There is not a word of truth in that statement.

Mr. DWIGHT. Who owns that water-power? And is not this improvement made for the benefit of that water-power?

Mr. WASHBURN. It was not made for the benefit of any water-power. The gentleman before making such statement ought to have acquainted himself with the facts; and if he states that, he states what is absolutely false.

Mr. DWIGHT. Why was the improvement made?

Mr. WASHBURN. To preserve the navigation of the river above Saint Anthony's Falls. Their destruction would have created rapids for a long distance, and the navigation of the river above would have been practically destroyed.

Mr. DWIGHT. I take issue with the gentleman on that statement.

Mr. WILSON. When after due deliberation a line of policy has been marked out by the Government of the United States, that policy ought to be followed out; and upon that theory I should be glad to support this appropriation. Last night, however, I presented to this House exactly a parallel case.

Mr. WASHBURN. Not at all.

Mr. WILSON. I beg your pardon. I presented an exactly parallel case where after mature reflection and full investigation Congress adopted a line of policy to carry out certain improvements, and where Congress directed to be expended and there was expended a large amount of money, much more than half the amount required.

Last night I asked, in the same line of policy as the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. WASHBURN] to-day, for a vote to finish that work, a work national in its importance, contributing largely to the interests of the country, carrying out many millions of feet of valuable timber that found a ready market throughout the American States and Europe. It was the pleasure of the committee and of the gentleman from Minnesota last night to strangle that enterprise, to repudiate the action of a former Congress, to say to the country that the money heretofore expended might go to waste; that this Government now would not give a mite or a mere pitiful sum with a view to completing improvements of large value.

I reserve the rest of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. HORR. I do not wish to take up the time of the committee. If the committee so desire, I would rather have a vote.

Mr. NEAL. In 1871 I was in the State of Minnesota and examined these falls as carefully as any casual observer could. I went up the river to Saint Cloud and Crow Wing, within ten miles of Brainard, and I have no recollection of seeing anything in the shape of a boat—only saw-logs and skiffs. I ask if the navigation above Saint Anthony's Falls is for any purpose except floating saw-logs? I do not believe there is a steamboat on the river above the falls. As I understood at the time when in Minnesota from intelligent persons that water-power was owned by a private corporation which leased it out, and the Government money was being expended for the benefit, substantially if not ostensibly, of that corporation. The object was to keep up a water-power. If the falls were entirely torn up, while it might make some rapids it would not prevent logs and skiffs going down the river as now.

Mr. HORR. The committee gave this question very careful consideration. The water-power below these falls is not created by the improvement of the falls at all. Nothing more is intended than to prevent the crumbling and destruction of the falls, and thereby to keep the water above the falls in a navigable condition.

Mr. NEAL. For what?

Mr. DWIGHT. For what except saw-logs?

Mr. HORR. I refer to the report of the engineers.

Mr. WASHBURN. I have lived in Minnesota for twenty-five years, and may be supposed to know something of the facts in this case. The river above the Falls of Saint Anthony has been navigated by steamboats ever since I have been there.

Mr. FLOWER. What line of boats?

Mr. NEAL. Is there a steamboat above the falls to-day?

Mr. WASHBURN. I understand there is. I am inclined to say, however, that with the building of a railroad on either side of that river above the falls the navigation of the river is a matter to-day of comparatively little importance; but before the roads were built it was a matter of a good deal of importance.

Mr. FLOWER. Allow me to ask the gentleman this question: When this great reservoir which we appropriated $300,000 for last year, located above the Falls of Saint Anthony at the headwaters of the Mississippi, that is going to add to the navigable capacity of that river and prevent low water, shall be completed, will not the logs of the gentleman float down to where his mill is located and to where your railroad is constructed?

Mr. WASHBURN. Very possibly.

Mr. FLOWER. I would not ask this question except for the fact that you last night called the metropolitan press blackguards, and the gentlemen on this floor who, representing the city of New York, saw fit to oppose the bill last year you called blackguards.

Mr. WASHBURN. I did not say that.

Mr. FLOWER. And your idea of a great reservoir at the headwaters of the Mississippi River which is going to enable you to float your logs down to your mill is one of the provisions which led me to vote against your bill.

Mr. HORR. That is not in this bill.

Mr. FLOWER. I am glad it is not.

Mr. WASHBURN. I presume that if reservoirs are constructed, as I hope and expect they will be, they will improve the navigation of the Mississippi River as far down as Dubuque, and improve it especially above the Falls of Saint Anthony. And I expect it will improve navigation for saw-logs and steamboats and all other kinds of navigation. If it does not I shall be very much disappointed.

I took occasion to say that the clamor raised against these internal improvements was initiated in the city of New York, and I repeat it here to-day. I do not know that that is charging everybody opposed to this bill with being blackguards.

Mr. FLOWER. One more question in all fairness.

Mr. WASHBURN. Very well.

Mr. FLOWER. I want your plain judgment as a business man upon this improvement of the Mississippi River. I asked it yesterday of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] and he said the Mississippi River Committee had not taken that matter into consideration.

Do you not believe that if the Government should spend millions of dollars in buying the timber lands from which you and other lumbermen are cutting off the timber about the headwaters of the Mississippi River, you would not keep the water in that stream up as it is kept in other streams where the timber has not been removed, and at less cost?

Mr. WASHBURN. I do not think it would have the slightest effect in the world.

Mr. FLOWER. I think it would. I think that is a very important point which should be looked at.

The CHAIRMAN. Time for debate upon the pending amendment is exhausted.

Mr. NEAL. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. COX, of New York. I renew it. I desire simply to reply to what fell from my distinguished friend last evening. We had not the opportunity then to confront him with the truth; we were not allowed to speak.

But I say to him that when he gives the falsehood to my friend and colleague [Mr. DWIGHT], as he did a moment ago, he must be careful how he repeats matters of comment and infamous clamor concerning the city of New York and its press.

The city of New York was not peculiar in denouncing the infamies of your river and harbor bill of last year. Every paper of consequence in Cincinnati, Chicago, and Saint Louis denounced the composite and peculiar nature of the bill. I am forbidden by the rules to properly describe it. [Laughter.] The Secretary of War, an honest man, has told you what it means.

The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. WASHBURN] has had his little earnest, kindly words here for his own private reservoirs. More than that, bills have been brought before the Committee on Appropriations asking for money to be paid because there has been more or less of ruin caused by our river and harbor improvements. Plantations have been destroyed, railroads have been helped in their interests, because this House has made certain sinister improvements of rivers, which meant water-powers, hydraulics.

This whole bill is based, more or less, on local and on private interests. I denounce any man here who says that the people of New York city are peculiar, or that the press of New York is peculiar in denouncing that peculiar, unnecessary, and unconstitutional mode of giving away the public money for local and private interests simply because we have a surplus in the Treasury.

Mr. HORR. Now let us have a vote.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I desire to inquire of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. WASHBURN] in regard to this water-power; who is the owner of it?

Mr. WASHBURN. This improvement has nothing whatever to do with the water-power.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I want to know who is the owner of this water-power.

Mr. WASHBURN. There are two water-powers, one on the east side of the river and one on the west side; there are two corporations.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. Do you know any of the members of these corporations?

Mr. WASHBURN. One is called the Minneapolis Mill Company—I have a small interest in the stock of that company—and the other is the Saint Anthony's Falls Water-Power Company. I wish to disguise nothing in this matter.

I shall not take it to heart if this provision be voted out. In my capacity as a member on this floor I do not propose to cast any vote from personal considerations or one which can by any possibility be so construed. If it be the judgment of this committee that this provision has any personal bearing with respect to myself more than any other citizen of Minnesota, I prefer that it should be struck from the bill.

Mr. FLOWER. I wish to say in all fairness that I am well acquainted with the Falls of Saint Anthony at Minneapolis. The Government has done a great work there. It has preserved it, because it is a loose shelving rock, which high water cuts down, and by this means it has been put back several hundred feet. I think that the work of the Government, which makes a smooth and level passage for the water, has tended to preserve the falls. But I was not aware before that this water-power belonged to two corporations.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. DWIGHT, it was agreed to; there being—ayes 44, noes 38.

Mr. WASHBURN. I move that the paragraph be struck out.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Gauging waters of Lower Mississippi and its tributaries: Annual expense of gauging the waters of the Mississippi River and its tributaries, continuing observations of the rise and fall of the river and its chief tributaries, as required by joint resolution of February 21, 1871, $5,000.

Mr. PAGE. As we have now reached the provision with reference to the improvement of the Mississippi River, I will ask that it may be temporarily passed until we have finished the remainder of the bill and that then we return to it and limit the time for debate.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. The trouble is that if we adopt the gentleman's suggestion, this item in regard to the Mississippi improvement may come up late in the afternoon or this evening, when few members will be here. I think it had better be taken up now, when there is a full attendance of members.

Mr. PAGE. Very well; I do not insist upon my suggestion. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. DUNNELL having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. CANNON reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the river and harbor appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. PAGE. I move that when the House shall again resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the further consideration of the river and harbor bill, all debate on the Mississippi improvement clause and all amendments thereto be limited to forty minutes. I make this motion after having consulted to some extent members of the Mississippi River Committee.

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to a question of order—that the motion to limit debate on a clause can not be made until that clause has been considered.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. There is no doubt that the gentleman's point is entirely good. I suggested it to the gentleman from California when he made the motion that the committee rise. But as it would be a waste of time to go back into committee for the sake of reaching the precise point when the motion will be in order, I suggest to the gentleman that as he has by making his point put on record his protest against this proceeding being a precedent, he might withdraw it.

Mr. HOLMAN. Very well.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I move to amend the motion of the gentleman from California by striking out "forty minutes" and inserting "one hour."

Mr. PAGE. I will ask the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] and gentlemen who have been members of the Mississippi River Committee whether forty minutes will be satisfactory?

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I insist on my amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think we had better devote an hour to this discussion. However, I am not tenacious about it.

Mr. PAGE. I will take a vote on the proposition fixing forty minutes as the time.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois, it was not agreed to.

The motion of Mr. PAGE was agreed to.

Mr. PAGE. I move that the House go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. CANNON in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House has limited the debate on the paragraph which the Clerk will read and all amendments thereto to forty minutes.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Mississippi River: That the sum of $1,500,000 be, and is hereby, appropriated, or so much thereof as may be necessary, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the improvement of the Mississippi River from the head of the passes to Cairo, including the harbors of New Orleans, Natchez, Memphis, and the reaches at Plum Point and Lake Providence, and the deflection of the waters of the Red and Mississippi Rivers from the Atchafalaya River; $500,000 from Cairo to the Illinois River, including Alton Harbor, and $150,000 from the Illinois River to the Des Moines Rapids, including a stone and brush revetment at or near Quincy; which said sums shall be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War, in accordance with the plans, specifications, estimates, and recommendations of the Mississippi River Commission, $2,150,000.

Mr. PAGE. I am instructed by the Committee on Commerce to offer the following amendment:

After the word "Natchez," in line 451, insert the word "Vicksburgh."

Mr. PAGE. That was agreed to by the committee and was omitted by mistake; it is to correct a clerical error.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PAGE. I have another amendment to offer:

Strike out, in line 457, the words "a stone and brush revetment at or near" and insert after "Quincy" the word "bay."

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. Let me call the gentleman's attention to more specific language: Strike out all after the word "including," in line 456, down to and including the word "near," in line 457, and insert "improvement of Quincy Bay."

Mr. PAGE. That is what the committee instructed me to offer, and I so modify my amendment.

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky. The gentleman has moved after "Memphis" to insert the word "Vicksburgh," and that has not been voted on.

The CHAIRMAN. That amendment has been adopted.

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky. I desire to offer another amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Parliamentary courtesy requires the committee amendments shall be first recognized.

Mr. PAGE's amendment as modified was adopted.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I offer the following amendment——

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky. I do not wish to lose the opportunity to offer my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will be heard in time. The Clerk will now read the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 461 insert:
"Provided, That no portion of the money hereby appropriated shall be expended at any other point than those herein specified."

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky. I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky. That the gentleman has no right to offer an amendment to line 460 when I have one to move to line 450.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I have no disposition to discuss the amendment. I presume there will be no objection to it.

Mr. THOMAS. That meets with the view of the committee who had the matter in charge.

Mr. PAGE. I should like to call the attention of the gentleman from Louisiana to this amendment.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. The gentleman from Louisiana has seen me.

Mr. GIBSON. I am opposed to the amendment.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. KING. I make the point of order that is not in order, as it does not reduce expenditure.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order.

The amendment of Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan, was adopted.

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky, was recognized.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. I desire to offer an amendment at the end of the clause.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will withhold his amendment for a moment. The gentleman from Kentucky has been recognized to offer an amendment.

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert the words "Hickman and Columbus" after the word "Memphis," in line 451.

Mr. SPRINGER. What will be the effect of that?

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky. I desire to be heard for a moment upon the amendment.

Mr. PAGE. I do not know of anything that warrants that amendment in the estimates submitted.

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky. I will explain the effect of the amendment.

All I desire to say is this, and I shall detain the committee but a very few moments. In this section of the bill is embraced certain harbors lying along the Mississippi River that may be improved, namely, New Orleans, Natchez, and Memphis, and another has been added, Vicksburgh, on motion of the chairman of the Committee on Commerce. I offer to include in the same category the harbor at Columbus and at Hickman, and I desire to make this remark in support of the amendment: Hickman is an important harbor. It is the terminus of the railroad running from Nashville to the Mississippi River. It is an important harbor, the terminus, as I have shown, of an important railroad. When you come up to Columbus that is the termination of the Mobile and Ohio Railroad, a railroad that runs from the Gulf of Mexico to Columbus. On the other side of the river comes in the Iron Mountain Railroad from Saint Louis to Columbus, and it is certainly as important a point as Natchez, and in my judgment decidedly more important in its commercial bearing. If there is any reason, therefore, to spend the public money in improving the harbors of the points named in the bill, why do you leave out two important points such as Hickman and Columbus, the terminus of leading lines of railway? I ask these to be inserted in the bill. I claim that Columbus is far more important than Natchez in a commercial point of view, and so is Hickman, and they are equally entitled to consideration. The citizens at both these points have been compelled to protect the banks of the river from caving and washing at their own expense and have had no aid from the Government, and there is no valid reason why you should expend public money at Memphis and Natchez to improve their harbors and give nothing to Hickman and Columbus, which are more important points, as I have shown, being the termini of important railroad lines. Natchez is no commercial point and has no important railroad line at all. I want to see justice done while you are appropriating the public money for improvement of harbors on the Mississippi, and I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. DUNN. Does the engineer recommend this?

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky. If it is not found necessary to improve these harbors it need not be done, but it is as necessary as it is to improve the harbors at Memphis and Natchez and more important to the commerce of the country that they should be improved.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. PAGE. I rise to oppose the amendment, and for the following reasons: In the first place there is no estimate or survey with reference to these harbors.

In former appropriation bills of this character until the last one passed by Congress the harbors of New Orleans, Natchez, Vicksburgh, and Memphis had been appropriated for under separate items.

All of them being on the Mississippi River, it was deemed by the committee that they would naturally conflict with the plans adopted by the Mississippi River Commission, and it was thought best, therefore, by the committee to include them in the present bill under a general head of appropriations for the Mississippi River, and thus place it under the control of the commission so that this conflict may not arise. That is the reason why they have been added, as has been suggested, to this bill; and the only reason that I oppose the suggestion of the gentleman from Kentucky is that there has been no plan submitted, no estimate made, no survey undertaken, and no recommendation by the engineers in favor of it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky.

The amendment of Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky, was not agreed to.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided further, That no money appropriated by this or any former act shall be used for the construction or repair of levees along the Mississippi River, except in the fulfillment of existing contracts.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts desire to be heard?

Mr. ROBERTSON. I raise the question of order upon one part of that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I make the point of order upon that part referring to a change of previous law. The amendment proposes to restrict not only the appropriation now about to be made but also to affect the appropriations, or the law making appropriations, in the last session of Congress. I suggest, therefore, that the proposition of the gentleman from Massachusetts is a change of existing law, and therefore obnoxious to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment is evidently germane. The Chair is not aware of any rule of the House which would make it subject to the point of order, and therefore overrules the point.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. I understand now that the remainder of the time allowed for the discussion will be divided between those in favor and those opposed to the amendment. If the Chair is willing, I will take charge of the time in favor of the amendment.

Mr. GIBSON. If there be no objection, I will take the time in opposition to it.

The CHAIRMAN. If it can be agreed the gentleman from Massachusetts will be considered as controlling one-half of the time allowed for the debate——

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I think this should go on under the five-minute rule. That was the understanding, and I do not think that any gentleman ought to control the time.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I desire to know under what rule or by what authority gentlemen upon either side of this House undertake to control the time on this amendment, any more than on any other amendment which may be offered and discussed in the Committee of the Whole?

The CHAIRMAN. Of course this arrangement would have to be by unanimous consent.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. Then I object to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was willing, if unanimous consent was given, to allow gentlemen to make this arrangement. Feeling obliged in its application to take into consideration the fact that certain gentlemen were present who had lately been on the special committee to investigate the improvement of that river, the Chair desired, if there was no objection, to recognize one of the members of that committee to control the time in favor of the proposition submitted by the committee, and a gentleman on the opposite side to control the balance of the time.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. I object to any such arrangement.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. My proposition is plainly enough stated in the amendment. It is to provide that hereafter no money appropriated in the former acts or this act shall be expended for building or repairing the levees along the Mississippi River, except in the fulfillment of existing contracts.

Why the exception? Because the commissioners have gone on and made certain contracts for doing work and we must fulfill those. I say, go no further. Why? Because for the reasons I stated quite at length yesterday we now in this bill by general consent agreed that the commission shall do no work for the next year out of any money they have in hand, and which we now give them, except at Plum Point and Lake Providence.

Now, I say that every one must admit that if they be limited to the works at those two places, one thirty-eight miles long and the other twenty-five miles long, there is no reason or science in building leeves anywhere on the line of the Mississippi River out of that money. Why? Because while you are working upon those two reaches you of course, in plain language, leave the back door open and the front door open. What use is there in going down and building levees below those reaches or in going above and building them there? Why build any alongside? Because it would have no effect on the work at those two particular points.

We had in the first act appropriating a million dollars a proviso that the commission should not expend any money for levees except as means for deepening and improving the channel for navigation purposes. And they did not spend any. General Gillmore, in his testimony before the Committee on Commerce last year, testified at length and said the commission were not in favor of building levees very much, and they saw in that action of the House of Representatives, or rather of Congress, an indication that the people did not desire they should build levees except for navigation purposes, and therefore they did not build them.

But the House put a little lubricating clause into the appropriation bill of last year, and the commission have gone on under that smoothly into the expenditure of $1,010,000, as I stated, much of it beyond the reach of the improvement on those parts of the river where the navigation is invariably good at all stages of water. Nobody questions it.

It may be argued here, "Let this commission alone." They have said, and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HORR] repeated it to us yesterday, "We do not want to build levees this year." He says there is not a cent in here for levees, and here gentlemen stand up and say, "Then trust this commission; do not hamper them; let them alone." That is all very well, but I want to tell this House that the people in that section will not let this commission alone. They want, many of them, levees for protection of land; and they make themselves felt as against that commission. They want it for one purpose, while Congress is granting openly the money for another.

Now, I believe it will be a good act and a generous act to that commission, that we indicate our purpose in granting this money. Express it in this act. We say "we do not want to spend it for levees this year;" we say so among ourselves here. Why not say it in the act? You say it is an impeachment of the integrity and judgment of the commissioners. Not at all. I know many of the Army engineers; I have full confidence in them; but I find that the Army engineers change their minds sometimes on the Mississippi River problem. Why, the commission refer to Major Suter's report of 1875 as the foundation for their theory, and I remember when Major Suter was on the stand and was confronted with his report of 1875 he said he was obliged to abandon much of that doctrine. He had found out that he was wrong and wanted to take it back. There was passage after passage that he said was wrong in his report of 1875.

Now, I want to submit that if this be true of a distinguished engineer—and it is saying nothing of him that may not be said of any of us in all matters of human experience—honest no doubt, capable no doubt, but still, of course, dealing with this gigantic problem of controlling the floods of the Mississippi Valley, it is very plain indeed that this work is experimental, that which may be the thought of to-day will not ripen into the plan of to-morrow. And so when the commission told us, as they did a year ago, that they can not say certainly this matter of levees is of great importance in the improvement of the channel, when they have gone on this year and spent large portions of the appropriation for the protection of lands, and when it is said in this House openly and publicly "not a cent in here for levees and the commission do not want it for levees," I say let us deal like men, put a limitation in the act and say there shall be nothing expended for levees out of this money.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. GIBSON. Realizing the importance of improving the Mississippi River in the Forty-sixth Congress I had the honor to offer a bill which became a law June 28, 1879. It was an act not to protect or to reclaim alluvial lands, but in its very language "an act to provide for the appointment of a Mississippi River commission for the improvement of said river from the head of the passes near its mouth to its headwaters." The President was authorized to appoint upon this commission three of its members from the Engineer Corps of the Army, one from the Coast and Geodetic Survey, and three from civil life, two of whom should be civil engineers.

Who can deny the constitutionality of the purpose for which this commission was created? Who will assert that the greatest river in our country shall not be improved? Who are the members of this commission? Hon. R. S. Taylor, of Indiana; Lieutenant-Colonel Q. A. Gillmore, Major C. B. Comstock, Major Charles R. Suter, army engineers; Professor Henry Mitchell, of the Coast and Geodetic Survey; J. B. Eads and B. M. Harrod, civil engineers.

These are all distinguished gentlemen, above reproach. It was the genius of Eads that built the jetties and opened the way from the great valley to the sea.

After several years of scientific investigation they submitted their plan for the improvement of the river. I can not state it better than to employ the language of Hon. R. S. Taylor, speaking on behalf of the scientific commission:

> All plans for the improvement of the Mississippi that have been prominently discussed rest upon one of two theories; one, that the remedy for the evils existing consists essentially in the concentration of the water of the river and the equalization of its flow; the other, that it consists in the subdivision and diffusion of its volume. The former theory is the one held by the commission and adopted by Congress, though the other has advocates whose views continue to be urged in Congress and through the press.
> Suffice it to say that the retention of the river's water in one undivided volume is the cardinal principle of the plan; and that it is proposed to seek this end by such means as will introduce the fewest artificial conditions into the river's life and apply most economically and effectually its own forces to the work of improving its own channel. These consist chiefly in closing of chutes and outlets; the contraction of the channel in places where it is excessively wide by the creation of new banks from deposited sediment; and the revetment of banks where caving is exceptionally rapid and injurious.

This is a general statement of the plan. Now, sir, assuming that every gentleman in this House is in favor of the improvement of this, the greatest highway of commerce in this country, the free, unfettered competitor of the railways, offering an outlet for the people of the great valley at all seasons for the exchange of their commodities with all the world, the only question for us to discuss is whether we will accept or reject the plan and methods of the commission. Having created the scientific commission to propose a plan, the question is, and the only question is, will you accept it? Will you, gentlemen of this Committee of the Whole, undertake to instruct the commission as to the particular methods that they shall adopt to execute their plan?

Sir, this plan and the methods for its execution have not only the indorsement of every engineer who has ever had service on the Mississippi River, but has received the sanction of the Committee on Commerce and the Committee on the Improvement of the Mississippi River, both of which committees have given patient and long consideration to the whole matter; have time and time again summoned not only the engineers on the river commission, but all the leading engineers of the country for consultation and advice, and both committees have twice reported bills with appropriations directing the Secretary of War to execute the work of improvement according to the plans, specifications, and recommendations of the river commission. Congress has twice indorsed the plan and the methods. Three Presidents have approved them. The whole country has applauded the undertaking. We sent during the Forty-sixth Congress a special committee to visit the river and after a month's absence they came back and unanimously approved the purposes of the river commission.

Now, sir, what is proposed? It is seriously proposed by the members of the special committee of investigation that recently made a hurried trip down the river, that we should accept their views, their plan, their methods. Why, sir, what are they? The committee is divided. They do not agree. They have submitted three separate and different plans and reports. Which shall we adopt? And who will undertake to execute their views and their plan? It is not the plan of the engineers—of the commission. It is not sustained by the testimony of a single member of the commission. How, then, can we expect the engineers to attempt its execution? Who will be responsible for its failure? These able politicians, accomplished lawyers, would hardly undertake, even the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROBINSON], to embark in such a gigantic undertaking, against the matured opinions of the famous engineers who command universal respect and confidence for their long experience, their character, and unquestioned ability and patriotism.

Let us stand by the commission.

Mr. HISCOCK. I do not wonder that it is asserted, and truthfully, upon this floor that the committees of this House in charge of the Mississippi improvement have indorsed this scheme. I regret to say it is too often the case in the appointment of committees that those who are friendly to a scheme or to a project are put upon the committees having it in charge.

Mr. SPRINGER. That does not include the President.

Mr. HUMPHREY. We were on a general committee, not a special committee.

Mr. ROBERTSON. That does not include the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. HISCOCK. I care not what committees may have reported on the subject; I care not what engineers may have said. I have no time to go into details. I assert this: that all the engineers agree that this levee system will be inoperative, will be without value, unless you have mattresses, revetments, with dikes established inside the banks of the river.

Mr. KING. I think the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] is entirely mistaken.

Mr. HISCOCK. I am not mistaken. The testimony is that the channel of the river must be first established at low water, and then the levee system is to surmount the banks for the purpose of confining the waters within that channel when they are high and above the natural banks of the river. This whole mattress or revetment scheme, in connection with dikes, is for the purpose of holding the waters of the river within certain limits when it is low and does not rise above the natural banks of the river.

Now, what I ask and what I contend for is that the question shall first be settled whether the revetments and dikes will stand, whether the willow mattresses can be maintained in their places. If they can be held where they are placed, then we can try the experiment of placing on top of them the levees for the purpose of confining the water in the channel when at high stages.

We have had some experience with reference to the permanency of the mattresses; we want more with reference to their permanency. I insist, and the evidence is all concurrent on this point, that a very large portion of this stream, so far as navigation is concerned, does not need levees at all. I believe that the plan should be to concentrate the expenditure of this money at given points upon revetments and dikes; and first settle the question whether at low water the stream can be confined within its proper channel.

When that has been demonstrated it will be time enough for us to place upon the banks of the stream above the revetments levees for the purpose of confining the water in periods of freshet and overflow.

Mr. HOOKER. Does the gentleman mean to imply that the jetty system has not given a depth of twenty-seven to thirty feet?

Mr. HISCOCK. I am not discussing the question of the jetty system. There is no likeness or analogy between the two systems. I do understand, however, it is upon the theory of the success of the jetty system that gentlemen ask the construction of levees; but I say the two systems are entirely unlike. The thought I would impress upon the committee is this, let us first settle that we can hold the channel of the river within certain limits during low-water stages, and if successful in that, let us try if we can hold it in freshets or seasons when the water is above and overflows the natural banks of the stream.

I have only time to add—the testimony is concurrent—that the scouring of the river, the deepening of the channel, takes place in the low-water stages only. As the water rises in the river and overflows the banks the current is so slow and the water so charged with silt, which settles, that the bottom of the river rises with the water, and as the water settles or falls the scouring out of the bottom commences. This fact seems to demonstrate that for the purposes of navigation the levees are not required.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Chairman, I do not profess to be an engineer or an expert on this question of the channel improvement of the Mississippi River; but having lived upon its banks for twenty-seven years I know something of its history from practical experience. I would not give the illustration afforded by the actual building of one levee upon the banks of the Mississippi for all the theory that can be expressed on this floor within the next week. Upon the eastern bank of the Mississippi River, in the State of Illinois, commencing a few miles below Quincy and extending nearly fifty miles down the river, a company of citizens, to protect one of the finest bodies of land within the valley of that grand river, built a few years ago an insecure and insufficient levee; and as competent engineers as live upon American soil have said officially and unofficially that it has improved the navigation of that stream for every single mile of the extent of the levee.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. And you know it personally.

Mr. HATCH. I do, for my distinguished friend and myself have remained for twelve hours upon a steamer drawing four feet of water, stranded upon a sand-bar, which disappeared in a single season after the construction of that little levee. In connection with this subject I will incorporate in my remarks the testimony of a distinguished engineer who helped to build that levee, and the chief secretary of the company, embodied in letters written by each of them to General Gillmore, president of the Mississippi River Commission.

Mr. Chairman, I have listened patiently throughout the discussion on this bill and the bill of last session, and the strange thing to me is that all this clamor about a river and harbor bill and the improvement of the great water ways of the country comes from that section where the first dollar was expended by the Federal Government to protect the property and lives of its people (and who have been the recipients of the greater portion of the appropriations since made), the State of New York and the New England States. Go along that coast and you can not in a seven days' ride upon a steamer get out of sight of the magnificent and munificent works of the Federal Government that have for many years protected the commerce, the property, and lives of the people of the East; and because this "Giant of the West" has at last arisen from his lethargy, because its representatives have said to the country that we intend the property and lives of our people and their commerce shall be protected in like manner, gentlemen from the East, like the canny Scotchman who had sold his slaves and then declared himself "opposed to slavery," declare themselves opposed to all the plans and methods adopted by the river commission to consummate this great national work.

I tell you to-day that the West knows her rights, and knowing, dares in the future to maintain them, notwithstanding the clamor of a subsidized press, the efforts of interested railroad corporations, or the hostility of Representatives on this floor whom we do not believe to be as competent to decide this great question as the commission to whom it has been intrusted. We are willing to abide by their determination of the best method to be adopted, and patiently wait the result of such experiments as they may see proper to make.

We know the great problem can be solved, and if in the judgment of the Mississippi River Commission and eminent Government engineers it shall become necessary, in order to protect the commerce and the property and lives of our people, that we shall build from Saint Paul to New Orleans a granite wall and import the granite from New England, in the name of the American people living west of the Alleghany Mountains, I tell you we will complete it—complete it in spite of all the cavilings of men who, having drawn money from the Treasury for eighty years for less worthy improvements, propose now to shut down the doors upon the great and growing West. [Applause.]

OFFICE OF CONSOLIDATED TANK LINE COMPANY,
New York, September 6, 1882.

DEAR GENERAL: I send you inclosed communication intrusted to me by Mr. C. N. Clark, of Hannibal, Missouri, for presentation to you.

Unfortunately my absence from the city did not allow me to present it to you personally, and I have only time to send it so that it will be before you in your session at Saint Louis; without being able, for want of time, to give it the indorsement it deserves.

The very clear and complete statement of Mr. Clark can, I believe, be fully corroborated if you will have the necessary examinations made.

I will add the following as a matter of record: The Hannibal bridge was built before the levee was contemplated, or at least before the project was on a construction basis, and no provision was made for the increased discharge caused by the retention in the main channel of the river of the volume that hitherto was dispersed through the Sny Carte and other and smaller bayous, and also by the bank overflows above the bridge. The construction of the levee resulted in a considerable scour between the piers, and at one time caused considerable uneasiness until the piers were protected by riprap.

I have not the least doubt that the concentration of the flood-waters by means of the Sny levee has resulted in an improved channel the whole distance of fifty-one miles. I have from the first been intimately connected with this work, and I only regret that the present status of river improvements had not at the date of its construction permitted assistance to be given to the people in building it. Such assistance would have led to a higher and stronger levee, better able to withstand the servitudes that now so severely try it. I think your honorable commission will perceive that a strengthening and rebuilding (where necessary) of the Sny levee will improve the river channel more effectually and at less expense than by any isolated dikes.

I have urged Mr. Clark to ask for a personal interview with you and to request permission to state his views and facts more fully. He has shown in this levee enterprise, from its very inception to the present time, great energy, perseverance, and good judgment, and for a layman is well posted in the principles that underlie such and kindred improvements.

I request for him and his cause favorable consideration of your honorable board.

I am, general, very truly, yours,

E. L. CORTHELL, C. E.

General Q. A. GILLMORE,
President Mississippi River Commission.

HANNIBAL, MO., August 24, 1882.

DEAR SIR: It is reported through the papers that of the appropriation made by Congress at is last session for the improvement of the Mississippi River from Cairo to the head of the jetties, the sum of $1,300,000 has been set apart for closing the breaks in the levees, and perhaps otherwise strengthening them. This, in my opinion, is a wise use to make of the appropriation, to accomplish the end sought, of permanently deepening the channel of the river.

I am glad to see that the commission has at last the power to make such use of the appropriation for improving the river as is in their judgment best calculated to produce the desired result, and that prejudice no longer controls the appropriation, but it is placed in their hands to be applied as they in their wisdom may direct. I greatly regret that the same principle does not prevail, or at least has not in the past, on that part of the river from Saint Louis to Keokuk, and it is with the hope of calling the attention of your commission to this subject that I again write you; and as I refer to your kind letter of the 7th of November last, in which you express the hope "that the powers of the commission and the amount of funds at its disposal will both be so much enlarged at an early day that the construction and maintenance of a comprehensive levee system will constitute a part of its duties." Feeling that this time has now in a measure come, I write the more freely. If I repeat much of a former letter you will excuse me, as I am anxious some of the strong points in the case shall again be brought to your attention and through you to that of the commission, believing the time has now come when action will be taken.

Why the levees should be rebuilt on the Lower Mississippi by the Government, and no aid extended to those above Saint Louis, I can not quite understand. If the repairing of the breaks in the levees on the Lower Mississippi will deepen the channel, and if this is the most practical way of accomplishing this end, then why is not this equally true of the upper river? Is it not the settled policy of the commission that to confine the river to its channel is the true theory of the improvement of the channel? And if this is true theory on the lower river is it not equally true of the river above Saint Louis and below Keokuk? I do not know the exact amount of the appropriation on this part of the river when the river and harbor bill finally passed Congress, but think it was $200,000, from the mouth of the Illinois River to the foot of the rapids at Keokuk; and, as I understand it, whatever the amount is, it is to be expended under the direction of your commission, as it is below Cairo—only this difference: your commission has not as yet taken active control of the work above Saint Louis, the appropriation being expended under the immediate direction of the War Department, but must be with your approval. Now can not and will not the Mississippi River Commission extend their views of the proper expenditure of this appropriation to this part of the river as well as below Cairo? Are we not entitled to the services of this commission equally with those on the lower river? May we not expect this, and thus have righted a wrong under which we have suffered for years?

In 1872 we, the land owners, began the construction of a levee from a point in Adams County, Illinois, nine miles below Quincy, to Hamburgh Bay, in Calhoun County, Illinois, a distance of fifty-two miles, with the hope of reclaiming 100,000 acres of land then overflowed by the Mississippi River whenever it got out of its banks. Under the laws of Illinois the cost of this work was assessed upon the lands to be reclaimed. The cost of the work was estimated at $650,000. This amount of bonds was issued, running twenty years, bearing 10 per cent. annual interest, and sold for 90 cents on the dollar. The work was finished in 1874. Up to the time of building the levee, the river between Hannibal, Missouri, and Quincy, Illinois, was the most difficult of navigation of any portion between Saint Louis and Keokuk. During the period of low water, usually from August 1 to the close of navigation, great difficulty was met by steamboats of all classes on this stretch of the river. The Saint Louis and Keokuk Packet Company and Northern Line Packet Company habitually took out of the trade their side-wheel boats and put in light-draught stern-wheel boats during the time of low water, and these light-draught boats found great difficulty in passing, and often only by the help of other boats, the ferry boat from this place often being employed for this purpose. The steamer Andy Johnson laid aground here all the winter of 1871–'72 unable to move until the rise in the spring. This had been the condition of the river here as far back as memory extends. Captain Wells, of Quincy, Illinois, left his boat to winter on this bar in 1832, and still lives to testify to the facts as stated. During the fall of 1872, while constructing the levee opposite this obstructed channel, I habitually saw boats aground here, and at one time saw and counted six boats working over this bar and finally only succeeded with great difficulty.

The work on the levee was begun in September, 1872, at a point three miles above the worst bar and nine miles below Quincy, and during the fall and winter extended eighteen miles down the river, passing the obstruction in the river some fifteen miles. The spring rise in the river came as usual and the levee held the water in the channel. The work on the levee was resumed as soon as the water went down, and during the summer and fall of 1873 the river was very low—nineteen inches lower than at any time in 1872, as shown by the gauge at the bridge at this place, but no boat had any difficulty in navigating the river between Hannibal and Quincy, where so much had been found before, and where I had myself seen so many boats aground the fall before, with nineteen inches more water. From that day to this—nine years—no boat has been delayed a moment at this place. Now I assert, without the fear of successful contradiction, that the building of the Sny Island Levee, and its partial maintenance has done this work of improving the channel at this place; that it has taken out and kept out of the river the worst obstruction to navigation between Saint Louis and Keokuk. It has done a work that would have cost the General Government a large amount of money to have done for itself, and this expenditure would have been made by the Government three years ago, when they began work at Gilbert's Island (which was the next great obstruction, after the one we had removed), under the direction of Major Mackenzie. In other words, we have from private means alone improved the channel of the Mississippi to an extent that would have cost the Government a very large amount of money, had it not been done by us, and would have been taken from the appropriation at least three years ago.

If this statement is true—and I challenge investigation—does not the General Government owe to the builders of the Sny Island Levee some recognition of the work they have done, at such fearful cost to themselves? You want the proof that we have made this improvement in the channel, and I cheerfully give it. Two miles below the upper end of the levee an arm of the river leaves the main channel and passes east of Sny Island, and returns again to the main channel forty miles below, nearly opposite Clarksville, Missouri. This arm, or branch, of the river is from five hundred to seven hundred feet wide and runs nearly parallel with the river most of this distance—making an island from one to two miles wide and forty miles long. Through this channel, or arm, at ordinary high water it was estimated by our engineer, Captain E. L. Corthell, one-sixteenth part of the water left the main channel and passed down the river, returning, as I have said, forty miles below. This arm of the river is called the Sny Carter Slough.

The obstruction to navigation mentioned above begins just below the point where the arm of the river left the main channel and extended down the river, and is known here as "Gun-Lock Bar." This bar was made by the deposit of sand, silt, and soil carried in solution by the river to this point and deposited here. This deposit was caused by want of power in the river to carry it further, caused by the loss of one-sixteenth part of its water through the Sny Carter Slough, and consequent loss of one-sixteenth part of its carrying power, and one-sixteenth part of the material carried to this point was dropped to the bottom, and thus the bar was formed and the main channel filled for miles. In building our levee we constructed a dam across this arm of the river and continued our embankment down the river on the west bank of the island, and from the dam up the river to a point above high water, thus restoring to the main channel its lost volume of water and its carrying power. This restored power has removed the bar, deepened the channel, and made navigation safe, easy, and unobstructed, and will so continue to operate as long as the work is maintained. In improving the river above Saint Louis, the removal of this obstruction to navigation would have been among the first works undertaken by the General Government, had it not been done by us.

In building this work our lands were encumbered by a lien of $6.50 per acre, and annual interest of 65 cents per acre. In 1876, April 18, the levee gave way at three points, destroying all crops, the water sweeping away many of the improvements, fences, and small houses, &c. The river remained high most of the summer, and the ground covered with water; so no crops were raised that year. During the fall and winter of 1876–'77 we repaired the breaks in the levee by private contribution, and began farming operations again in the spring of 1877. Breaks have continued to occur, and not a full crop has been raised since 1876. But we have continued to raise money from these exhausted people and fill up the gaps, but more than this we could not do. And many have lost their home and all they have in doing this.

On October 1, 1881, the levee was whole the entire length, and all looked prosperous behind it. A large breadth of corn had been planted in the spring and looked promising, was nearly ready to gather. A great deal of ground had been sown in winter wheat and the farmers were still sowing. All hoped we would get one full crop, and then we could strengthen the levee and hold it until the Government officers in charge of the river improvement should see what the levee had done for the river channel and come to our relief. We crowded forward the wheat sowing with all the force possible. The river was rising, but we did not stop. A flood in the fall was unheard of, but soon the water reached "danger line," and we left our plows and wheat drills in the field and gathered on the levee to protect and hold it if possible. The river continued to rise until the 26th, when it was only thirteen inches lower than in 1851, the highest water ever known above the mouth of the Missouri River. The levee was broken in four places, and all property on the bottom that water would injure was destroyed. A remnant of last year's assessment for levee repairs was yet unexpended, and some of the land owners advanced the amount of their next assessment, and two of the gaps have been filled and have so far held the water in the river this season. Something over $20,000 is still uncollected on this year's assessment for levee purposes. If this is collected by force it will take the homes of some, at least of those people that have already suffered and borne so much, and this will not make the levee safe.

It will break again if the river rises twenty feet above low water, and it has been twenty-two feet above, and was twenty-one feet above low water last October when the present breaks were made. Therefore, the people have little to encourage them to pay their levee assessments. But if the Government would expend upon this work one-half it would have cost them to remove Gun-Lock Bar this year, and the balance next year, with what the people could do, would probably make the levee safe against anything but extreme high water. If this work is maintained there will be no obstruction to navigation in the river, in the form of sand-bars between Hannibal and Quincy, but should this work be allowed to go out, Gun-Lock Bar will be reformed just as rapidly as material can be brought down the river by the water, and deposited there. Then the Government will be compelled to construct works for its removal, or abandon the hope of improving the channel above Saint Louis, and the work already done.

I know the theory of the improvement of the channel of this part of the river, as adopted by the War Department, is, by a system of low-water works, and I am not disposed to discuss the question with them of the success of their plans; but, as on the lower river, I would like to see the river confined to its channel at high water, as I do know what this has done and will do for the channel when only partially confined, as in the case of our embankment. Were this work thoroughly done, the river at all times held in the channel, no low-water works would be required, at least at the point named, and very little at any other point opposite the levee. And not only would the channel of the river be made all that is desired opposite the work, but 100,000 acres of land taken from waste and desolation and added to the productive wealth of the country.

It is asked, "Why do not these lands build this levee high and strong and make it able to resist the river at all times, and thus many times double their value?" I answer, first, such a levee would not only reclaim the lands and make them valuable for agricultural purposes, but would, as it has already done, deepen and improve the channel for the purposes of navigation and for the benefit of the commerce of the United States, and, if properly strengthened and maintained, would thoroughly deepen and improve the channel, and would therefore be as great a benefit to commerce as it would be to the lands. And so far as this result is accomplished by the levee, just so far the General Government is in honor bound to meet the expense, up to the cost of works built by themselves, that should produce equal results. Second, these lands have now done all in their power to accomplish this result, are buried under a debt of $650,000 with accrued and accumulated interest, at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum since 1876, when the last interest was paid. This makes it impossible to borrow one dollar on these lands for levee or other purposes, and repeated overflows have cut off every revenue from these lands and their owners are helpless and powerless to protect themselves. They will do all that is possible for them to do to aid the Government to make this work a permanent improvement of the river and at the same time protect their property from destruction.

I make these statements simply because they are facts in relation to the poverty of these lands and the great majority of their owners, not as a reason why the General Government should come to our relief by donation or otherwise. While we are just as much entitled to it as those people on the lower river who have been so generously aided by the Government during the past spring and summer, we ask no charity. We ask simply even-handed justice. We ask the United States Mississippi River Commission to investigate our claim, and if found to be true and just, if our levee has improved the channel and is now rendering navigation easy and safe as claimed, that a portion of the present appropriation for this part of the river, as has been done below Cairo, be applied to closing the gaps in our levee and strengthening the embankment, the amount so used by the commission not to exceed the amount it would cost the Government to construct works upon their own plan that would produce the same improvement in the channel of the river.

Believing this to be only just, we ask it unhesitatingly at the hands of the commission. In conclusion, will not the commission recommend or direct an examination of this work to be made at once and give us an opportunity to prove our claim, and if my statements are found to be correct, extend such help as shall seem to them just and within their power to render?

I have the honor to be, yours, truly,

C. N. CLARK.

General Q. A. GILLMORE,
President Mississippi River Commission, New York.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan obtained the floor.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. I understand that the time has been allotted on this question contrary to the rules of this body; and I protest against it. Those who have spent their lives on the Mississippi River are not permitted to be heard.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] is recognized.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I hope this committee will not misunderstand this proposition. We propose to improve the low-water navigation of the Mississippi. Its navigation is good in flood-time. The works that we have determined upon and for which we are to make appropriations are to improve its low-water navigation. If that can be improved, it is of little consequence whether levees be constructed or not; for it is conceded upon all hands that when the natural banks of the river are bank-full the navigation is unobstructed from Cairo to the Gulf.

Mr. GIBSON. Will the gentleman allow me——

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I can not. Hence the building of levees to restrain the overflowing water can not possibly aid low-water navigation unless the theory of engineers be true that by restraining the flood-waters of the river you will scour the bed of the river and thereby improve low-water navigation.

Several MEMBERS. That is it.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. Is that theory correct?

Mr. ELLIS. Every engineer says so.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I hope that these interruptions will not come out of my time. Mr. Hutton, an engineer of high standing who accompanied the committee, said in his testimony:

Question. You have not met with the theory, then, that the confinement of the water at low stages so as to gradually raise it in height, keeping it within that natural channel, the water would erode the bottom and so deepen the channel as to keep down the surface?

Answer. I have heard the general theory advanced that by confining the water within these narrow limits the eroding of the bottom would increase the channel, but I have never heard the theory advanced that the water of the Mississippi River could be so confined.

Q. What do you think of that theory yourself?

A. I think the water would cut the banks rather than the bottom.

Q. But there is a tendency to work out the bottom, is there not?

A. Well, in high water, from my reading and knowledge of the characteristics of the Mississippi River—and these are derived entirely from the observation of other persons and the reports and investigations, beyond my simple looking at the river as we traveled over it—the general result of all the reports indicates very clearly, I think, that during high water shoals form, and the bottom of the river rises and is not cut off or eroded, and that the cutting on the bottom is done at low water; and I think it is further maintained, and I believe with truth, that the undercutting of the banks is done at low water, or in a falling stage of the river.

Q. Then you would expect, as the result of these observations, that as the water was accumulated in depth in the channel you would have a greater amount of deposit in the bottom instead of a greater scouring?

A. That is the result of reports given on the subject.

Q. Well, in your judgment, is it practicable or desirable, for the purposes of channel improvement only, to confine the waters of the valley within the levees on the banks?

A. No, sir; as far as improvement of the channel is concerned, I do not think it an advantage.

Q. Is it a disadvantage, in your judgment?

A. Yes; to the extent that the higher the water becomes the higher the bars generally become, and therefore it is a disadvantage.

And that is the universal testimony of all the witnesses that the deposition of sediment occurs at high water.

Mr. KING. Because the water overflows.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. Do not interrupt me.

Mr. GIBSON. Let us have order so the gentleman can be heard.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, there is nothing which casts so much odium on these river and harbor bills as this continual clamor when they are being considered.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will proceed.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I say the testimony submitted to the committee is almost uniform that the shoaling takes place during flood, and that the cutting out of the bed occurs when the river is low.

Mr. HOOKER. What are you reading from?

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. The testimony of Lieutenant Hutton.

Mr. HOOKER. He never saw the Mississippi River.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. He went with the committee from Cairo to the Gulf.

One word more. These interruptions do not come out of my time.

General Comstock, president of the commission, said to your committee:

Question. Your view as to the building of levees on banks is that it is not essential to mere low-water navigation of the river?

Answer. No, sir.

Q. You think they are of a great deal more service for protection of land than for the improvement of the channel for navigation?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. If you were the sole member of the commission would you have expended the money in that way?

A. No, sir.

Now I will read from the report of this Mississippi River Commission. It was made December 1, 1882, about two months ago:

From much of that part of the preceding report which relates to levees, one member (General Comstock) dissents.

Mr. GIBSON. And the only member.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I am much obliged. I said one member dissents. If "the only member" makes it any stronger we will insert that:

For the following reasons he is of the opinion that levees are of little aid in the improvement of low-water navigation.

Low-water navigation is now bad only where the river has such great width as to be necessarily shoal. To improve it the great widths must be diminished by works of contraction, and the river must be kept from wandering about, by revetting its caving banks. Both these classes of work are in the river, and levees on top of the bank can not take the place of either class.

It is true that when levees confine floods between them they increase the depth of sixty feet or more which the river would have without them, by a few feet, and thus should increase somewhat the velocity of the river. Theoretically, this increased velocity should scour the bed, thus sinking it in some degree. In practice no case is known where any considerable sinking of the river-bed for long distances has been produced by levees.

But even if the low-water surface and the river-bed should sink together in consequence of the levee effect during preceding floods, it is still to be feared that the low-water depths might not be sensibly increased thereby.

In view of the uncertainty whether levees will cause any considerable sinking of the low-water bed and of the further doubt whether such sinking would sensibly increase the low-water depths, it does not seem to him wise, in the absence of practical experience, to attribute any considerable value to a system of levees as an aid to channel improvement.

Mr. ELLIS. Will you be candid enough to read from page 183 what General Comstock says?

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. If the committee will indulge me a moment more.

Mr. ELLIS. Give this side a chance.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. The gentleman has his time.

Mr. ELLIS. I do not have any time.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. Now, I wish to say a word further, if the committee will indulge me.

Mr. KING. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. If I believed that the building of levees was essential to the improvement of the navigation of the Mississippi River I should certainly favor them. Their cost is estimated at $100,000,000——

Mr. GIBSON. My dear sir, do not make that statement upon the floor of this House. I beg the gentleman not to make such an assertion. The commission estimate it at $4,000,000, and that is all they propose to use. The gentleman must not make such statements here in the presence of men who know these facts and are familiar with the subject.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. The cost has been estimated——

Mr. HOOKER. By whom?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I hope unanimous consent will be given to the gentleman from Michigan to go on and complete his remarks. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. THOMAS was recognized.

Several members addressed the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order; no gentleman will be recognized until the committee comes to order.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. Has my time expired?

Several MEMBERS. A long time ago.

The CHAIRMAN. It has expired.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Chairman, the proposed amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROBINSON] will, if adopted, produce a radical and important change in the law creating the Mississippi River Commission and prescribing their duties.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. Will my friend yield to me for a moment to make a correction?

Mr. THOMAS. Certainly.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I desire, since the gentleman has been kind enough to yield to me, to occupy a minute to make a correction. When I stated a moment ago that $100,000,000 are required for this Mississippi River work, I do not mean to be understood as stating that the entire amount was for levees——

Mr. ELLIS. You knew that it was not for that.

Mr. GIBSON. You so stated.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. But was for the entire improvement of the channel and all.

Mr. GIBSON. And that is estimated by the commission at not exceeding $37,000,000.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. No, sir; more than that.

Mr. WHITE. I ask unanimous consent that this debate be extended.

The CHAIRMAN. No gentleman can be recognized in this confusion.

Mr. WHITE. Then I insist upon the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is for gentlemen to be seated. The gentleman from Illinois is entitled to the floor.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Chairman, if we look to the law under which the Mississippi River Commission was organized we will see clearly what the purpose and intent was for which it was created and what they were called upon by Congress to do; we must look for a moment at the demands made by Congress upon this Mississippi River Commission, and I beg the careful attention of the committee to this point, for it is a very important one. What did Congress ask this Mississippi River Commission to do?

To take into consideration and mature such plan or plans and estimates as will correct, permanently locate, and deepen the channel and protect the banks of the Mississippi River; improve and give safety and ease to the navigation thereof; prevent destructive floods; and promote and facilitate commerce, trade, and the postal service.

Now, Mr. Chairman, you have before you what this commission was called upon to do. I have read you the exact language of the law which created the commission. They have on the strength of that authority settled upon and promulgated a plan and submitted it to Congress for its consideration. That plan has received the indorsement of the best scientists in this country and in Europe. It has received the approbation of four different committees of Congress; it received the approval not only of the Forty-sixth but of this Congress also. The commission was called upon to take into consideration and "mature such plan or plans and estimates as will correct, permanently locate, and deepen the channel and protect the banks of the Mississippi River; improve and give safety and ease to the navigation thereof, prevent destructive floods, and promote and facilitate commerce, trade, and the postal service." We demanded of the commission the accomplishment of certain results, and they report to us that in order to accomplish the results demanded it was necessary to employ levees. That recommendation is before us, and yet, in violation of the plain provisions of law, in the face of the testimony which has been submitted, in the face of all the experience of gentlemen who know that river and its requirements, in the face of the known fact that restrained water will cut out and deepen its channel, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROBINSON] comes here and proposes to tie the hands of the commission, to deprive them of the benefits and means by which they propose to accomplish the results we demanded of them. He proposes that the commission shall execute this grand work in some other way than the one agreed to and settled upon both by it and Congress. I say, Mr. Chairman, that common fairness and justice and the desire for the accomplishment of these important things all demand that this commission—struggling as it is with one of the grandest questions that ever engaged the minds of the scientific world—should be allowed to go on, with their hands loose, with all of their original powers at their command to accomplish this grand work.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. THOMAS. Yes, sir.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I wish to ask if the commission did not decide that the legitimate result of the levee system was alone to raise the bed of the river and that it could only be utilized as a means of scouring the channel of the river by sinking mattresses and establishing revetments so that the channel should be confined in that way?

Mr. THOMAS. The evidence shows, and I know the fact to be, that at high water the river spreads across the country and when the current is retarded thereby it forms eddies and drops its silt; but when you confine the waters and conserve their force you accelerate the current and it carries this sediment on and into the Gulf, instead of dropping it on the bars, thereby ruining the low-water navigation.

Sir, it is necessary to dig out the channel of this stream. In order to do so you must employ all the forces possible. This river at high water has a greater force a thousand-fold than at low water. If these forces are conserved and directed to the digging out of its bottom instead of wasting its velocity in overflow, you will see the results accomplished, and instead of these overflowed and alluvial lands being reclaimed alone, you will see the permanent, lasting, and perfect improvement of the Mississippi River according to the provisions of the law which we enacted and under which the Mississippi River Commission have been acting. Few people understand fully the philosophy of the proposed plan for the improvement of the Mississippi River, and as Hon. Robert S. Taylor, of Indiana, a member of the commission, has recently explained the plan in a most admirable article in the North American Review, I beg you to hear what he has to say:

The Mississippi River Commission was created by act of Congress approved June 28, 1879. It consists of seven members appointed by the President, of whom three are required to be from the Engineer Corps of the Army, one from the Coast and Geodetic Survey, and three from civil life, of whom two shall be civil engineers. It is provided in the act that the commission shall—

"Take into consideration and mature such plan or plans and estimates as will correct, permanently locate, and deepen the channel and protect the banks of the Mississippi River, improve and give safety and ease to the navigation thereof, prevent destructive floods, and promote and facilitate commerce, trade, and the postal service."

The commission was duly organized, and, after consideration of the subject, reported a plan of improvement, which has been adopted by Congress, and for the execution of which an appropriation of $1,000,000 was made by act of March 3, 1881, and another of $4,123,000 by act of August 1, 1882, all to be expended below Cairo. Under these appropriations the work is now in progress, its execution being in the hands of officers of the Engineer Corps detailed for that purpose by the Chief of Engineers. Its completion, according to the plans proposed, will require a number of years, and further large appropriations. There is, therefore, added to the interest which belongs to the subject as a great engineering problem, that which attaches to every object of public expenditure.

It is the purpose of this article to set forth briefly the general plan proposed by the commission, and the reasons upon which it rests. In order to a clear apprehension of the questions involved, a short description of the river in its unimproved condition will be useful.

At the city of Cairo, upon the southern extremity of the State of Illinois, are gathered together the waters of five great rivers, namely, the Missouri, the Upper Mississippi, the Ohio, the Cumberland, and the Tennessee. Between that point and the Gulf of Mexico lies the Mississippi River proper, 1,097 miles in length as it flows. Its course is through an alluvial plain 600 miles long and from 25 to 80 miles wide. In this basin is embraced an area of 41,000 square miles, of which 32,000 square miles are liable to overflow. Borings made at eighty-three places between Cairo and Vicksburgh show 131 feet mean depth of alluvial soil. From Cairo to the mouth of the Red, the width of the river between banks varies from 1,900 to 13,800 feet, the mean being 4,400 feet. Below the Red the width rarely exceeds 3,500 feet, the mean bing 3,350. Between Cairo and Memphis its least depth at low water is 5 feet; between Memphis and Red River 6 feet, and between Red River and New Orleans 15 feet. The variation in its discharge is enormous, passing from 100,000 cubic feet per second at low water to 1,600,000 at the highest flood. The range between high and low water mark at Cairo is 52 feet; at Memphis 35 feet, at Vicksburgh 52 feet, and at New Orleans 14 feet. In its greatest floods its water surface stretches from hill to hill across the entire valley; at extreme low water it flows between banks from 30 to 40 feet high. The depth of its inundation bears no comparison with its area, being on an average less than 3 feet over the arable lands. In the swamps it is much more. Its flood elevation at Cairo is 322 feet above the sea. Its fall from Cairo to Memphis is about 6 inches to the mile. Thence to the Gulf its fall steadily diminishes, being about 1¼ inches per mile at New Orleans. It is one of the muddiest rivers in the world. The greater portion of the sediment received by it at Cairo comes from the Missouri, but this supply is constantly re-enforced by the caving of its own banks, which are washed into the river at an estimated rate of 5,000 acres per annum.

All plans for the improvement of the Mississippi that have been prominently discussed rest upon one or two theories: One, that the remedy for the evils existing consists essentially in the concentration of the water of the river and the equalization of its flow; the other, that it consists in the subdivision and diffusion of its volume. The former theory is the one held by the commission and adopted by Congress, though the other has advocates whose views continue to be urged in Congress and through the press.

There are numerous opportunities to let out of the channel of the Mississippi large portions of its water. The Atchafalaya, which receives its waters from the Red River, at a point only 6 miles distant from the junction of that river with the Mississippi, is there several feet lower than the Mississippi. At the present time the water of the Red rarely reaches the Mississippi at all, but for the most part flows down the Atchafalaya, augmented by a large outflow from the Mississippi. It is only when the Red is high and the Mississippi low that there is any flow from the former to the latter. The difference of level between the Mississippi and the Atchafalaya increases as they descend, so that at Plaquemine the difference is 22 feet, and the distance between them 11 miles. On the east bank, at Bonnet Carré, the difference of level between the river and Lake Pontchartrain is 20 feet, and the distance between them 5 miles. At Lake Borgne the difference of level is 14 feet and the distance 6 miles. So that it is quite possible to make outlets by which the flood-water, or, for that matter, all the water of the Mississippi could find its way to the Gulf by shorter lines and lower levels than those of the present river. And when men stand appalled at the sight of its devastating floods the suggestion of quick relief by outlets seems at first sight so practicable and reasonable that it is not strange that it should find favor in many minds.

The reasons which lie against this theory require some thought for their clear apprehension, but rest, as is believed, on well ascertained laws.

The three most difficult factors in the problem are the wide variation in the volume of the river's discharge, the quantity of solid matter transported by its current, and the softness of its banks. If any one of these three elements were absent the question presented would be comparatively simple.

To contain the river at its flood requires a great channel. Its banks are so friable that its constant tendency is to make itself room by tearing them down. When the flood subsides the material of which they were composed is found scattered over the broad channel in obstructing bars and shoals. Over and among these the low-water river has to make its way by such tortuous and changing path as it can find or make for itself. It is then that navigation becomes difficult and dangerous. There is water enough in the river at its lowest stage to furnish ample depth for navigation if it were confined in a channel of suitable width, and it would make and maintain such a channel for itself if it were not for the interference of the floods.

The problem of the river's improvement comprehends, therefore, in its broadest sense, these two requisites—a high-water channel capacious enough to contain its floods, and a low-water channel narrow enough to afford the depth necessary for navigation. And the more nearly identical in location these can be made the more permanent and perfect will be the improvement attained.

In the consideration of any plan for the accomplishment of these ends it is to be remembered that there are very rigid limits to the possibilities of engineering methods applicable to the case. To build upon a foundation of bottomless alluvium any breakwater or training-wall of stone or timber that shall withstand the floods that pour down from the north like an ocean let loose is impossible. To dig and keep open a channel for a river that flings down in its own pathway a sand-bar a mile square as though it was a handful of ashes is equally impossible. Hence, if at any point a deeper channel is needed, the river must be compelled to dig it; if a new bank is needed, the river must be coaxed to build it. Its own Titanic hands are the only instruments equal to either task.

If any one will set a tumblerful of the coffee-colored water of the Mississippi where it will remain undisturbed for twenty-four hours he will find, at the end of that time, a teaspoonful of mud in the bottom of the tumbler, while the water will be comparatively clear. If he had kept the water in motion all the time he would have found it as turbid as when he took it from the river, and no deposit at the bottom. In this tiny experiment is illustrated the most important law of the Mississippi River's life, namely, that the power of water to sustain and transport sediment depends upon its motion. The exact relation between the velocity of moving water and its silt-carrying power is not ascertained. It varies with the size and specific gravity of the particles. But enough is known to warrant the general statement that every diminution of the velocity of a running stream diminishes its silt-transporting capacity. It is not necessary, in order to produce this result, that there shall be a cessation of motion in the water; a diminution of its rate is sufficient.

The operation of this law is universal and invariable, on the largest scale and on the smallest. The miniature torrent that sweeps down the plowed furrow in a hill-side field scours its bed clean as long as it maintains its headlong velocity. But when it slackens its course at the foot of the slope, it throws down its load of sand and loam in an instant. The delta which forms at the mouth of every sediment-bearing river is the same phenomenon on a larger scale.

Upon the Mississippi River the traveler is never for a moment out of sight of visible evidence of the operation of this law. The following examples will be familiar to any one who has been upon it. In the outer curve of every bend, where the current is swift and strong, the channel is deep and clean. On the inner side of the return curve there is slack water and a bar. Wherever the channel is narrow and deep there is a high velocity and no deposit of sediment. Where it is excessively broad and shallow bars accumulate rapidly.

At a bank-full stage the river has a rapid current and is heavily loaded with sediment. At the overflow stage the water escaping laterally over the banks is suddenly checked in its velocity, and immediately begins to drop its load, leaving a diminishing deposit as it recedes. To this layer the next flood adds another, each being thickest at the margin next the river, where the escaping water experiences the first diminution of its velocity. In this way the river builds up its own banks by overflow; and in consequence of this method of building them they are highest nearest the river, the receding declination sometimes reaching 12 feet in a mile, and being rarely less than 5.

Following the course of great overflows through the forests adjacent to the river, the observer will find on the farther side of trees, logs, and other obstructions, sand reefs and areas of deposit marking every place where the advancing water was checked in its velocity.

It occasionally happens that the river cuts off a long bend by a short channel across its neck, leaving a horseshoe-shaped section of the old channel unused. At the open ends of this abandoned channel the water in it mingles with the current flowing past, and so has a gentle inward and outward flow as the river rises and falls. The consequence is a deposit of sediment at the entrances of the abandoned channel, by which they are ultimately filled up and cut off entirely from the new channel, forming deep, clear, crescent-shaped lakes. There are many such lakes in the valley, some of them now several miles from the river. Such a cut-off occurred at a bend opposite Vicksburgh in 1876, leaving the city upon one arm of the abandoned bend. The lower end of that arm is already filled up to the height of 25 feet above low water, and 50 feet above the old bottom, leaving the city's wharves and elevators a mile and a half inland at ordinary and low stages.

By shiftings of the channel, the formation of islands, and other causes, the subsidiary channels, called chutes, are formed in large number. If a swift current set through a chute it enlarges; if a sluggish current flow through it, it fills with sediment. Sloughs and outlets leading out of the river into the swamps, in which the free flow of water is obstructed by willows, are often permanently closed in the same manner.

As the river elongates its bends by caving off the outer bank there is commonly formed a sloping bar on the inner bank, which advances as the outer bank recedes. As fast as this bar rises above ordinary low water it is covered by a growth of willows. At high stages the water flowing over the bar is obstructed by this growth and successive deposits of sediment are thus caused, which ultimately build the bar up to the full height of the adjacent banks. By this process the river shifts its channel, tearing down one bank and building up the other as it goes.

Some of the methods of channel improvement now in use have been copied from the processes of nature just described. When it is sought to narrow an excessively wide channel, permeable screens made of piles and interwoven brush or poles are set on the bar where it is desired to form new banks at intervals of a thousand feet or less. The water in flowing through these screens loses so much of its velocity that it drops its sediment very rapidly after passing them. The effect produced by such structures is sometimes quite remarkable. In favorable localities a fill of 40 feet in depth has resulted in a single season. At Horsetail Bar, below Saint Louis, may be seen an area of more than a thousand acres of land, which has been built up from the river-bed to an average depth of 25 feet by the means just described. A mere line of piles 8 feet apart will often produce a heavy deposit below them.

These numerous examples have been cited in order to illustrate and enforce the proposition stated at the outset: that the greatest law of the river's life is that it shall be forever laden with a burden which slips from its grasp the instant it loiters by the way. The whole valley is itself the result and the proof of the existence and the operation of this law. There is not a shovelful of earth in all its square miles that has not been dissolved in water and carried by water to the point where its journey ended for want of velocity to carry it farther. Every grain of sand, every drop of water, every inch of movement, every low stage, every high stage, every flood, is equally obedient to the same great law. The engineer who has learned its meaning well has taken the first step toward a successful solution of the problem of the river's improvement. He who ignores or defies it puts himself in the pathway of forces as irresistible in their operation as the march of a glacier.

This brings us to the practical question. Here are so many cubic miles of water per annum to be conducted to the sea. It is desired to do it in such manner as to afford the best possible low-water navigation and the least possible high-water inundation. Shall it be confined in its course to one channel, or shall it be subdivided or allowed to subdivide itself into several?

The excavation of a river channel is work. The transportation of sediment is work. The accomplishment of either involves the expenditure of energy. So that it is but another statement of the same question to say, how will a given quantity of water perform most work—in one concentrated volume or in subdivisions?

To this inquiry the experience of every person furnishes a ready and true answer. A gentle rain, falling on the earth's surface, leaves its lightest vegetable mold undisturbed. The same quantity of water descending in a waterspout tears away its solid hills. The water which trickles over a field through thousands of infinitesimal and broken channels without producing the least abrasion of its surface would if concentrated in one volume on the same surface plow it deep and wide. There is nothing else in nature of which it is so literally and familiarly true that "in union there is strength" as of water. Subdivided finely enough, it is the morning mist; concentrated largely enough, it is nature's master-mechanic, the continent-builder of the world.

Taking its whole life together, there is, in the phenomena of the Mississippi River, as elsewhere, a perfect correlation of forces. It does all the work it can all the time. It excavates its bed as deep and wide as it can. It carries out of its channel as much of the sediment mixed with its water as it can. When it drops from its broad shoulders a hundred thousand cubic yards of sand on the bar, as it often does, it is because it can carry it no farther. It never drops a spoonful except for the same reason.

All the conditions of the river are the result of its own forces. It has no antecedent banks, bars, width, or depth; all these are its own creation. It made yesterday the things that make it to-day; it is making to-day the things that will make it to-morrow. Its present inadequacy to meet the wants of men is the result of its inadequate work in the past. It overflows its banks because its channel is not capacious enough to contain its flood. To make its channel more capacious requires more work. At low water it stumbles over bars which it lacks strength to displace. To remove them requires more work. It makes its shoal places shoaler by the deposit of sediment which it wants energy to carry farther. More work would do it. So that if the river of the future is to subserve the interests of mankind better than the river of the present, the river of to-day must be induced to do more and better work. This is to be accomplished by the conservation, concentration, and wise direction of all its energies. That this means the conservation, concentration, and wise direction of its volume seems too obvious to need repetition.

Depletion or subdivision is a step in exactly the wrong direction. It is a change toward weakness; not toward strength. An outlet may serve to lower a flood for the time being, but the result is a temporary advantage gained at enormous future cost. The diminution of volume produced by the outlet means diminution of energy. It means a smaller, weaker river from that point to the sea. And that means a river less able to remove bars, less able to excavate a channel, less able to carry sediment, less able to contain a flood.

It is in the nature of things that each portion of the river shall in its turn bear the burden of the complications above it. The bars that obstruct it came down from above. The sediment that loads its water came down from above. Hence there is the clearest necessity that it should, as in the order of nature it does, augment its strength as it descends. An outlet reverses this order of nature and of reason. It diminishes the energy of the river below without lightening in any like degree the burdens cast upon it by the river above.

It is not possible, without accurate and expensive observations and measurements, to trace all the injurious effects of an outlet upon the river below. But enough is visible to common observation to show the unvarying operation of the laws stated. At its mouth the Mississippi has tried the outlet system of its own accord by subdividing into four distinct channels. From New Orleans down to the widening of the channel, preparatory to its subdivision, it has nowhere less than a hundred feet of depth. In its four subordinate channels the depth rarely exceeds 50 feet; and at the mouths of all, except the one improved by the jetties, it is about 16 feet. Suppose the same subdivision had taken place two or three hundred miles higher up, would not like results have followed in the channels below?

Outlets in the form of great crevasses have frequently occurred. They are always followed by increased deposits in the bed below them.

Channels conveying unfiltered Mississippi water invariably contract their dimensions to the smallest space that will contain the water flowing through them. The law governing chutes has been stated already: a swift current keeps them open; a sluggish current fills them up with sediment. When an island appears in the center of the river it is rare that a good channel is maintained on each side of it. Something will occur to disturb the equilibrium between them; one will begin to rob the other of water, whereupon the other will begin to fill with sediment, a process which increases in rapidity as the disproportion of flow grows greater.

At the mouth of the Red River is a remarkable illustration of the same law. The Red formerly entered the Mississippi at the apex of a bend. In 1831 the bend was cut off. For a time the Red used the upper arm of the bend as its channel, during which time it rapidly contracted to the dimensions suitable for the conveyance of the water of the Red River alone; while the lower arm of the bend closed up entirely. Afterward the Red abandoned the upper arm of the bend, and cut a channel just large enough for its own flow through the lower one; whereupon the upper one filled up. Later, the enlargement of the lower Atchafalaya, whose head is in the apex of the old Mississippi bend, near the original mouth of the Red, produced an active overflow from the Mississippi, which has been already described, and, in consequence, the channel is now enlarging. So that, in the space of six miles, between the Mississippi and the head of the Atchafalaya, there have been, within fifty years past, first, a Mississippi channel 3,500 feet wide, and probably 60 feet deep; then a dry bar; then a Red River channel 300 feet wide and 10 feet deep; and now a rapidly growing outlet.

The use of the word "unfiltered" in the general statement above is material, and makes an important distinction. The statement is not true of a channel conveying clear water. The Yazoo River is one of this class. There was formerly, at Yazoo Pass, nearly opposite Helena, an outlet which diverted a large volume of water from the Mississippi into the Yazoo, which that river returned to the Mississippi at Vicksburgh. By this means the channel of the Yazoo was excavated deep and wide. The pass was closed a number of years ago. Since then the chief water supply of the Yazoo has come from the swamp-drains, which discharge clear water, and from Mississippi overflows, which are thoroughly filtered by the woods and swamps through which they travel before reaching it. So that we have to-day in the Yazoo a clear-water stream, flowing with slow velocity through a capacious channel which does not perceptibly decrease in size. No such result ever occurs in the case of water charged with sediment.

Nature has made the channel of the Mississippi of increased capacity for discharge as it descends. The permanent diversion of a substantial portion of its water by outlets will reverse that order, and shrink the channel below them to the size required by the diminished river. This shrinkage will take place first by decrease of depth, as the depositing sediment falls to the bottom, and thus the interests of navigation will be the first to suffer. But the mischief will not stop there. When the river and the outlets shall have adjusted themselves to the new conditions created they will, all together, be less able to discharge a great flood than the unimpaired river was alone; and there will be no place for it to find vent except over the shallow rim of the shrunken channel.

It is not within the purpose of this article to describe in detail the methods by which it is proposed to execute the general plan of improvement recommended by the Mississippi River Commission. Suffice it to say that the retention of the river's water in one undivided volume is the cardinal principle of the plan; and that it is proposed to seek this end by such means as will introduce the fewest artificial conditions into the river's life, and apply most economically and effectually its own forces to the work of improving its own channel. These consist chiefly in the closing of chutes and outlets; the contraction of the channel in places where it is excessively wide, by the creation of new banks from deposited sediment; and the revetment of banks where caving is exceptionally rapid and injurious.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BUTTERWORTH] is recognized.

Mr. WHITE. I rise to a question of order. I understood that the debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto was limited to forty minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. It was.

Mr. WHITE. Have not the forty minutes expired?

The CHAIRMAN. Ten minutes yet remain.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. My friends from Illinois [Mr. THOMAS] and Missouri [Mr. HATCH] can not go before me in desiring the improvement of the Mississippi River. We are now for the first time confronted with the proposition that the engineers are to be voted down when they suggest economy in the expenditure of the public money. They have been censured heretofore because they have been supposed to be extravagant and to have dedicated themselves to a lavish expenditure of the public funds. And now when they propose economy, that which is palpable economy, there is a disposition on the part of some gentlemen to decry them, and to distrust their judgment. Up to this hour in regard to all other streams, all other localities, their judgment has only been called in question because they urged liberal appropriations for divers and sundry improvements. But when they suggest economy, and urge that we shall not rush into an improvement until the experiment has demonstrated beyond reasonable peradventure that what is proposed is likely to be a success, we are pressed to disregard their recommendations.

It is something entirely new in the history of this country for an appropriation to be made to build levees to confine the waters of the Mississippi. That is entirely new, and my friend from Illinois [Mr. THOMAS] knows very well that the engineers themselves not only distrusted the feasibility of that project, but some of them asserted most positively that the attempt would be futile.

Mr. GIBSON. There is no such proposition before the committee. What is before the committee is to authorize the engineers to improve the navigation of the river.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Oh, I understand that perfectly. You want to get the appropriation ostensibly for the purpose of inclosing and keeping confined within a narrow space the waters of the Mississippi while the incidental protection to the riparian owners is the ultimate and prime object.

Mr. GIBSON. The gentleman should be fair——

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. One moment. I not only want to be fair but more than fair; I want to be justly liberal in this matter.

My friend knows very well that when this commission proceeded to make their allotments all along the Mississippi River from its mouth to Cairo they were beset by citizens to begin by building levees from Cairo down; and quite a controversy arose as to the allotment. Let me say, so far from opposing a levee system, if an actual experiment shall demonstrate it will operate as hoped by my friend it will, so far from opposing it I shall be glad to favor it; and if as an incident to improving navigation it protects the riparian owners, I certainly would be doubly pleased, as would every right-minded citizen.

Mr. DUNN. Would you propose to limit the experiment to a part of the plan instead of all of it?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Why, my friend knows the engineers have said they do not desire to prosecute this year the work of building levees. If the levee system is to be tried, it is tried by us in connection with the other system of keeping the water within the banks.

Mr. ELLIS. Why do you want to fetter them?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. My friend knows very well that the pressure to build levees along the banks of the Mississippi River has as little to do with improving the navigation as the color of his hair.

Mr. ELLIS. I know better. Every engineer——

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I am not talking about the engineers, but the riparian owners. What I urge is that these experiments in the interest of national commerce, in the interest of our interstate commerce, in the interest of the South, in the interest of the Mississippi Valley, shall, while they are within the region of experiment, be confined to such works as will give them a fair and proper test, and, it being once determined that the willow mattress or the levee system will protect and improve the navigation of the Mississippi River, then I have no doubt I can speak for New England and every part of this country, that they will vote as liberally as my friends from Louisiana can desire to make the needed improvement, whatever it may be.

Mr. ELLIS. You do not know that; and they testified differently from your argument.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. They do not testify differently about that. The gentleman is entirely mistaken.

Mr. ELLIS. I am not mistaken.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Well, the evidence is before the House. They can read it. Not one in ten believes the levee system would be successful. Why it was asserted by some that the musk-rat would undo in a night what an army could do in a day.

Mr. ELLIS. There is not a musk-rat in the Southern States.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I am not talking about whether there are musk-rats there or not; I am only telling what a musk-rat could do if he was there. Let me say another thing. You gentlemen stand more in your own light, when you insist upon appropriations in defiance of the result of experiment, than you can conceive of now.

Mr. GIBSON. We have not done that.

Mr. RANDALL. No more important subject than that of the improvement of the navigation of the Mississippi River can claim the attention of this body. That subject has attracted the attention of the most scientific men of the world from a period far back of the organization of this Government, with varying recommendations.

For myself, I am in favor of making appropriations for the purpose of experimenting upon the improvement of the navigation of the Mississippi River until we shall at last succeed in finding the solution of this great problem. It was with that intent that I was in favor of the creation by a former Congress of the Mississippi River Commission, and perhaps I may say without egotism that I was largely instrumental in securing the passage of that bill through this House.

Mr. ROBERTSON. You carried it through.

Mr. RANDALL. Now, if the Mississippi River Commission does not answer the purpose after a fair trial, let us abolish it. And if that shall come, let us go to Captain Cowden or any one else who may present a feasible and reasonable plan for solving this great problem.

I believe in Congress taking the absolute and exclusive control of this matter. I would be unwilling to leave it to any other authority, State or municipal, outside of the authority of the United States Government. I do not believe that this Government has the power to appropriate money for the reclamation and improvement of alluvial lands. But it has absolute power, and should exercise it in the way of reasonable and proper appropriation of money, to secure the better navigation of the Mississippi River.

If the building of levees shall come as an incident or as a result of any successful experiment or plan, we can not help that. We will accomplish the great purpose in view, and to that end I think the American people have never in any way raised their voice against the appropriation of money for that purpose.

I wish that this proposition could be separated from others in this bill, so that I might vote, as I will now vote, against striking out any part of the provision in relation to the Mississippi River, and not give a seemingly opposition vote to that project by voting against the bill.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. RANDALL. If I have the time.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair begs to say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] that at his request the hammer fell when half of his time had expired.

Mr. RANDALL. Because I have promised the remaining half to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MORRISON], and I want to keep my promise.

Mr. MORRISON. In the two and a half minutes allowed me I have no time to speak of the importance of improved navigation on the Mississippi River to my section as well as to the whole country. But I must be pardoned for saying that the long-promised home market has not come to us. For in the year last past we have exported, beside a considerable portion of other products, about 30,000,000 of bushels, or more than one-half of our entire wheat crop. And by reason of this river we reach the markets of the European millions at greatly reduced cost.

Before the organization of the Mississippi River Commission large sums of money were expended to improve navigation; but the improvement made was not commensurate with the money expended. Since then something—very much—has been accomplished and our products go cheaper, surer, safer, to the sea, whether they go by river or rail.

If the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROBINSON] means by his proposition or amendment that no levees shall be built to protect the lands of any one, and will so amend his proposition, I will vote for it.

Mr. ELLIS. So will I.

Mr. GIBSON. So will I.

Mr. MORRISON. If that is all he intends to accomplish by it, he ought so to amend it. If, on the other hand, it is needful in order to improve the navigation of that river that levees shall be built, to that extent and to that extent only do I favor, support, or advocate the building of levees. For that purpose and to that extent it is as legitimate, as just and wise to accomplish the purposes by building levees as by any other means not more economical. If there is some better and more economical way let us know what it is.

Mr. GIBSON. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROBINSON] accept that proviso?

Mr. MORRISON. Who are the best judges and who is best informed on the subject and of what is needful to improve navigation of the river? The commission appointed by the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate, or the six or seven excellent gentlemen we sent down the river on a pleasure trip to look at it? I do not question either the intelligence or the purpose of these gentlemen. I respect both.

But I submit that the members of the river commission are better advised on the subject because of their training before and their better opportunities for informing themselves since their appointment, if not before. A majority of the commission is made up of men skilled and trained in the Army and Navy, and whatever may be said of either the Army and Navy, both are as good as anything else we have in the country—the officers are as honest as any other class of men. Like other men, they can hardly be wholly free from local influences.

The commission was not so made up as to have on it men from different sections representing different interests that they might so perform their duties that each might help the other to put money in his purse. This commission was not packed that each might help the other at the public expense to protect his field, his town, or his land. They have no fields or lands to protect which could induce them to make traffic of their positions to help each other to unwarrantable profits. Such commissions have been made, and I have heard none of the intelligent gentlemen of this examining committtee rise in their places here and condemn or disapprove its misdeeds. The River Commission is entitled to a fair and further trial. It has done well; it has done more in the work of improving the Mississippi River than has been done by all other agencies we have employed. Still I am not and have never been very partial to commissions of any kind. Next to conference committees Congressional commissions as a rule are more prolific of personal and private jobbery and public plunder than any other legislative methods or instrumentalities yet discovered.

Mr. DUNN. I move an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROBINSON].

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I would inquire of the Chair if the time fixed for debate has expired?

The CHAIRMAN. It has expired. The amendment of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DUNN] will be read.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I rise for the purpose of moving that the committee do now rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] will be recognized for his motion as soon as the amendment is reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the proposed amendment the words "and for the purpose of improving navigation;" so that the amendment will read:

"Provided further, That no money appropriated by this or any former act shall be used for the construction or repair of levees along the Mississippi River, except in fulfillment of existing contracts and for the purpose of improving navigation."

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. If you adopt that it lets in the whole scheme.

Mr. GIBSON. Then the gentleman does not want the navigation improved.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is out of order.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I have made the motion that the committee rise in order that the time for debate may be extended, and that I may be able to read to the Committee of the Whole what General Comstock says.

Mr. PAGE. I hope the committee will not rise for the purpose of extending debate. We must get through this bill speedily and send it to the Senate, if it is to become a law.

The motion of Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan, was not agreed to.

The question recurring on the amendment of Mr. DUNN, there were—ayes 65, noes 91.

Mr. DUNN. I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. DUNN and Mr. ROBINSON of Massachusetts were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 97, noes 91.

So the amendment of Mr. DUNN to the amendment of Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts, was agreed to.

The question recurring on the amendment of Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts, as amended, it was not agreed to, there being—ayes 39, noes 74.

Mr. BAYNE. I move to amend by striking out, in line 461, the words "two million one hundred and fifty thousand dollars," which I submit are simply a duplication of the amount appropriated in the paragraph.

The amendment of Mr. BAYNE was agreed to; there being—ayes 87, noes 15.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to amend by adding to the paragraph the proviso which I send to the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, however, That the Secretary of War shall detail three engineers of the Engineer Corps of the Army, with the approval of the President, to make special examination into the effect of constructing outlets for the flood-water of the Mississippi River above the passes into the Gulf of Mexico on the flood-line of the river, and especially at Lake Borgne; and into the effect on the flood-line of the river of closing up existing outlets above the three great passes of the river into the Gulf; and that the report of said engineers be laid before Congress at the opening of the next session; and the expenses of such examination shall be paid out of the sum above appropriated for the improvement of said river from the head of the passes to Cairo.

Mr. ELLIS. I make a point of order on that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point.

Mr. ELLIS. The amendment increases expenditures and changes existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is overruled.

The question being taken on agreeing to the amendment of Mr. HOLMAN, there were—ayes 73, noes 91.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. HOLMAN and Mr. ELLIS were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 77, noes 84.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. ANDERSON. I move to amend by inserting after the word "direction," in line 458, the words "and at the discretion;" so that the clause will read:

Which said sums shall be expended under the direction and at the discretion of the Secretary of War, in accordance with the plans, specifications, estimates, and recommendations of the Mississippi River Commission.

Mr. ANDERSON. I demand a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 37, noes 116.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WHITE. I move in line 452 to strike out the words "Red and;" so it will read:

And the deflection of the waters of the Mississippi River from the Atchafalaya River, &c.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the Mississippi River has more now than it can carry. [Cries of "Order!"]

The CHAIRMAN. Debate has been closed.

Mr. WHITE'S amendment was rejected.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. I move to strike out the whole paragraph.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 52, noes 104.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have not been able to ascertain, Mr. Chairman, whether or not the motion has been made to strike out the words "and the deflection of the waters of the Red and Mississippi Rivers from the Atchafalaya River."

Mr. THOMAS. I think that has been made and voted down.

Mr. HOLMAN. If the amendment has been voted on, of course I do not propose to renew it, but I think that the retention of those words in the bill is a great mistake.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky moved to strike out the words "Red and," in line 452; but the words indicated by the gentleman from Indiana the Chair thinks have not been voted on.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move, then, to strike those words out. [Cries of "Vote!"] I demand a division, and ask that my amendment be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the words—

"And the deflection of the waters of the Red and Mississippi Rivers from the Atchafalaya River."

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 41, noes 109.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

No portion of the money hereby appropriated shall be used for the construction of levees from Cairo to the head of the passes.

Mr. ELLIS. I make the point of order that that amendment has already been voted on.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order. [Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. Let us have a division.

The Committee divided; and there were—ayes 80, noes 86.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan, and Mr. ELLIS were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 71, noes 101. [Applause.]

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Mississippi, Missouri, and Arkansas Rivers: Continuing removal of snags, wrecks, and other obstructions from the Mississippi River, $50,000; continuing removal of snags, wrecks, and other obstructions from Missouri River, $50,000; continuing removal of snags, wrecks, and other obstructions from Arkansas River, $20,000.

Mr. ANDERSON. I move, in line 466, to strike out "$50,000" and insert "$150,000." That motion, I believe, is debatable, and I should like to be heard on it. Mr. Chairman, we have just made an appropriation of $2,150,000 for the Mississippi River, while there is an appropriation of only $50,000 reported in this bill for the Missouri River. My amendment is to make that $150,000. If $2,000,000 go to the Mississippi River then certainly it is within the bounds of proportion that the Missouri River, which is a longer river, which washes many rich and populous and agricultural States, should receive a greater appropriation than this bill provides.

Mr. KENNA. Let me suggest to the gentleman from Kansas that the appropriation in the present paragraph is for a specific object, while in the next paragraph he will see there is an appropriation for the general improvement of the Missouri River of $350,000. If he has any amendment to offer to the latter paragraph it should be submitted when that paragraph is under consideration.

Mr. FLOWER. Will the gentleman from Kansas accept as an amendment that half of the money may be expended to riprap the roots of the trees along the banks.

Mr. ANDERSON. I am told it would be better to make my amendment later on, and what we have just heard only makes still stronger my opinion of this bill. It is jam full of things which ought to be taken out of it; but I do not think $50,000 is a sufficient sum for removing obstructions from the Missouri River, and therefore I move to make it $150,000.

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Chairman, I have not had an opportunity in the division of time made to say anything on this bill until now, and I desire to say something in reply to the observations which fell from the lips of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROBINSON] in reference not only to the improvement of the Mississippi River, but its tributaries, the Missouri being one of its great tributaries and the Ohio the other. It was said they did not intend to make an appropriation looking to a system of leveeing the banks on either side for the purpose of improving the navigation of the Mississippi. Now, the concurrent testimony of all the engineers who have ever spoken on the subject at all, with the exception simply of the engineer whom the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] quoted, who came from the State of Maryland, and had never seen the Mississippi River until he was taken down as one of the special committee organized at the close of the last session of Congress, to make a visit to the Mississippi River and inquire into the modes and methods in which the Mississippi River Commission had conducted its work—I say the concurrent testimony of all the engineers was that it was necessary to confine the river within certain limits, and in order to confine the river within certain limits it was essential at high-water mark you should have levees to confine it within the prescribed limit of its banks.

Sir, the very same principle which has been so successfully applied by that eminent engineer to the obstructions in the lower river, whose name is indissolubly coupled with that Mississippi River from that great structure which spans it at Saint Louis, a monumental work of mechanical art and engineering skill in construction of bridges, surpassing any on this continent or in the world, the man whose name is inseparable from the jetties—I say that same principle should be applied above on the swifter currents of the river. What is the principle to which I refer? I allude to the jetty system. By confining the slow currents of the river where it flows to the Gulf within certain given limits on its lower reaches to where it debouches into the sound, jetties have been constructed to serve the same purpose which this principle proposes to establish by those who understand that river and its history on the swifter currents of the river on its upper part, in the shape of levees, to confine the water within its legitimate channel.

I am willing to concede that unless you can apply the jetty system to the more rapid currents of the upper river you can not successfully construct levees for the preservation of its channel; because they must have a bank immovable and not shaken by the floods, and we who understand, we who live upon the river, and I have lived there all my life, know that it is when the river is receding and going from the flood tide to the low-water mark that the current of the river, sweeping the sand from under the river-beds, creates the slipping and caving of the banks. Therefore it is essential that we should make the jetty system apply to the rapid currents of the upper river so as to keep the current within defined limits, as we apply the same system to the more sluggish currents at the mouth of the river. And let me say in this connection, Mr. Chairman, that I have stood upon the deck of one of the largest vessels coming into the port of New Orleans, and its captain said to me as to the question of our not having attained under the direction of Captain Eads a proper depth of water, averaging thirty feet as claimed, that his vessel was of the largest draught and the greatest length of any vessel that comes to the marine port of New Orleans; and that he could safely testify that the jetties had so improved the channel that he can pass with any other vessel of equal size abreast through the improved channel. Therefore I claim that we should apply the jetty system for the improvement of the Mississippi River wherever it is necessary to apply the system for the protection of the channel.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan, rose.

Mr. PAGE. Unless we can come to a vote I shall move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I have no objection to that. I only desired, however, to occupy a moment.

Mr. PAGE. I will yield for that purpose.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I shall only occupy one or two minutes of the time of the committee. What the gentleman from Mississippi has said in relation to the eminent engineer, Major Hutton, that he never visited the Mississippi River, gives me an opportunity to read from his testimony to show how thoroughly mistaken the gentleman can be. He was examined before the special committee, and I will read a portion of his testimony.

Question. Will you state your full name, Mr. Hutton?
Answer. Nathaniel H. Hutton.
Q. Where do you reside?
A. Baltimore, sir.
Q. How long have you resided there?
A. About twenty years, sir.
Q. Your age?
A. Forty-nine years.
Q. Your business?
A. I am a civil engineer.
Q. How long has that been your business, Mr. Hutton?
A. For about thirty years.
Q. Are you a graduate of any institution?
A. No, sir.
Q. In what business are you engaged in Baltimore—what particular business?
A. I am an engineer of the harbor board of Baltimore.
Q. How long have you held that position?
A. For six years.
Q. Were you an engineer in charge of any works previous?
A. Yes, sir; I have had charge for the Government of the improvements of the Patapsco River for some years. I made surveys for the Delaware and Maryland Ship-Canal, for the extension of the James River and Kanawha Canal to the Ohio River, and I have had charge of the improvement of the James River, and the improvements of the Rappahannock, the Susquehanna, and innumerable smaller ones. I have been in charge of river and harbor works ever since the war.
Q. All the time since the war?
A. All the time, together with other business. I am consulting engineer, and have a variety of other business in that connection.
Q. When you were engaged in the works of the different rivers and harbors you mention you were in the employ of the Government, were you not?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. You may state if you accompanied the committee down the Mississippi River on the occasion of its recent visit down that river?
A. I did, sir.
Q. At the request of the chairman of the committee?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. You joined the committee at Cairo?
A. I joined the committee at Cairo.
Q. Colonel, are you acquainted with the plans of the Mississippi River Commission for the improvement of the Mississippi, the general plans of the Mississippi River Commission?
A. I think I am, sir, so far as the published reports of the work, and what I saw on that river, go.
Q. I will ask you at this point if you ever visited the Mississippi River before?
A. I have, sir.

Mr. HOOKER. But not as an engineer.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan:

Q. How frequently?
A. I have passed up and down it I suppose half a dozen times——

Mr. HOOKER. That may be; thousands of others have visited the river; but he never visited it as an engineer.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. This also gives me an opportunity to complete what General Comstock, president of the Mississippi River Commission, says. After saying "in practice that no case is known where any considerable sinking of the river-bed for long distances has been produced by levees," he goes on:

But even if the low-water surface and the river-bed should sink together in consequence of the levee effect during preceding floods, it is still to be feared that the low-water depths might not be sensibly increased thereby.
In view of the uncertainty whether levees will cause any considerable sinking of the low-water bed, and of the further doubt whether such sinking would sensibly increase the low-water depths, it does not seem to him wise, in the absence of practical experience, to attribute any considerable value to a system of levees as an aid to channel improvement.

Now, I desire to say further, as this also gives me the opportunity, that as the committee have settled this question of appropriating money for the building of levees under the guise of improving the navigation of the river, and as this appropriation goes into the bill now in a shape which will allow the commission to use any portion of it to build levees above Red River or below—I say for myself that the conviction is so strong in my mind that this is wholly for the benefit of the riparian owners and to enhance the value of the lands that under no circumstances, so long as that provision remains in the bill as it is now written, can it have my vote? Under no circumstances, because I do not believe that it is right.

Mr. PAGE. Now give us a vote.

Mr. ELLIS. Mr. Chairman, I deem it my duty to say two or three words in response to what has been said by the gentleman from Michigan. I want this House to understand, and I challenge the record, that of the sixteen engineers who testified before the Mississippi River Commission—and you can not and you dare not deny it—fourteen of them gave their unhesitating, unequivocal sanction to the plan submitted by the Mississippi River Commission. There is the record. Every gentleman may read it for himself. Gentlemen may quote particular passages, may garble, may misrepresent, but the bold, bald, crushing truth will live that the plan and projects of the commission command the best and most progressive engineering thought of the world.

What are these plans? What is that theory?

It is, as I stated yesterday, the low-water channel, and coincident with it and dependent upon it is the high-water channel. I hurl back and deny the statement that we from Louisiana, or any other Representative on this side, have been influenced by the sole motive of protecting lands from overflow. It has been the humane voice of this country from great-hearted and progressive men of every party that if a plan could be devised that would at once perfect navigation and protect the fields and homes of people, that plan should be adopted.

Mr. HORR. Do I understand the gentleman to say there were sixteen engineers before the commission and all but two of them agreed in recommending this plan?

Mr. ELLIS. Yes; every one but two. Mr. Hutton was one of them, and nobody ever heard of him before. I at least never did. The chairman said he was invited by the committee. My assent was never given; neither was any authority given in the resolution appointing us to employ or pay him. I found him on board the boat when I went there; how he came to be there nobody knows; but the chairman of the committee, in my judgment, may possibly tell.

Now, I say that not only the sixteen engineers who testified before us, but Barnard and Humphreys, Gillmore and Herschell, and other distinguished engineers of this country have given their unhesitating and unqualified sanction to this plan of the Mississippi River Commission. There has been no thought with them of protecting the alluvial land, except as incidental to the perfection of channel navigation; and I can not conceive how in the face of the whole engineering thought of this country, ay, and of Europe, gentlemen who profess to feel within their breasts the faintest pulsations of humanity can say one word against that plan, when in addition to unfettering the great river and yet controlling it in its majestic march as it pours its magnificent tide of commerce to the sea, proposing to emancipate all the grain-growers, ay, in Michigan, ay, in Indiana, saving to the toilers of the West $35,000,000 per annum, or 15 cents on every bushel of wheat they send to market—how, outside of this consideration, they can hesitate for one moment when this plan proposes to redeem from utter and absolute ruin 45,000 square miles of the fairest and most majestic lands that exist beneath the smile of the American sun. [Applause.]

Ah, Mr. Chairman, there are voices and visions that gather around me now that I scarce dare give utterance to. There are visions of a great turbid sea; there are visions of weary eyes looking over imprisoning water around their homes; there are phantoms of struggling hands in the flood; there are memories of people looking with despair while their all is swallowed up by the floods of the mighty river. Their voices come and whisper to me and ask me for utterance here. But they must be still. We must look to the commercial aspect alone. We look only to making this great river the channel of the commerce of the West and the South, ay, of the majestic empire of the Mississippi Valley, from where the river in its natal hour woos the kiss of the northern sky that mirrors its serene glory in Itasca's lake, down, down two thousand miles to where it smiles to greet the ardent kiss of the eager tropic sea. [Applause.]

Mr. PAGE. If we can not have a vote I move that the committee rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANDERSON].

Mr. ANDERSON. I call for a division.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan, addressed the Chair.

Mr. PAGE. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CANNON reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 7631) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

BRIDGES ACROSS NAVIGABLE RIVERS.

Mr. VAN HORN. I ask unanimous consent that the first half hour of this evening's session be set aside for the consideration of some very important bills in relation to the construction of bridges crossing navigable rivers that are of great moment to the country.

Mr. BEACH. I object.

Mr. HISCOCK. I must object to that.

Some time subsequently,

Mr. BUCK said: I understand objection has been withdrawn to the proposition of the gentleman from Missouri. I suggest that fifteen minutes be asked for instead of thirty; in that form I think it will not be objected to.

Mr. BEACH. I objected before, and I do not withdraw my objection.

WEST POINT MILITARY ACADEMY.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the report of the Congressional Board of Visitors to the West Point Military Academy for 1882; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

NEW ZEALAND AND AUSTRALIAN MAILS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a concurrent resolution of the Legislative Assembly of the State of California, urging the necessity of liberal payments for the carrying of the New Zealand and Australian mails; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD. It is as follows:

Assembly concurrent resolution No. 47.

To the Speaker of the House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

Whereas the line of mail steamships now covering the route between San Francisco, New Zealand, and Sydney, New South Wales, via Honolulu, has been of great advantage to our country, and especially so to the Pacific coast thereof; and

Whereas this steamship line has been maintained mostly by the assistance of payments made by the above-named colonies for carrying the mails, the contracts for such payments terminating in November next: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That this Legislature urges upon Congress the necessity in the interest of American commerce and as a matter of equity to our colonial neighbors, who have this far borne the expense of this mutually beneficial mail service, of assisting in its maintenance by such liberal payment for the carriage of the New Zealand and Australian mails as their wisdom may suggest, having in view the benefit we receive from the regular commercial intercourse afforded thereby as well as by the increasing tide of travel from the colonies through our country to Europe.

Resolved, That his excellency the governor be requested to forward by telegraph to the President pro tempore of the United States Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives a copy of the foregoing resolution, with the request that they consider and take action upon the same immediately.

E. S. THOMPSON,
Secretary of State of California.

VISITORS TO MILITARY AND NAVAL ACADEMIES.

The SPEAKER. Under the provisions of section 1327 of the Revised Statutes the Chair announces the appointment of Mr. STEELE of Indiana, Mr. TOWNSEND of Ohio, and Mr. SPARKS of Illinois as the members on the part of the House of the Board of Visitors to attend the next annual examination of cadets at the Military Academy at West Point.

Under the provisions of the act of February 14, 1879, the Chair appoints Mr. HARMER of Pennsylvania, Mr. UPDEGRAFF of Iowa, and Mr. MILLS of Texas as the members on the part of the House of the Board of Visitors to attend the next annual examination of cadets at the Naval Academy at Annapolis.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted to Mr. LYNCH to print in the RECORD remarks on the river and harbor bill. [See Appendix.]

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted as follows:

To Mr. HARMER, to withdraw from the files of the House papers in the case of Robert W. Simmons.

To Mr. RICE, of Missouri, to withdraw from the files of the House papers in the case of B. F. Lutman.

To Mr. BARBOUR, to withdraw from the files of the House papers in the case of Mrs. A. Fant and Henry T. Fant, now pending before the Committee on War Claims; no adverse report.

To Mr. SPOONER, to withdraw from the files of the House papers in the case of W. L. Parvin and Henry A. Greene.

FREEDMEN OF CHICKASAW NATION.

Mr. MOORE asked and obtained unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the memorial of the Freedmen of the Chickasaw Nation.

The memorial is as follows:

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America:

The undersigned, your memorialists, respectfully show that they are residents of the Chickasaw Nation, and are "persons of African descent," and were born and bred in the said nation.

They have such interests there as inspire them with an earnest desire to remain residents, and to become citizens of the nation. There they have families, wives and children, and property; in fact everything that is dear to them is there; and they would consider it a great hardship to be forced to leave their firesides and to seek new homes.

Your memorialists represent not only themselves, but also that class of persons known in the nation as "persons of African descent," of which class there are about three thousand individuals. We and they have ever been loyal to the Government of the United States, and expect ever so to remain.

In order the more plainly to lay before your honorable bodies our cause and our claims, we call attention to the third article of the treaty between the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations and the United States, of April, 1866, which reads as follows:

"ART. 3. The Choctaws and Chickasaws, in consideration of the sum of $300,000, hereby cede to the United States the territory west of the ninety-eighth degree west longitude, known as the leased district, provided that the said sum shall be invested and held by the United States, at an interest not less than 5 per cent., in trust for the said nations, until the Legislatures of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations respectively shall have made such laws, rules, and regulations as may be necessary to give all persons of African descent, resident in the said nations at the date of the treaty of Fort Smith, and their descendants, heretofore held in slavery among said nations, all the rights, privileges, and immunities, including the right of suffrage, of citizens of said nations, except in the annuities, moneys, and public domain claimed by or belonging to said nations respectively; and also to give to such persons who were residents as aforesaid, and their descendants, forty acres each of the land of said nations on the same terms as the Choctaws and Chickasaws, to be selected on the survey of the said land, after the Choctaws and Chickasaws and Kansas Indians have made their selections as herein provided; and immediately on the enactment of such laws, rules, and regulations, the said sum of $300,000 shall be paid to the said Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations in the proportion of three-fourths to the former and one-fourth to the latter—less such sum, at the rate of $100 per capita, as shall be sufficient to pay such persons of African descent before referred to as, within ninety days after the passage of such laws, rules, and regulations, shall elect to remove and actually remove from the said nations respectively. And should the said laws, rules, and regulations not be made by the Legislatures of the said nations respectively, within two years from the ratification of this treaty, then the said sum of $300,000 shall cease to be held in trust for the said Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations, and be held for the use and benefit of such of said persons of African descent as the United States shall remove from the said territory, in such manner as the United States shall deem proper, the United States agreeing, within ninety days from the expiration of the said two years to remove from said nations all such persons of African descent as may be willing to remove, those remaining or returning after having been removed from said nations to have no benefit of said sum of $300,000, or any part thereof, but shall be upon the same footing as other citizens of the United States in the said nations."

From the terms and language of this clause of the treaty it is quite evident that the leading desire and intention of the Government of the United States was the complete enfranchisement of the "persons of African descent" in the said nations. Besides the emphatic words used in this clause touching the "laws, rules, and regulations necessary," &c., we have the additional assurance from the very date of the instrument, 1866, that this enfranchisement of the negro was the leading design of this clause, because at that time the Government was especially looking to the accomplishment of that event in all its enactments touching the colored race as well as its amendments to the Constitution of the United States. If this be the true intent and meaning of this clause of the treaty, we respectfully suggest the question: Will the Government of the United States quietly allow itself to be thwarted in this beneficent design?

The Chickasaw Indians have up to this time neglected and refused to pass the "laws, rules, and regulations" enumerated in said clause of the treaty. In 1877, after the lapse of eleven years from the date of said treaty, the Legislature of the Chickasaw Nation passed the following statute:

"An act confirming the treaty of 1866.

"SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the Legislature of the Chickasaw Nation, That whereas a treaty was concluded at Washington city on the 28th of April, 1866, by commissioners duly appointed on the part of the Chickasaws and Choctaws and the United States Government, which treaty was ratified with amendments by the United States Senate and confirmed by the President, the Chickasaw Legislature does hereby give its assent and confirm the said treaty and amendments made by the Senate of the United States.

"SEC. 2. Be it further enacted, That the Chickasaw Legislature does hereby give its assent to the sectionizing and allotment of the lands in severalty under the system of the United States, as provided for in the treaty of April, 1866, and the President of the United States is hereby requested to cause the same to be done as soon as may be practicable.

"SEC. 3. Be it further enacted, That the provisions contained in article 3 of the said treaty, giving the Chickasaw Legislature the choice of receiving and appropriating $300,000 therein named, for the use and benefit, or passing such laws, rules, and regulations as will give all persons of African descent certain rights and privileges be, and it is hereby, declared to be the unanimous consent of the Chickasaw Legislature that the United States shall keep and hold said sum of $300,000 for the benefit of the said negroes; and the governor of the Chickasaw Nation is hereby requested to notify the Government of the United States that it is the wish of the Legislature of the Chickasaw Nation that the Government of the United States remove the said negroes beyond the limits of the Chickasaw Nation, according to the requirements of the third article of the treaty of April 28, 1866.

"Approved October 17, 1877.

"B. F. OVERTON, Governor."

This act reflects the settled design and purpose of the Chickasaw Nation not to enfranchise the said "persons of African descent" named in said treaty. They have refused and neglected and still refuse and neglect to pass such laws. Besides the evidence of the settled purpose of the Chickasaws, as found in this statute, we are enabled to state as a fact that on several occasions during pending elections applications have been made at the polls of voting to be allowed to vote by persons of "African descent," yet these applications, though made by some of the oldest and most respectable of such persons—persons born and bred in the nation—have been invariably rejected.

In the aforesaid act of their Legislature, as it appears to us, the Chickasaws show a disposition to shuffle off upon us, in lieu of our rights, the money, this $300,000 or a part of it, and to thus absolve themselves from their obligations under the treaty; and we feel obliged here to assert that we do not consider ourselves in any way entitled to any portion of said money as matters now stand, and we protest most solemnly against the bartering of our rights and privileges for money.

The stipulation of the Government of the United States, to remove from the nations persons of African descent, applies only to such persons as might elect to remove. In this connection we take occasion to say, that although sixteen years have passed away since the ratification of this treaty, yet no persons of African descent have so elected to remove. And it is our belief that the United States Government has not removed from the nation any persons of African descent under this stipulation.

Now, when the Government agreed to this stipulation in the treaty, to remove from the nation such of the persons of African descent as might elect to remove, and such as were "willing" to remove, the Government asserted impliedly that it would not remove any persons of African descent who did not so elect to remove or who were not willing to remove; for an agreement reached in diplomacy is supposed to embody the ultimata of the treating parties.

We assume, then, that the Government is pledged by this treaty not to remove any of the persons of African descent from the nations who are not willing or who do not elect to remove, and that the Government has thus graciously given us the privilege of making or not making this election.

For many and grave reasons we do not elect to remove. As natives, we are attached to the localities of our birth and childhood; as men, we are attached to the people among whom we have been born and bred. We like the Chickasaws as friends, and we know by the experience of the past that we can live with them in the future in the close union of sincere fraternity and brotherly love. It is for these and other grave considerations that we do earnestly desire to be freemen in fact as well as in theory, for without the elective franchise—a free vote—there can be no real liberty. As things now exist, so far as the persons of African descent in the nations are concerned, the word freeman is a sham.

In this connection we here call attention to the latter clause of the said third article of the treaty of 1866:

"And should the said laws, rules, and regulations not be made by the Legislatures of the said nations respectively, within two years from the ratification of this treaty, then the said sum of $300,000 shall cease to be held in trust for the said Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations, and be held for the use and benefit of such of said persons of African descent as the United States shall remove from the said territory, in such manner as the United States shall deem proper, the United States agreeing, within ninety days from the expiration of the said two years, to remove from said nations all such persons of African descent as may be willing to remove; those remaining or returning after having been removed from said nations to have no benefit of said sum of $300,000, or any part thereof, but shall be upon the same footing as other citizens of the United States in the said nations."

Now, we respectfully submit that, having remained unmolested in the nation for sixteen years after the ratification of this treaty, and having not elected to remove, we are, in the very terms of this clause of the treaty, placed "upon the same footing as other citizens of the United States in the said nations."

It is true that we are debarred, in so many words, from any benefit in the said sum of $300,000, but we do not set up any claims to said money, or to any part thereof. We cheerfully abandon every claim which we may or might have had in the said money.

But, notwithstanding this very clear stipulation, and the legitimacy of the conclusion we draw from it as connected with the facts and the lapse of time, we are still ignored as citizens, and are so likely to remain, without the gracious intervention of the Government of the United States in our behalf.

THE $300,000—WHAT IS THE STATUS OF IT?

We have no accurate knowledge as to whether or not any portion of this sum of money has been paid in any way to the nations. This question we respectfully submit to the more enlightened understanding of Congress, within whose reach all such information lies. We are advised, however, and so state our belief, that some part of this money has been paid to and accepted by the Chickasaws. And we here call attention to the forty-sixth article of the treaty of 1866:

"ART. 46. Of the moneys stipulated to be paid to the Choctaws and Chickasaws under this treaty for the cession of the leased district, and the admission of the Kansas Indians among them, the sum of $150,000 shall be advanced and paid to the Choctaws, and $50,000 to the Chickasaws, through their respective treasurers, as soon as practicable after the ratification of this treaty, to be repaid out of said moneys or any other moneys of said nations in the hands of the United States; the residue, not affected by any provision of this treaty, to remain in the Treasury of the United States at an annual interest of not less than 5 per cent., no part of which shall be paid out as annuity, but shall be annually paid to the treasurer of said nations, respectively, to be regularly and judiciously applied, under the direction of their respective legislative councils, to the support of their government, the purposes of education, and such other objects as may be best calculated to promote and advance the welfare and happiness of said nations and their people, respectively."

We make no effort to reconcile this forty-sixth clause of the treaty with the third clause. If the Chickasaws have received any of their proportion of this money, then surely they are under the greater obligation to carry out the stipulations of the third clause, and to enact such "laws, rules, and regulations as may be necessary to give all persons of African descent, and their decendants heretofore held in slavery among said nations, all the rights, privileges, and immunities—including the right of suffrage." &c.

CITIZENSHIP IN THE NATION BY ADOPTIONS AND INTERMARRIAGE.

By the two modes of making citizens in the nations, one by legislative adoption and the other by intermarriage with Chickasaws, there is but little if any chance for a person of "African descent" to become a citizen of the nation. Because: 1. The rule upon which they base their legislative adoption reads thus:

"The Legislature shall have power by law to admit or adopt as citizens of this nation such persons as may be acceptable to the people at large."—Tenth section of General Provisions.

Experience teaches us that persons of African descent are excluded from adoption under this rule.

2. The intermarriage of persons of African descent with Chickasaws is very rare; there may be a few of such cases, but as a general rule we of African descent do not intermarry with Chickasaws; we intermarry among ourselves, and we do not wish to be either forced or induced by any custom, law, or power to abandon our social habits of life and fall into new ways.

THE EQUALITY OF THE LAWS.

In the fourth article of said treaty of 1866, it was stipulated on the part of the nations, "That all laws shall be equal in their operation upon Choctaws, Chickasaws, and negroes, and that no distinction affecting the latter shall at any time be made; and that they shall be treated with kindness and protected against injury."

We acknowledge with gratitude and pleasure that at the hands of the Chickasaws we have been treated with kindness and protected against injury; nor do we complain that, since the ratification of the treaty, any special law has been made affecting us differently and unequally with the Choctaws and Chickasaws; but, at the same time, we repeat here the steady and determined refusal of the Chickasaws to pass the laws, rules and regulations, heretofore referred to, as stipulated in the third article of the treaty, and it is plain that without such laws, rules, and regulations we can not enjoy an equality of the laws as they exist among the tribes.

Many persons of African descent in the Chickasaw Nation in the late war, who still reside there and on whose behalf we are now appealing, were volunteer soldiers in the late war between the States, and as such did good and honorable service for the Union, and bear upon them to this day the practical marks and scars of war; and we are at liberty at the same time to state that not one of the Chickasaw freedmen took part in the war against the Union.

In thus appealing to the Congress of the United States we disclaim any disposition on our part, as well as on the part of those we represent, to force the tribe into any measures which may be disagreeable to them or violative of their peculiar customs and usages, and we express the wish earnestly that whatever should be done in the premises may be such as can be carried out so as not in any manner to disturb the harmony which has so long existed and which now exists between us and the tribes.

In the seventh article of said treaty "the Choctaws and Chickasaws agree to such legislation as Congress and the President of the United States may deem necessary for the better administration of justice and the protection of the rights of person and property within the Indian Territory; provided, however, such legislation shall not in any wise interfere with or annul their present tribal organization or their respective legislatures and judiciaries, or the rights, laws, privileges, and customs of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations, respectively."

Therefore, we pray that the Congress pass such an act as will place us on a footing with the persons, other than the Chickasaws, as are referred to in the following seventh clause of the general provisions of the constitution of the Chickasaw Nation. That is to say:

"SEC. 7. All persons, other than Chickasaws, who have become citizens of this nation, by marriage or adoption, and have been confirmed in all their rights as such by former conventions, and all such persons as aforesaid who have become citizens by adoption by the Legislature, or by intermarriage with the Chickasaws, since the adoption of the constitution of August 18, A. D. 1856, shall be entitled to all the rights, privileges, and immunities of native citizens. All who may hereafter become citizens, either by marriage or adoption, shall be entitled to all the privileges of native-born citizens, without being eligible to the office of governor."

And your petitioners, as in duty bound, will ever pray.

KING BLU.
ISAAC ALEXANDER.

We the undersigned are members of the Chickasaw tribe, and we hereby cheerfully indorse the foregoing memorial and recommend that the prayers of the petitioners be granted if consistent with the powers that exist under the said treaty; and we sign this paper as delegates appointed by such of the Chickasaw tribe as are friendly to the prayer of the petitioners.

FLETCHER FRAZIER.
JOHN DYER.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. WILSON, for the evening session of to-day.

To Mr. SPAULDING, for the remainder of this day.

INDIAN TRUST FUND—TENNESSEE BONDS.

Mr. MOORE. I ask unanimous consent to submit for consideration and adoption at this time a resolution of inquiry.

The SPEAKER. It will be read.

The Clerk read as follows.

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and hereby is, respectfully requested, if not incompatible with the interests of the public service, to furnish to this House a statement showing the number and amount of bonds of the State of Tennessee now held by him in trust for various Indian tribes, when and by whom the investments were made, the dates of purchase, the periods of time for which interest may be due and unpaid thereon; the amount of appropriations, if any, made by Congress to cover any default of such interest; and whether the State of Tennessee has made any proposition, and if so what, looking to their settlement either by payment or compromise.

Mr. RANDALL. There are members from the State of Tennessee not now present who have an interest in this matter, and I will object.

Mr. MOORE. Then I ask that it be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

There was no objection, and it was referred accordingly.

The SPEAKER. The hour of half past 5 having arrived, in pursuance of previous order the Chair declares the House in recess until half past 7 o'clock this evening.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House reassembled at 7 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m., the Speaker in the chair.

POSTAL REGULATIONS.

Mr. LACEY. I ask unanimous consent to take from the House Calendar for consideration at this time House bill No. 7635, to amend section 3829 of the Revised Statutes. I will state that it is a public bill and one recommended by the Department.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That section 3829 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be so amended as to read as follows:

"SEC. 3829. And every person who, without authority from the Postmaster-General, sets up or professes to keep any office or place of business wherein is transacted any portion of the business now performed at post-offices, or who shall place over, within, or upon any office or place of business the sign, name, or title of post-office or postal station, shall, for every such offense, be liable to a penalty of not more than $500: Provided, That the Postmaster-General may, by regulation, provide for the sale of stamps at places other than post-offices: And provided further, That this act shall not prevent the delivery, without charge, at newspaper offices of letters in answer to advertisements inserted in said newspapers."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill which has been read?

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. I object.

Mr. LACEY. I hope the gentleman will not object. This is a bill which is recommended by the Post-Office Department.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think this is a good measure, but I hope the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. LACEY] will be allowed a moment to explain it.

The SPEAKER. Is the objection insisted upon?

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. It is.

The SPEAKER. Objection being made, the bill is not before the House.

PATENTS.

Mr. VANCE. I am instructed by the Committee on Patents, unanimously, to ask consent to report from that committee for consideration at this time House bill No. 7630, to amend section 4887 of the Revised Statutes, in relation to patents.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That section 4887 of the Revised Statutes shall be, and hereby is, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 4887. No person shall be debarred from receiving a patent for his invention or discovery, nor shall any patent hereafter granted be declared invalid by reason of its having been first patented or caused to be patented in a foreign country, unless the same has been introduced into public use in the United States for more than two years prior to the application; but every patent hereafter granted for an invention which has, prior to the filing of the application for said patent, been patented in a foreign country, shall expire seventeen years from the date of the foreign patent, or if there be more than one, seventeen years from the date of the earliest foreign patent, and in no case shall it remain in force more than seventeen years; but all applications hereafter made for patents for inventions previously patented in a foreign country, upon the invention of the same person, shall be made within two years from and after the date of such foreign patent, or if there be more than one, from the date of the earliest foreign patent. No patent granted for an invention which had, prior to the grant of such patent, been first patented in a foreign country, and which has not expired at the date of the passage of this act, shall be declared to be invalid by reason of its not being so limited on its face or in its grant as to expire at the same time with the foreign patent, or if there be more than one, at the same time with the one having the shortest term; but this act shall in no wise renew, revive, prolong, or extend any patent heretofore granted."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill which has been read?

Mr. ANDERSON. I think that had better lie over.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANDERSON] objects.

Mr. VANCE. I would like to move to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made, and the bill is not before the House.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HISCOCK. I move to suspend the rules so as to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from the further consideration of House bill No. 7637—the deficiency appropriation bill—and pass the same with the amendments proposed by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. PAGE. If this bill can be passed without a call for a quorum and without being read, I have no objection.

Mr. RANDALL. It can not be passed without being read.

Mr. HISCOCK. I will say that the passage of the bill at this time is necessary to make it sure that we are not to have an extra session of Congress. The bill contains some twenty or thirty pages, and the reading will take but a little while. If I may be allowed, I will state further that the bill carries less than one-half a million dollars of appropriations for the support of the Government the current year. The remaining appropriations of the bill are for audited claims certified to Congress under the act of June 14, 1878, and also appropriations to meet audited claims for back pay and bounty.

Mr. PAGE. I will say to the gentleman that the river and harbor bill will also fail unless it be passed without delay.

Mr. HISCOCK. The failure of that bill will not necessitate an extra session.

Mr. PAGE. Neither will the failure of the deficiency bill.

Mr. HISCOCK. I do not care to take any chances on that.

Mr. HAZELTON. Mr. Speaker, there will be no extra session. I am officially informed of that fact. [Laughter.]

Mr. HISCOCK. It is necessary this bill should be passed that I may be relieved of its care in the House and enabled to do my work upon committees of conference to which I am assigned.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, I do not object to the passage of this bill under a suspension of the rules. If we are in danger of an extra session, there is of course a necessity for its prompt passage. But so far as I am concerned, I can not consent that the bill be passed without reading.

The SPEAKER. There is no proposition of that kind.

Mr. HISCOCK. I have not asked that the bill be passed without reading.

Mr. PAGE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I desire to know if it is the motion of the gentleman——

Mr. HISCOCK. I will say further that I desire no debate on this question.

Mr. PAGE. I was about to make this inquiry, whether on the motion of the gentleman from New York anything will be in order but the reading of the bill and fifteen minutes' discussion on each side?

The SPEAKER. Nothing.

Mr. TALBOTT. The gentleman from New York says that he wants no debate.

Mr. HISCOCK. I want no debate.

Mr. PAGE. Can amendments be offered?

Mr. HISCOCK. The motion to suspend the rules is not subject to amendment.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New York propose that the bill be passed with amendments?

Mr. HISCOCK. Yes, sir; with amendments of the Committee on Appropriations, which I have sent to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. Are they connected with the bill?

Mr. HISCOCK. They are.

The SPEAKER. The Chair was about to state that no amendment can be offered afterward. The bill will be read with the amendments as proposed to be passed under the motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. PAGE. I will not offer objection to this proposition of the gentleman from New York.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read with the amendments of the Committee on Appropriations.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7637) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for prior years, and for those certified as due by the accounting officers of the Treasury in accordance with section 4 of the act of June 14, 1878, heretofore paid from permanent appropriations, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the following sums be, and the same are hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the objects hereinafter stated, namely:

To supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year 1883, as follows:

For three commissioners, at the rate of $3,500 each per annum; one chief examiner, at the rate of $3,000 per annum; one secretary, at the rate of $1,600 per annum; one stenographer, at the rate of $1,600 per annum; and one messenger, at the rate of $600 per annum; in all, $5,814.80.

For necessary traveling expenses, incidental expenses, and additional compensation to officers detailed as examiners, $7,000.

To enable the Secretary of the Interior to comply with the requirements of section 4 of the act approved January 16, 1883, entitled "An act to regulate and improve the civil service of the United States," $5,000. And a sufficient amount of said sum is appropriated to pay for the rent of suitable and convenient rooms for carrying on the work of the commission authorized by said act, and in case such rooms can not be assigned to said commission in any of the public buildings at Washington city.

To defray the expenses of the French and American Claims Commission: For salaries, compensation, and contingent expenses to enable the Government to fulfill its treaty obligations to France as well as to enable the counsel for the United States to take the testimony needed for defending the Government against unjust claims, $25,000.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to transfer from the appropriations for "contingent expenses, Treasury Department, investigation of accounts, and traveling expenses, 1882," a sum not exceeding $2,000, and "contingent expenses, Treasury Department, ice, &c., 1882," a sum not exceeding $450, to supply a deficiency in the appropriation for "contingent expenses, Treasury Department, freight, telegrams, &c., 1883."

To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to transfer from the appropriation for "contingent expenses, Treasury Department, gas, &c., 1882," so much as may be required to supply a deficiency in the appropriation for "contingent expenses, Treasury Department, ice, &c., 1883," not exceeding the sum of $3,200.

To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to transfer from the appropriation for "contingent expenses, Treasury Department, gas, &c., 1882," so much as may be required to supply a deficiency in the appropriation for "contingent expenses, Treasury Department, fuel, &c., 1883," not exceeding the sum of $2,000.

For expenses of national currency: Paper, engraving, printing, express charges, and other expenses, $25,000.

To complete the transfer and preparation of the Philadelphia collections presented to the United States at the close of the Permanent International Exhibition in Philadelphia, including necessary expenses already incurred, $4,112.82.

WAR DEPARTMENT.

For support of military prison, Fort Leavenworth, Kansas:
For purchase of subsistence stores for seventy-five prisoners, $3,832.50.
For subsistence stores, oil, wicking, and tobacco, $2,975.
For medical supplies, $200.
For donations of $5 each to prisoners on discharge, $150.
For extra-duty pay to members of the prison guard, $71.70.

Miscellaneous:
For fuel, light, and miscellaneous items, War Department building, $3,500.

NAVY DEPARTMENT.

For tuition of two naval cadets at the Royal Naval College, Greenwich, $900.
For fuel, light, and miscellaneous items, Navy Department building, $2,000.

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT.

For stationery for the Department of the Interior and its several bureaus and offices, $13,000.

For photolithographing or otherwise producing plates for the Official Gazette, $4,500.

For photolithographing or otherwise producing copies of the weekly issues of drawings of patents, designs, and trade-marks, $20,000.

Public lands service:
For compensation of registers and receivers of local land offices, $20,000.

Indian affairs:
This amount for subsistence and civilization of the Sioux Indians, as per agreement ratified by act of Congress approved February 28, 1877, $200,000.

This amount for necessary expenses of transportation, under contract, of goods, provisions, and other articles purchased for various Indian tribes, $20,000. And any unexpended balance of appropriations for this purpose for the fiscal year 1882 is hereby reappropriated and made available on account of this service for the current fiscal year.

This amount, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to enable the Secretary of the Interior to continue the investigation of Cherokee Indian matters named in the act of Congress approved August 7, 1882, $1,000.

The Eastern Band of Cherokee Indians is hereby authorized to institute a suit in the Court of Claims against the United States to determine the rights of the said band in and to the moneys, stocks, bonds, &c., held by the United States in trust for the Cherokee Indians arising out of the sale of lands lying west of the Mississippi River and also in a certain other fund commonly called the permanent annuity fund to which suit the Cherokee Nation commonly called Cherokee Nation West shall be made a party defendant. The said Eastern Band shall within three months after the passage of this act file a petition in said court, verified by the principal chief of said band, setting forth the facts upon which such claim is based. The said Cherokee Nation West shall within six months after the passage of this act file its answer to said petition, and said cause shall proceed to final determination pursuant to the practice in said court and such rules or orders as the said court may make in that behalf. The Secretary of the Interior shall transmit to said court for the consideration of said court copies duly certified of all records, reports, papers, and other document on file in the Department of the Interior which he may deem necessary to said cause or which may be requested by either of the parties hereinbefore referred to; and the said parties respectively may take and submit to said court such additional competent testimony as they may desire.

And jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon said court to hear and determine what, if any, interest, legal or equitable, the said Eastern Band has in said moneys, stocks, bonds so held in trust as aforesaid by the United States, and shall enter a decree specifically defining the rights and interest of the said Eastern Band therein and in any moneys hereafter to be derived from sources similar to those out of which the existing fund arose.

When the interest, if any, of the said Eastern Band has been ascertained as aforesaid, the Secretary of the Treasury shall, out of the portion of said fund adjudged to said parties respectively, pay all the proper costs and expenses of said respective parties of the proceedings herein provided for (each party except the United States to be liable for its own costs and expenses), and the remainder shall be placed to the credit of the said Eastern Band of the said Cherokee Nation in accordance with their respective rights as ascertained by the said judgment and decree of said court.

In the said proceeding the Attorney-General, or such of his assistants as he may designate, shall appear on behalf of the United States.

Either of the said parties to said cause may appeal from any judgment rendered by said Court of Claims to the Supreme Court of the United States, and the said courts shall give such cause precedence.

SEC. 5. It shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Navy to cause to be appraised, in such manner as may seem best, all vessels of the Navy which have been stricken from the Navy Register under the provisions of the act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes, approved August 5, 1882. And if the said Secretary shall deem it for the best interest of the United States to sell any such vessel or vessels, he shall, after such appraisal, advertise for sealed proposals for the purchase of the same, for a period not less than three months, in such newspapers as other naval advertisements are published, setting forth the name and location and the appraised value of such vessel, and that the same will be sold, for cash, to the person or persons or corporation or corporations offering the highest price therefor above the appraised value thereof; and such proposals shall be opened on a day and hour and at a place named in said advertisement, and record thereof shall be made. The Secretary of the Navy shall require to accompany each bid or proposal a deposit in cash of not less than 10 per cent. of the amount of the offer or proposal, and also a bond, with two or more sureties, to be approved by him, conditioned for the payment of the remaining 90 per cent. of the amount of such offer or proposal within the time fixed in the advertisement. And in case default is made in the payment of the remaining 90 per cent., or any part thereof, the Secretary, within the prescribed time thereof, shall advertise and resell said vessel under the provisions of this act. And in that event said cash deposit of 10 per cent. shall be considered as forfeited to the Government, and shall be applied, first, to the payment of all costs and expenditures attending the advertisement and resale of said vessels; second, to the payment of the difference, if any, between the first and last sale of said vessel; and the balance, if any, shall be covered into the Treasury: Provided, however, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to prevent a suit upon said bond for breach of any of its conditions. Any vessel sold under the foregoing provisions shall be delivered to the purchaser upon the full payment to the Secretary of the Navy of the amount of such proposal or offer; and the net proceeds of such sale shall be covered into the Treasury. But no vessel of the Navy shall hereafter be sold in any other manner than herein provided, or for less than such appraised value, unless the President of the United States shall otherwise direct in writing. In case any vessel now in process of construction in any navy-yard has been or shall be found to be unworthy of being completed, and has been and shall be condemned under the provisions of said act, and can not properly be sold, and it becomes necessary to remove the same, the cost of such removal shall be paid out of the net proceeds derived from the sale of other vessels hereby authorized to be sold.

Total amount in bill	2,037,989 09

During the reading of the bill the following proceedings took place:

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I make the point of order that the matter which the Clerk is now reading, this provision with reference to the Cherokee Indians, following line 107 of the bill, does not appear in the printed bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman simply has not the bill with the amendments printed.

Mr. HOLMAN. Have the amendments to the bill been printed?

The SPEAKER. These amendments are from the Committee on Appropriations and have not been printed. The Clerk was directed to read the bill as it is proposed to be amended.

Mr. WHITE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry: If it is proposed to have the bill read and acted upon without discussion on these amendments that we have never seen?

The SPEAKER. That is not a parliamentary inquiry. The bill is read just as though it had been printed. The Clerk will resume the reading.

Mr. WHITE. I desire to understand this matter.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can understand it if he listens to the reading of the bill. The Clerk is reading it as he has been directed to read it.

Mr. WHITE. But what I wish to know is whether when this bill is read, or when the reading is completed, it will be open to amendment and discussion?

The SPEAKER. It will not be open to amendment.

Mr. WHITE. Nor discussion?

The SPEAKER. That depends upon the action of the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to ascertain to what portion of the bill this amendment which the Clerk has just read is to apply?

The SPEAKER. It is to come in after line 107 of the bill.

Mr. KENNA. This is a very important bill, and it is important to the House that we should understand from the reading of it what it is.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is trying to preserve order.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

The SPEAKER proceeded to put the question on the motion of Mr. HISCOCK to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. I believe this is open to a demand for a second.

The SPEAKER. Did the gentleman rise in time to demand a second?

Mr. HOLMAN. I believe the motion was subject to a second under the rule.

The SPEAKER. Undoubtedly it was. But the second was not demanded.

Mr. HISCOCK. I hope that will be allowed. I am willing to make any explanation or answer any question I may be asked.

The SPEAKER. The second was not demanded; and if not demanded it can not be ordered.

Mr. HOLMAN. The Chair directed the reading of the bill as preliminary to submitting the motion.

Mr. ATKINS. I think there will be no trouble about this. I have no doubt the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations is willing to answer any question.

The SPEAKER. That can be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. CALKINS. Let the second be considered as being ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to understand from the gentleman from Indiana whether he rose in time to demand a second.

Mr. HOLMAN. I rose at the proper time to ask a second of the motion.

The SPEAKER. Did the gentleman demand a second before the question was put?

Mr. HOLMAN. When the reading of the bill was concluded?

The SPEAKER. After the reading of the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. Not until the Speaker rose and began to submit the question to the House in the ordinary form. I did not rise until then. I rose then. I supposed the Speaker was to inquire whether the usual demand for a second was waived.

The SPEAKER. In order that there may be a second it requires to be demanded. When the demand is not made for a second the Chair puts the question without debate.

Mr. HOLMAN. The demand was made. I rose for that purpose.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is trying to find out the fact. Does the gentleman state that before the question was put, or before the Chair commenced to put it, he demanded a second?

Mr. HOLMAN. I did not rise until after the Speaker had risen to put the question, for the reason that I did not know that the reading of the bill had been concluded.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman intended to demand a second?

Mr. ATKINS. I ask unanimous consent that the second be considered as ordered.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let it go; we will be more careful hereafter.

The Speaker again put the question, and upon a rising vote stated that in the opinion of the Chair two-thirds had voted in the affirmative.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 139; noes 10.

Mr. McMILLIN. Has a quorum voted? If not, I desire to make the point.

The SPEAKER. A quorum voted; 149 members voted.
Mr. HOLMAN. Then I call for the yeas and nays.
The question was taken upon ordering the yeas and nays; and there were 15 in the affirmative.
The SPEAKER. Not a sufficient number.
Mr. HOLMAN. Count the other side.
The negative was counted, and there were 119.
The SPEAKER. Not one-fifth voting in the affirmative, and the yeas and nays are not ordered.
So the rules were suspended and the bill passed (two-thirds voting in favor thereof).

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PAGE. I now move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. I make that motion in order that we may proceed with the consideration of the river and harbor appropriation bill.
The motion was agreed to.
The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. CANNON in the chair.
The CHAIRMAN. When the committee rose this afternoon it was dividing upon an amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANDERSON]. The Clerk will report the amendment.
The amendment was read, as follows:

In line 466 of the bill strike out "$50,000" and insert "$150,000;" so that it will read:
"Continuing removal of snags, wrecks, and other obstructions from the Missouri River, $150,000."

The question was taken upon the amendment; and it was not agreed to upon a division—ayes 16, noes 130.
Mr. ANDERSON. I now move to amend by striking out "$50,000" and inserting "$100,000;" and I desire to be heard on that amendment.
It seems to me that this Committee of the Whole, I can not see why, does not have adequate conception of the magnitude of the Missouri River as a great water-way for national and interstate commerce. If it had, I think that a larger sum would be appropriated than $50,000 for removing snags, wrecks, and other obstructions from the great river of the American continent.
It is only a truism to say that the future population and trend of emigration in this nation will be determined by the contour of the continent, by the fertility of the soil, and by climatic influence. Here is the great river of this continent, one longer than the Mississippi, one navigable for more miles than the Mississippi, one reaching into the Rocky slope, far into the Northwest, where the future grain-growing of this country will soon be. But for some reason the Committee on Commerce, which can appropriate $120,000 for the Great Kanawha River, which can make an appropriation for Cheesequake's Creek, which can include the Fox and Arkansas Rivers, and also Saint Anthony's Falls in this bill, when they come to a river of importance, the improvement of which would furnish a check to the greed and exactions of the railroad corporations, they can recommend an appropriation of only $50,000.
This is not for the purpose of leveeing the banks of that stream, not for the purpose of preventing the wastage of the banks, but simply to remove the snags and obstructions in the channel of the river. There is now enough water there to float your commerce. And yet for that purpose the committee recommended an appropriation of only $50,000.
Of course we differ in opinion in regard to this bill. I question no man's motive, I question no man's sincerity; I simply claim my right to have my opinion and to present such amendments as I see fit. Where the subject of the importance of a great stream affecting the great Northwest is presented to this committee, I submit in all kindness and in all earnestness that my amendment should be adopted.
Mr. WHITE. On page 1675 of the engineer's report, submitted to this Congress by the Secretary of War, I find this interesting information:

The whole amount appropriated for snagging on the Missouri River was reserved for the construction of a boat for special service on that stream, but the amount being insufficient for the purpose nothing more was done than to prepare plans and working drawings. As funds from the new appropriation are now available, the construction of the boat will soon be commenced and pushed to completion as soon as possible.

Here is an important work. We have just passed a clause in this bill appropriating nearly $2,000,000 on an experiment as to whether we can make the Mississippi River unload its burden and build up banks strong enough to support levees; an experiment which, in my opinion, will prove a perfect failure. But the plan of snag-boats and the removal of snags from the Missouri and Mississippi Rivers is a perfect success. Last year we thought it of sufficient importance to appropriate $150,000. But the Committee on Commerce comes in here this year and recommends the appropriation of the small sum of $50,000 for this great national water-way, when the Secretary of War tells us that he needs $358,000 for the coming fiscal year.
I confess that I see a slight conflict between the report of the Chief of Engineers and the mild veto of the President at the last session of Congress. But if we are to think for ourselves, independent of the President's veto; if we are to promote the commercial intercourse of this country by removing the snags in the Father of Waters, let us not be scared, but let us make a sufficient appropriation.
The amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANDERSON] is not a mere technical one but a substantial one. It is to make a sufficient appropriation to carry out to some reasonable extent the work of removing obstructions in the way of snags, &c., in the Missouri River. The gentleman from Kansas is not playing the rôle of an obstructionist, but he is attempting to get out of this committee a decent bill, a fair bill, or no bill at all.
If we are going to improve the commerce of the country let us do it on a broad, liberal and statesman-like policy, and not be whipped into line by the veto of the President and the censures of the metropolitan press.
[Here the hammer fell.]
Mr. PAGE. I move that the committee rise for the purpose of closing debate.
Mr. BROWNE. I hope the gentleman will not make that motion. The galleries are very full and there is a very fine audience here. [Laughter. Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]
Mr. PAGE. Very well, if we can have a vote I will withdraw my motion.
The question was taken upon the amendment of Mr. ANDERSON, and it was not agreed to; there being upon a division—ayes 44, noes 111.
Mr. ANDERSON. I move to amend by striking out, in line 466, the word "fifty" and inserting "eighty," so as to make the appropriation for continuing removal of snags, wrecks, and other obstructions, from the Missouri River $80,000.
Mr. PAGE. I make the point that this amendment has already been voted down.
Mr. ANDERSON. No, sir; I have proposed $150,000 and $100,000. I now propose $80,000. I have fixed this amount because it is the same which has been appropriated for the improvement of the harbor at the home of the chairman of the Committee on Commerce, my distinguished friend from California [Mr. PAGE]. It was found expedient by the committee that $80,000 should be given in this bill for the improvement of the harbor at Oakland. It was voted in by the committee because that is a great harbor, and because it came within the jurisdiction of the commerce of the country.
Now, here is the great Missouri River, big enough to wash up all the gold in Nevada and every gulch in the gentleman's State, a river along which within thirty or fifty years there will go a commerce of a value that no man can now compute. I simply ask that there be appropriated for the removal of snags and other obstructions from the Missouri River a sum equal to that found expedient or necessary to be appropriated for the improvement of the harbor at Oakland.
The amendment was not agreed to.
The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Missouri River, from its mouth to Sioux City, Iowa: Continuing improvement, including survey, from its mouth to Fort Benton, Montana, $550,000.

Mr. DUNNELL. I move to amend by inserting after the paragraph just read the following:

For continuing the practical test of the flume invented by M. J. Adams, the said test to be made under the supervision and direction of said Adams, $5,000.

In the river and harbor bill of last session an appropriation of $8,000 was made to continue the construction of a flume invented by Mr. Adams, and the request is made that there be an appropriation of $10,000 for that purpose for the present year. I have proposed in this amendment an appropriation of $5,000, believing and hoping that this sum will enable the inventor to make a successful test of the flume which he has been at work upon for the last two years. This invention is now undergoing a practical test in France in the removal of sand-bars in many of the rivers in that country. I hope there will be no objection to the amendment.
The amendment was agreed to.
Mr. ANDERSON. Now, as my friend has accepted that amendment, I move to amend by striking out, in line 347, the word "three" and inserting "four," so as to increase the appropriation from $350,000 to $450,000.
As the chairman of the Committee on Commerce has, in the generosity of his disposition, accepted the amendment of my friend from Minnesota [Mr. DUNNELL], I hope that, as we now have an opportunity to improve the Missouri River, he will accept this amendment, because there is no river anywhere so far as I know—none that has really attained to the dignity of a river and is not a mere creek—which needs improvement so much as the Missouri. There is a recklessness about its methods, there is a vim in its sweep, there is something so independent about it, something which goes so much on its own way, that it really needs to be curbed a little, it needs to be "sat down" upon occasionally; it needs to receive several and divers lectures semi-occasionally. If you can confine the current of that river, if you can prevent the washing away of soil, than which none is more fertile than that upon its banks, you will have added much to the future prosperity of that region. I ask that there be an increase of $100,000 in the proposed appropriation for the development of this river.

Mr. PAGE. I move that the committee rise for the purpose of limiting debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereon.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CANNON reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union having had under consideration the river and harbor bill, had come to no resolution thereon.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 7191) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, and for the armament thereof, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PAGE. I move that when the House shall again resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to resume consideration of the river and harbor bill all debate upon the pending paragraph and all amendments thereto be limited to one-half minute.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. PAGE, there were—ayes 129, noes 7.

Mr. ANDERSON. No quorum.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. ANDERSON and Mr. PAGE were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 137, noes 8.

So the motion of Mr. PAGE to limit debate was agreed to.

Mr. PAGE. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union to resume the consideration of the river and harbor bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union (Mr. CANNON in the chair), and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7631) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. By order of the House all general debate has been limited to one-half minute on the pending paragraph and all amendments thereto. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California.

Mr. PAGE. I ask for a vote.

Mr. ANDERSON'S amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Mississippi River above Falls of Saint Anthony: Continuing improvement, $3,000.

Mr. ANDERSON. In order to get some information in reference to this paragraph I will move to strike out the last word. I would like to inquire whether this has any relation to the improvement at Saint Anthony's Falls which was under consideration this morning?

Mr. PAGE. It has not. The estimates were $17,000 and we gave $10,000 last year, while this is only an appropriation of $3,000.

Mr. ANDERSON. I understand this has no connection with the reservoir.

Mr. PAGE. None.

Mr. ANDERSON. I withdraw the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Sacramento River, California: Continuing improvement, for the improvement and protection of the navigable channels of the Sacramento and Feather Rivers, $60,000.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I move to strike out the appropriation for the Sacramento River. The Secretary of War has certified to this House that this is a useless appropriation; it is not a national improvement; and that the only object of it is to take out of the river the detritus which the California miners have thrown into it. The United States have nothing to do with it. It is perfectly outrageous and absurd that we should go to California and go to mining by aiding the State of California to take care of the dirt which the miners take out of the hills and throw into that river. Nobody would have heard of such a thing as that if the chairman of the Committee on Commerce were not from California. It is so outrageous, so damnable, that nobody but a gambler or cut-throat would have thought of tacking such a thing as that to such a bill as this.

Mr. HORR. I move that the gentleman's language be taken down. It is an outrage.

Mr. PAGE. I hope my friend will withdraw that.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Michigan to take down the words of the gentleman from New York [Mr. VAN VOORHIS].

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HORR. I now move, Mr. Chairman, that the words be reported to the House as they have been taken down.

The Clerk read as follows:

It is so outrageous, so damnable, that nobody but a gambler or cut-throat would have thought of tacking such a thing as that to such a bill as this.

Mr. McLANE, of Maryland. I now move, Mr. Chairman, that the committee rise and report that language to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CANNON reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration the bill (H. R. 7631) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes; and the gentleman from New York [Mr. VAN VOORHIS] having used the following words: "It is so outrageous, so damnable, that nobody but a gambler or cut-throat would have thought of tacking such a thing as that on such a bill as this," they were ordered to be taken down and reported to the House for its action.

Mr. McLANE, of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I made the motion that the committee rise and the words be reported to the House; and I now move the expulsion of the member from New York who used that language.

Mr. HISCOCK. I have no doubt the words of my colleague——

Mr. LE FEVRE. I ask that the motion be put in writing.

Mr. McLANE, of Maryland. My resolution is in writing.

Mr. LE FEVRE. Where is it? Let it be read.

Mr. McLANE, of Maryland. I hope the Chair will preserve order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will send up his resolution.

Mr. McLANE, of Maryland. I send up the words of the gentleman from New York, as taken down in committee, and accompany those words with a resolution of expulsion, on which I call for the previous question.

Mr. HISCOCK. I hope the gentleman from Maryland will not do that.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will first read the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, For the use of said language said VAN VOORHIS is expelled from this House.

Mr. HISCOCK. Now, Mr. Speaker, we all recognize the fact——

Mr. McLANE, of Maryland. I hope the gentleman from New York will not attempt to take the floor from me.

Mr. HISCOCK. I hope the gentleman from Maryland will yield to me for a moment.

Mr. McLANE, of Maryland. I yield a moment.

Mr. HISCOCK. I thought the gentleman would do so. I believe, as other members of this House do, that the words spoken by my colleague were spoken in the heat of debate, provoked as he thought he was by something that transpired. I believe he has been guilty of an infraction of the rules of this House and its privileges; yet I believe the measure just proposed would visit upon him too severe a punishment, and I trust before the resolution is pressed that he will be allowed to make an explanation. The gentleman from Maryland in that event will withdraw, I hope, his resolution, if his explanation is satisfactory.

Mr. McCOOK. Will the gentleman from Maryland yield to me for a moment?

Mr. McLANE, of Maryland. Yes.

Mr. McCOOK. I hope the gentleman from Maryland will not insist upon this summary method before giving my colleague an opportunity of being heard.

Mr. McLANE, of Maryland. It never entered my mind——

Mr. MILLS. Of course the gentleman is entitled to be heard.

Mr. McCOOK. I ask the privilege of making a brief statement myself. I admit that the language of my colleague can not be defended. I concede that unless he apologize in the most full and complete manner, not only to the House but to the gentleman who reported this bill, that he ought to be expelled. [Applause.] But I think it only fair and just to him that we should hear him as to whether he will apologize or not before such a summary method is proposed.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman from Maryland allow me a word?

Mr. McLANE, of Maryland. I will yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts for a moment.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. I desire only to say, Mr. Speaker, that no one personally can more heartily condemn such language than I. It is the grossest infraction of the rules of decorum and the privileges of this House. But I wish to suggest to my friend from New York [Mr. McCOOK], who says that it is due to his colleague that we should pause before we take such summary action, that we should also pause in justice to ourselves before taking such a step.

This is the House of Representatives, it is true, of the American people; and yet day after day scenes transpire in this Hall that are not creditable to the national House of Representatives. [Applause.] That is no excuse for the gentleman from New York who has so gravely offended against the dignity of this body; and it is time that this should be stopped. But I repeat, in justice to ourselves we should pause before we invoke the summary penalty provided for in the Constitution, which can only be inflicted by a vote of two-thirds of the members of this House. We should stop here for a moment, recognizing the fact that no one can call in question the right of a member or of any man charged with an offense to have the fullest opportunity for a hearing and the amplest opportunity for explanation and apology. In the heat of debate language may be and is often used that as soon as uttered would be gladly recalled. We should then give the gentleman from New York who has offended a chance to explain. If he declines, if he wavers, if he attempts to justify himself for such an offense, then I will go unhesitatingly to the extremity of punishment.

Mr. McLANE, of Maryland. It never entered into my mind, Mr. Speaker, that the gentleman should not have the amplest opportunity to be heard in his own defense.

Mr. HORR. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. McLANE, of Maryland. Yes, sir.

Mr. HORR. Mr. Speaker, I called for the taking down of these words simply because I deemed it the only method to maintain the dignity and good breeding of our members. I wish to say that I did it with no feeling toward the gentleman from New York. But I wish further to say that this language was used, and I call my friend from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] to witness the fact, without the slightest provocation from the chairman of the Committee on Commerce. He had not opened his mouth or uttered a syllable or a word in any manner or shape to exasperate the gentleman from New York and call forth such a response. He had done nothing of the kind, and I looked upon it as an unprovoked attack which this House out of respect to its own dignity ought not to submit to for a single moment. While I am willing, if the gentleman from New York will apologize for his language, as far as I am concerned, willing to give him that opportunity, I do say, Mr. Speaker, that we can not afford to permit the rules of this House to be infringed in such a manner without punishment. And I will say further that the rules of common decency should not be so grossly violated here among the members of this body—gentlemen, as we claim to be. This offense should meet the most summary punishment unless the man who perpetrated the offense takes back such language toward any member of this House and makes proper amende to the dignity of the House which he has so grossly insulted.

Mr. McLANE, of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I repeat what I have tried to say once or twice before, that it never entered into my mind in moving that resolution that I should put it to a vote of this House without giving the gentleman from New York the fullest opportunity for making an explanation of the words he used. I say this in reply to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. He should make more than an explanation.

Mr. McLANE, of Maryland. I am not embarrassing myself with what the gentleman from New York should say. I merely want to say for myself that I do not desire to ask a vote on that resolution until the gentleman from New York has been heard.

But, Mr. Speaker, it never entered into my mind that anything he could say could excuse him before the country and before this House.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. There is always room for repentance.

Mr. HISCOCK. I trust my friend from Massachusetts will not deem it necessary——

Mr. McLANE, of Maryland. I have not yielded. I beg the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] to allow me to say what I have to say. I have taken the course I have taken under the impression that I would have, and I have no doubt that I have it, the cordial sympathy of the House. Now, it is not for me and it is not for this House——

Mr. BISBEE. I rise to a question of order. I ask that order be preserved in the Hall.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is well taken. Members will clear the aisles and resume their seats.

Mr. McLANE, of Maryland. I said it never entered my mind to ask a vote on this resolution without hearing from the gentleman from New York. The meanest, the commonest criminal in the land has a right to be heard. But when I come to ask the House to pass upon this resolution, and when I take the responsibility of moving it, I have my duty to perform; and I wish to recall to the House that the gentleman from New York [Mr. VAN VOORHIS], just previous to the use of the words which have been taken down, addressed the gentleman from California as the chairman of the Committee on Commerce. He knew perfectly well to whom he addressed that language. And it is fresh in the mind of every member of this House that last night when we were in session we were discredited and disgraced by that same member from New York, who then addressed the chairman of the Committee on Commerce in language that, although it would give no disgrace to the gentleman from California, made infinite disgrace to this House and to the gentleman from New York, who uttered the language. Last night when he addressed the chairman of the Committee on Commerce he made some reference to his early life, and spoke of him as a mule-driver or a stage-coach driver. Sir, it would have been quite in the line of current retort and would have had no originality in it if the gentleman from California had said to the gentleman from New York if he had ever been a mule-driver or a stage-coach driver he would have remained such probably to the present hour.

Mr. ATHERTON. I rise to a question of order.

Mr. HISCOCK. I call the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. McLANE] to order.

Mr. McLANE, of Maryland. I am quite in order. I know what I am saying.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will not regard it as in order for the gentleman to make a personal attack——

Mr. HISCOCK. I call the gentleman from Maryland to order, and ask that his words be taken down.

Mr. McLANE, of Maryland. Take down my words and you will find in them no breach of parliamentary decorum.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] calls the gentleman from Maryland to order and asks that his words be taken down. The gentleman will indicate what words the reporter will write out.

Mr. HISCOCK. I prefer to withdraw my request that the gentleman's words be taken down. I believe they were out of order, and on reflection he will recognize that fact.

Mr. McLANE, of Maryland. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland will suspend for one moment. The Chair will state it will not be regarded in order for a gentleman to review language used at another time or make personal attacks on any person.

Mr. McLANE, of Maryland. I will avoid the slighest infringement of the rule as the Chair understands it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will proceed in order.

Mr. McLANE, of Maryland. I will not take the slightest liberty in the sense of the Chair. I want only to say, in referring to the language of the gentleman from New York last night, and in expressing my regret and my sense of shame that such language was used on this floor, I will say I find in that fact my impulse for moving this resolution. I am satisfied not only that we have reached a point when an example is necessary, but, I regret to say it, we have found the individual that ought to be made an example of.

That is why I have moved this resolution. And now it rests with the House to give that gentleman an opportunity to say whatever he has to say. And then I shall demand the previous question on my resolution.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. McLANE] asks that the gentleman from New York [Mr. VAN VOORHIS] shall be allowed to make a statement. The Chair hears no objection. The gentleman from New York will be heard.

Mr. MILLS. Before the previous question is called the person charged should have a hearing.

Mr. McLANE, of Maryland. On reflection, I will yield the floor without calling the previous question.

Mr. MILLS. Will the gentleman from Maryland say whether he thinks it an offense to be a mule-driver or a stage-driver? [Cries of "Order!" "Order!"] I want to say that this House should act in pursuance of the ancient and fundamental law among all English-speaking people that punishment shall be inflicted upon no criminal until he has been fully heard.

Mr. McLANE, of Maryland. One word only in reply to the gentleman from Texas.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood the gentleman from Maryland to yield the floor, and the gentleman from Texas is not recognized as entitled to the floor.

Mr. GIBSON. I make the point of order that there is so much confusion here that we can not understand what is going on.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is well taken. Before any person is recognized for any purpose the Chair will insist that order shall be restored. [After a pause.] The Chair understands that the gentleman from New York is accorded the right to be heard on this matter, and recognizes him for that purpose.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. Who called upon the gentleman from New York to make a statement?

The SPEAKER. The House.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. By what authority?

The SPEAKER. The Chair submitted the question to the House, and no objection was made.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. At what time?

The SPEAKER. Within a few minutes.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. The gentleman from Maryland yielded the floor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland yielded the floor, but himself indicated a desire that the gentleman from New York should have an opportunity to be heard.

Mr. McLANE, of Maryland. I beg the Chair to restate that proposition.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I have not heard the gentleman from New York claim the floor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York is accorded the floor, if he desires to be heard.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. If the gentleman from New York does not desire the floor, by what authority does the Chair refuse to recognize others?

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from New York does not desire to be heard, of course he need not be.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I ask the Speaker whether the gentleman from New York can be heard through any one but himself?

The SPEAKER. That is a matter the Chair need not now decide, for it is not now presented. If the gentleman does not desire to be heard himself, the question will then come up. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. Mr. Speaker, I have been very earnestly opposed to the river and harbor bill. Some of us who have been opposing it have found it exceedingly difficult to be heard in consequence of confusion in the House, sometimes raised thoughtlessly and sometimes otherwise; so that in addressing the Chair or the House I have always found it necessary to speak with a great deal of power and difficulty. In other words, I have been compelled to raise my voice to its extreme strength in order to get the attention of the presiding officer and of the House.

Now, sir, I am not an orator as my friend from Maryland is. My vocabulary is much more meager than his. Sometimes, perhaps, when I wish to express my opinions of a measure I may not use exactly the words that he would use.

What I intended in the instance now before the House was simply to characterize the measure I was discussing. I had not the slighest intention to be personal to anybody, nor did I suppose that I was using language different from what others have used with perfect impunity upon this floor.

And I say here that so far as the chairman of the Committee on Commerce is concerned, I have not the slightest feeling toward him of any kind whatever, unfriendly or malicious. I had a right, as I thought, to speak of the Sacramento River improvement, an improvement which the Secretary of War had spoken against. And I do not know but if the Secretary of War had been here he would have been criticised for his opinion, although it was asked for.

Now, I wish to withdraw the words to which exception was taken, stating that when I used them I did not mean to apply them to the chairman of the Committee on Commerce or make any personal application. I simply meant to express my objection to the measure under consideration. I had no intention to make any personal allusion in those words to anybody. And I very much regret any exception should be taken or that I am under the necessity of withdrawing those words. [Loud and continued laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The House will come to order.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I am not through.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize no one until the House is in order. No gentleman will be recognized for any purpose at all until the House comes to order.

After a pause,

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I shall be exceedingly sorry if this bill shall pass and become a law. I regret very much that I used the words which I did, and have a desire to make the fullest apology to the House for their use.

Mr. LE FEVRE. I move to lay the resolution on the table.

Mr. FLOWER. I hope the gentleman from Maryland will withdraw the resolution.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. Is the motion of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LE FEVRE] debatable?

The SPEAKER. It is not.

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman from Maryland, as I understand, has the floor?

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I understand that the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. MCLANE] desires to make a statement.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Maryland desire to make a statement?

Mr. MCLANE, of Maryland. I rose, Mr. Speaker, supposing that I was in perfect parliamentary order——

The SPEAKER. Certainly; the gentleman is entitled to recognition. The gentleman from New York has yielded the floor. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LE FEVRE] moves to lay the proposition of the gentleman from Maryland on the table.

Mr. MCLANE, of Maryland. If the gentleman from Ohio desires to make that motion——

Mr. LE FEVRE. I withdraw it.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. The gentleman from Maryland, as I understand, has withdrawn the resolution.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Maryland withdraw his resolution?

Mr. MCLANE, of Maryland. I rose for that purpose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has the power to withdraw his resolution, and as the Chair understands does so. If there be no objection, the resolution will be considered as withdrawn.

Mr. HERBERT. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HERBERT. Does the withdrawal of the resolution withdraw the amendment which was offered?

The SPEAKER. There has been no amendment offered.

Mr. HERBERT. Then, Mr. Speaker, I submit as an independent proposition a motion that the Speaker censure the gentleman from New York, and on that motion I wish to be heard for a moment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT] submits a motion which will be reduced to writing.

Mr. CALKINS. The House must "censure;" the Speaker can not "censure."

Mr. SPRINGER. By direction of the House, he can.

The SPEAKER. The motion of the gentleman from Alabama is in order.

Mr. CALKINS. I rose to make a point of order, and to call the attention of the Chair and the gentleman from Alabama to the fact that perhaps this form of the motion is not parliamentary. That was the purpose for which I rose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his point of order upon the motion.

Mr. CALKINS. That is the point I desired to make.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will be heard on the point of order.

Mr. CALKINS. That is all I desire to say.

Mr. HERBERT. I modify my motion by substituting the word "reprimand" for the word "censure."

Mr. CALKINS. I withdraw my suggestion.

The SPEAKER. Either word is in order under the practice.

Mr. HERBERT. Now, Mr. Speaker, if I can have the ear of the House, I desire to be heard on my motion.

Mr. BAYNE. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BAYNE. As I understood, a resolution was presented by the gentleman from Maryland, and a motion made to lay that resolution on the table.

The SPEAKER. The resolution was withdrawn, and that carried with it the motion to lay on the table.

Mr. BAYNE. Then an amendment was not in order.

The SPEAKER. No amendment was proposed.

Mr. HERBERT. In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, this House owes it to itself, notwithstanding the apology made by the gentleman from New York, to at least censure the language of which he has been guilty here on this floor. I should not have voted to expel him; certainly not, if he had apologized. But, sir, we have witnessed within the last few days offense after offense against the dignity of this House. It has become too common, sir, for the charge of falsehood to be bandied to and fro between members. When we come to consider what is the offense of which this gentleman from New York has been guilty, we find it to be exactly this: As the gentleman from Maryland has said, on last night a scene occurred here between the gentleman from New York and the gentleman from California. I only refer to it now for the purpose of illustrating the animus which in my opinion, notwithstanding the retraction of the gentleman from New York, actuated him at the time he used the words recently taken down. The gentleman from New York called the gentleman from California a mule-driver and a stage driver. It is true, as the gentleman from Texas has said, that the fact of having been a "mule-driver" or a "stage-driver" is no disgrace. It is an honest and therefore an honorable occupation, and it is to the credit of the gentleman that, without early opportunities, he has been able, by the suffrages of his fellow-men, to become a Representative in Congress. Yet it is also true that those words were employed with the purpose on the part of the gentleman who used them to cast opprobrium upon the gentleman from California. That was last night; from that time until this nothing has occurred, so far as we know, to show that the feeling which prompted those words did not exist to-night when the words taken down were used.

And what were they? Can they fairly be construed to have been intended by the gentleman from New York [Mr. VAN VOORHIS] to apply to the bill? If I am not mistaken in the words, they are that nobody but a cut-throat or a gambler would have drafted such a bill. I ask that the words may be read, in order that I may be correct.

The Clerk read as follows:

It is so outrageous, so damnable, that nobody but a gambler or a cut-throat would have thought of tacking such a thing as that on such a bill as this.

Mr. HERBERT. Now, gentlemen, we are here judges of a matter affecting the dignity of the House of Representatives. Is there any member on this floor who can say that he believes the words "nobody but a cut-throat or gambler would tack such a thing as that to such a bill as this" were intended to apply to the bill and not to the gentleman from California? Now, Mr. Speaker, if we believe this to be the truth, does the mere fact that the gentleman from New York [Mr. VAN VOORHIS] rises in his place and retracts those words—does that wipe out the offense? I ask this House to say, has not an offense been committed; and if we believe it has, if we now set an example here when such words as those have been uttered by expressing ourselves completely and fully satisfied?

Mr. KING. There is so much confusion in the Hall that we can not hear the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT]. Then, Mr. Chairman, any member of this House who wishes to avail himself of the privilege of debate to say here on this floor what he would not say outside can convert the House of Representatives into a bear garden.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky, rose.

Mr. HERBERT. Mr. Chairman, I have said all I desired to say. I simply wanted to put before this House this matter as it appears to me, but I desire before yielding the floor to send the resolution in form which I wish to offer, and then I shall yield the remaining portion of my time to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr HORR].

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the member from New York, Mr. JOHN VAN VOORHIS, in the language used by him upon the floor and taken down at the Clerk's desk, has been guilty of a violation of the privileges of this House, and merits the severe censure of the House for the same.

Resolved, That the said JOHN VAN VOORHIS be now brought to the bar of the House by the Sergeant-at-Arms, and be there publicly censured by the Speaker in the name of the House.

Mr. HERBERT. Put the word "reprimanded" instead of the word "censured" in the last resolution.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I move to lay that resolution upon the table.

Mr. HORR. I thought I had the floor?

Mr. HERBERT. I yield the floor to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. The gentleman from New York has made the amplest apology for everything he said.

The SPEAKER. The question before the House is on the motion to lay on the table.

Mr. PAGE. I would like to say——

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. He has withdrawn everything he said.

Mr. PAGE. I should like to be heard.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the gentleman being heard? The Chair hears none.

Mr. PAGE. I ask the gentleman from Alabama to withdraw his resolution in order that the House may proceed to the consideration of the river and harbor appropriation bill so we may reach a vote and pass it to-night.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I have moved to lay the resolution on the table.

Mr. CALKINS. Does the gentleman from Alabama withdraw his resolution?

Mr. HERBERT. I do not.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 62, noes 82.

So the House refused to lay the resolution on the table.

Mr. TALBOTT. I demand the previous question on the resolution.

Mr. LE FEVRE. I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. HORR. I thought the gentleman from Alabama yielded the floor to me.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman did not have the floor to yield.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. CALKINS. Mr. Speaker, I only rise to occupy the attention of the House for one moment. It is generally, and I believe almost universally, the custom of the House after a member had used language which had been declared unparliamentary and had made an ample apology for the use of that language, at least to pass by the offense. In this instance, however, the language used was so offensive and so outrageous that members of the House evidently feel some punishment should be visited on the offending member.

Now, we all understand the language used. We all understand the parliamentary law as applicable to it. We all understand what ought to be done in a dignified body like this, or as this ought to be. And now let us vote upon the resolution which the gentleman has offered and put the thing at an end at once. [Applause.]

Let us have a vote by yeas and nays upon the resolution.

Mr. ROBESON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Have not the yeas and nays been already refused on this proposition?

The SPEAKER. Not on the resolution.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I would like to be heard for a moment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can not be heard now.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. Have I not a right to be heard on this resolution?

The SPEAKER. Not without the consent of the House.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. Then I ask consent to be heard.

Mr. CLARDY. I understand the gentleman from New York is asking to be heard; I hope there will be no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will submit that request. Is there objection to the gentleman from New York being heard?

There was no objection.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. Mr. Speaker, if the river and harbor men of this House want to censure me for what has occurred, I suppose I can stand it. I do not know but that they are in a majority here; and the only misconduct which seems to affect my friend from Alabama is that I have opposed this bill in my poor way. It has been very poor indeed. Now, in what I said before I mean to be understood as withdrawing in the fullest possible manner the language which was objected to. Did not the gentleman from Alabama so understand me?

Mr. HERBERT. I understood the language was withdrawn.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. And in addition to that I apologize to the House for using such language, and to the gentleman from California also, if he or anybody supposed that the language was applicable to him. I have stated before what I now repeat, that I did not intend to apply it to him.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. Is a motion now in order to lay upon the table that resolution?

The SPEAKER. That motion has just been voted down. The Chair will submit the motion to the House on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken; and the Speaker decided that by the sound the "ayes" had it.

Several MEMBERS. Let us have a division.

Mr. KENNA. Before the division is called for let me submit a request to the House by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. KENNA. I hope it will be satisfactory to the gentleman from Alabama, and to the Chair, that the resolution which he has submitted may now be withdrawn; and, by common consent, the entire language and proceedings in reference to this matter may be omitted from the RECORD. I hope that course may be pursued.

Mr. HORR. No, I do not consent to that.

Mr. HERBERT. I do not consent to the withdrawal of that resolution. I believe this House owes it to itself, owes it to its own sense of dignity, owes it to this country, to express its opinion upon this breach of decorum in the fullest possible manner.

Mr. KENNA. I have no doubt about the propriety of the resolution; but inasmuch as the gentleman from New York has apologized in the amplest manner, I think the matter had better be dropped.

Mr. KASSON. May I be heard for a moment in reference to this matter?

The SPEAKER. It can only be done by consent, as the House is dividing.

Mr. KASSON. I ask consent to be heard for a moment. I have thought, Mr. Speaker, of every similar instance within the whole range of my memory, which embraces several occasions of offensive language in the House of Representatives, and I can remember none where this resolution has been offered and adopted subsequently to the withdrawal of the language and a double apology, an apology to the House and an apology to the member supposed to be designated by the language used. Both these apologies have been completely made. The language has been entirely withdrawn; and the proposition now made is after that has been done to bring the member to the bar of the House for such ordinary punishment as is usually imposed in cases where there is neither retraction nor apology. If there is a precedent for this I hope some gentleman will cite it. I remember none. I therefore do not believe it right at this stage of the proceedings to subject the person offending, so grossly offending, to the censure of the House, administered in open House by the Speaker, as he would have been censured at least if the language had not been withdrawn and the apology made.

Mr. HERBERT. A single word, Mr. Speaker. I do not know whether there be any precedent for this motion under these circumstances or not; but this I do know, that if such censures had been imposed in such cases heretofore, we would not so frequently have witnessed, as we have unfortunately witnessed in our parliamentary proceedings here, the use of such language by members sheltering themselves under the privileges of debate. And I hope this House now, if it has not done so heretofore, will make a precedent on this question that will be remembered. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair will again submit the question on agreeing to the resolution of the gentleman from Alabama, which has been read and on which a division is demanded.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 66, noes 78.

So (no further count being demanded) the resolution was not agreed to.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PAGE. I now move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. CANNON in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and resumes consideration of the river and harbor appropriation bill. There is an amendment pending before the committee, the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. VAN VOORHIS].

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. Before the committee rose I said all I cared to say about the amendment.

The question being taken on the amendment, it was not agreed to.

The Clerk read lines 498 and 499, as follows:

Improving mouth of Coquille River, Oregon: Continuing improvement, $7,000.

Mr. CASSIDY. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 499 insert the following:
"Improving Colorado River, $20,000."

Mr. CASSIDY. Mr. Chairman, that amendment is as proper as many of the provisions of this bill. I offer it in obedience to a memorial of the Legislature of my State, which I had the honor of submitting to this House a few days since. In that memorial all of the facts in the case were duly and forcibly set forth. There can be no question, sir, about the importance in a strictly commercial sense of the Colorado River. The Colorado is essentially and emphatically an interstate waterway. It is more than 1,500 miles in length, having its source in the Wind River Mountains in Montana Territory, and stretching away through Wyoming, Utah, Arizona, and Nevada to the Gulf of California. It washes the southern boundary of my State for nearly three hundred miles, forming the dividing line between Nevada and Arizona. Union Peak, a towering mountain in the Wind River range, is the common source of the Mississippi, Missouri, Columbia, and Colorado Rivers.

The Colorado is navigable for a distance of more than five hundred miles. A line of steamers is now plying regularly at all seasons of the year between Yuma and Fort Mohave, a distance of three hundred and twenty-five miles. The commerce on this portion of the river is very considerable at present, and steadily growing. It is by this route alone that the commercial needs and interests of Northeastern Arizona, Southwestern Utah, and Southern Nevada are accommodated. The Utah Southern Railroad from Salt Lake southward is nearing Collville, the head of navigation on the Colorado. The Utah Northern Railroad is reaching out from Salt Lake far to the northward. With these two roads completed there will be a continuous route across that portion of the continent from the British Possessions on the north to the Gulf of California at the south. The Colorado River must afford an important link in this great north and south line of communication. The Government has never expended one dollar in the improvement of the navigation of the Colorado.

No other stream of equal importance has been so shamefully neglected. Some years since a survey was authorized by Congress. The army engineer, to whom the work was assigned, Lieutenant Payson, reported that the river could be thoroughly improved and placed in first-class order at an estimated cost of $92,000. But he went out of his way, in my judgment, to say that the commerce of that region would not justify the expenditure. Whatever may have been the condition in 1878, when the examination was made, the same state of affairs does not exist now. Many important mining districts have been discovered and agricultural valleys settled since that date; and I say in all earnestness that a system of improvements along the Colorado River should be undertaken without further delay. The cost will be immaterial in comparison with the money lavished on other streams of merely local importance. Understanding that the Committee on Commerce has attempted to restrict the items carried in this bill to about one-third of the sum which will be required to complete in each case, hence I have proposed but $30,000 for the Colorado on the same basis, the Government engineers having estimated that the whole work can be finished at a cost not to exceed $92,000. In conclusion, I trust that the amendment which I have offered will meet the approval of a majority of this House.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read lines 500 and 501, as follows:

Improving harbor at Norfolk, Virginia: Continuing improvement, $10,000.

Mr. DEZENDORF. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 501, strike out "$10,000" and insert "$18,000."

Mr. DEZENDORF. Mr. Chairman, in asking for this increase I desire to call the attention of the committee to the fact that the harbor of Norfolk is naturally one of the best in the world, but that during the war obstructions were sunk in the Elizabeth River by the Federal Government by which bars were formed in said harbor, for the removal of which $360,000 have been already expended; and that the Chief of Engineers has reported that $18,000 will complete the work upon said harbor in accordance with the project of the harbor commissioners and engineers.

This harbor is one of the most important in the country, with a commerce increasing at a greater ratio than is generally understood by the country at large.

Norfolk is now the fourth cotton port in the Union, and the receipts of this commodity are increasing daily. I desire to call attention to a few facts in this connection taken from a recent speech of Mr. Charles G. Elliott, president of the Norfolk Cotton Exchange:

In 1874, 20,346 bales were shipped; in 1876, 108,683; in 1878, 159,357; in 1880, 258,065, and during the cotton year ending August 31, 1881, 328,818 bales left our wharves in seventy-seven ships for Liverpool and the Continent, direct, while about 40,000 were forwarded by our exporters, on through bills of lading via other ports. Mark the comparison: In 1874, 20,000 bales; in 1881, 360,000 bales. A gain of 1,700 per cent. in seven years.

From a recent article by Senator JOHNSTON, based upon data taken from the official report of the United States Bureau of Statistics, we take the following comparison between the decrease and increase in the business of the six largest cotton ports, between the six years ending August 31, 1861, and the six years ending August 31, 1879:

Market.	Increase.	Decrease.
	Per cent.	Per cent
Galveston	197
New Orleans		28
Mobile		43
Savannah	44
Charleston	34
Norfolk	1,212

And yet the cotton has come to Norfolk, year by year gaining in the immense proportions before stated.

The demands of this trade have been so great that, in our harbor within the past year, 14,580 feet (nearly three miles) of new wharf frontage have been constructed, more than for seventy-five years before; immense warehouses built (even now inadequate) and six powerful compresses are in operation, with a daily capacity of 10,000 bales.

Among the other causes of the growth of Norfolk as a cotton port may be mentioned the extension northward of the area of cotton production and the largely increased yield of South Side Virginia and of North Carolina, our near neighbor and best customer. With this progressive and highly-favored State, whose exhibits here are so remarkable, Norfolk is closely allied, not only by the Seaboard and the Norfolk and Western lines, but by two canals and a new railroad, the Elizabeth City and Norfolk, connecting our harbor with a low country region unsurpassed for fertility and watered by 1,900 miles of inland navigation.

We would also refer to the large truck farms around our city. These supply fruits and vegetables for early shipment to the North, amounting in value to $2,500,000—one strawberry farm employing 1,700 hands. This truck has furnished paying business to lines of splendid coastwise steamers in the summer, when the cotton trade is light, and which are thus made strong enough to compete successfully for the carrying of cotton as against the all-rail routes.

The Delaware, the Patapsco, and the Upper Chesapeake are almost annually closed for weeks, and we have the only port south of Cape May (except the bay of Mobile, thirty miles below that city) which can receive and accommodate the mammoth ships now being built to carry ten or fifteen thousand bales of cotton.

Traversing the fertile valleys of Southwest Virginia, at New River our Norfolk road taps rich and valable coal and ore beds, and crossing East Tennessee, abundant in resources, opens up to us the cotton-producing country of the South and Southwest. Over this line cotton from every Southern State goes to Norfolk. In the fall it brought to us a considerable proportion of the receipts of Mobile, Montgomery, Selma, Opelika, Meridian, and other points which were seeking rapid transit for early delivery in Liverpool. And it certainly affords to Memphis, that great mart of the Mississippi Valley, the best outlet for her large accumulations of stocks of cotton.

The track of this road runs directly to the wharves on deep water, and freights are easily transferred from car to ship or compress at very low cost, no cartage being required.

From the Northwest we have the Chesapeake and Ohio, now connecting Cincinnati and Louisville, through the Ohio and Kanawha Valleys, with Hampton Roads, soon to open another route to Memphis; a transcontinental link, binding under one control the bay of San Francisco to the Lower Chesapeake, shortening the avenues of trade and travel between the West and East by hundreds of miles, and destined to be a formidable rival of any of the grand trunk lines.

Mr. Chairman, the receipts of cotton at the port of Norfolk this year will amount to about 800,000 bales. About one-seventh of the entire crop of the country will move through Virginia waters, and the value of the export to foreign countries will amount to about $40,000,000.

I have thus shown, sir, the importance of this harbor, and now I hope the committee will vote to increase the amount to the sum indicated in my amendment, which sum will complete the work.

The question being taken on the amendment on a viva voce vote, the Chairman stated that the "noes" seemed to have it.

Mr. WISE, of Virginia. I call for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 33, noes 42.

So (further count not being called for) the amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read lines 502 and 503, as follows:

Improvement Cumberland Sound, Georgia and Florida: Continuing improvement, $25,000.

Mr. ROBINSON, of New York. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 503 insert the following:

"Improving Gowanus Channel, in the harbor of New York: Continuing improvement, $20,000."

Mr. ROBINSON, of New York. The report of the engineers states the reasons for continuing this improvement in the Gowanus Channel, in the harbor of New York. They have reported that $40,000 would be an appropriate sum to put into this bill for continuing this improvement.

I will not occupy the time of the committee, Mr. Chairman, in discussing this matter at length, but only state that it is a very necessary improvement. While the engineer asks $40,000, I only in this amendment ask for $20,000.

Rather than occupy the time of the committee I ask leave to print as a part of my speech a short letter from Mr. Beard, of Brooklyn, a gentleman largely interested in the improvements in that part of the city.

I hope the chairman of the Committee on Commerce will not oppose my amendment.

The letter and accompanying table referred to by Mr. ROBINSON, of New York, are as follows:

BROOKLYN, N. Y., January 23, 1883.

MY DEAR SIR: Inclosed you will please find statement of number of vessels, value of cargoes, and amount of tonnage which used Gowanus Creek in eleven months. This statement was prepared for General Newton at the time he made the survey and recommended the appropriation for the improvement of Gowanus Creek channel. By the statement you will see that there were eight hundred and sixteen vessels, with an aggregate tonnage of 398,905 tons, discharging cargoes on the wharfs of Gowanus Creek amounting to $5,546,500. These vessels paid into the custom-house for tonnage dues, at 30 cents per ton, a very large amount of money. You will readily see that the improvement of Gowanus Creek is an important adjunct to the commerce of this port, and its necessity and the advantages to be obtained to commerce by making a channel of sufficient width and depth to allow of the passage of large vessels will be easily understood. General Newton made a survey in 1880 and recommended to Congress that a channel be made two hundred and fifty feet wide and eighteen feet deep at low water, which would require an expenditure of $180,000 for dredging. The Congress of 1881 appropriated $40,000. Congress in 1882 made a further appropriation of $20,000, leaving yet to be appropriated in order to complete the work $120,000. The money already expended has been used to make a cut through the bar sixty feet wide. This you will see is of very little advantage, as it is impossible to keep a vessel in a channel sixty feet wide. If the balance of the amount recommended is appropriated and expended on the channel it will be of untold benefit to this part of Brooklyn and a relief to the overcrowded piers of New York city; but if the work is suspended or ceases where it is, the money already expended is virtually thrown away.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

WM. BEARD,
140 Amity street, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Hon. WILLIAM E. ROBINSON, M. C.

The amendment of Mr. ROBINSON, of New York, was not agreed to.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 503 insert the following:
"Improving Charlotte Harbor, New York: Continuing improvement, $35,000."

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. The duties collected at Charlotte Harbor amount to about $200,000 a year. The work which is in progress there will cost about $400,000. Eighty thousand dollars were estimated by the engineers for the last year. Thirty-five thousand dollars were appropriated in the last river and harbor bill. When appropriations are being made for rivers and harbors, I think this important harbor should have its share. I do not know how the Committee on Commerce skipped this important harbor of Charlotte. I do not know but what they had some personal reason for skipping it and leaving it out of the bill. I do not know they had such a reason, but I think this appropriation ought to be in the bill, and I therefore submit my amendment.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read lines 504 and 505, as follows:

Improving Rancocas River, New Jersey: Continuing improvement, $6,000.

Mr. ANDERSON. I move to strike out that paragraph. I call attention to this because of the fact that this is one of the items mentioned in the report of the Secretary of War. He says:

So far as appears from the reports, the project is to increase the navigable depth of a river having already six or seven feet, and is mainly in the interest of a single item of commerce, namely, that of transporting phosphate rock from Charlestown to fertilizer works at Centreville, at the head of navigation on the river.

There was appropriated last year $10,000; and of that sum to December 31, 1882, there was used but $2,000. And this bill appropriates $6,000.

Now, I know nothing of this work, except what is told us in this report, which comes from good authority. It seems to me this may be another of those cases where an appropriation is made that is practically for the benefit of a manufacturing concern. I do think that class of cases should be eliminated from the bill. I therefore make a motion to strike out this paragraph.

The motion to strike out was not agreed to.

The Clerk read lines 512 and 513, as follows:

Improvement of the mouth of the Columbia River, Oregon, $75,000.

Mr. HOGE. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 513 insert the following:
"Improving the Monongahela River: Continuing improvement, $25,000."

Mr. PAGE. That ought to be admitted.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read lines 514 to 517, as follows:

That the appropriations made by the acts of June 18, 1878, and March 3, 1879, for improving Harlem River, New York, be covered into the Treasury.

Mr. HUTCHINS. I move to amend by striking out the paragraph just read.

I hope I may have the attention of the committee for a moment while I give my reasons for offering this amendment. In 1878 an appropriation of $300,000 was made for the improvement of Harlem River, in the city of New York. When that large appropriation was made the petitions that came to Congress in its behalf were very largely from the Western States. The boards of trade and prominent citizens in most of the Western cities petitioned that that improvement should be made in behalf of the commerce of the great West.

When the appropriation was made it was coupled with the condition that the sum should not be available until the right of way for the work was secured to the United States free of cost. That unusual condition was attached to the appropriation for the reason that a large number of valuable lots of ground were required in order to make the improvement. The Government said, and very properly in my opinion, "we will appropriate the money to improve the navigation, but the land required for that purpose must be furnished free of cost to the Government."

In 1879 a further appropriation of $100,000 was made upon the same condition. Now, the city of New York has conveyed to the Government property worth a very large amount of money and the Government holds the title to it. The title of the water frontage, about six miles, is to-day in the Government free of any cost, so far as the city ownership is concerned, rights that to the city would be worth a very large amount.

More than that, the State of New York has expended a large amount of money, probably exceeding $100,000, for proceedings which have been had up to this time in securing the right of way from the individual owners. A bill has passed the Assembly of the State of New York within the past week appropriating $250,000 more to pay such owners for their land, which it is proposed shall be taken. That is the condition of this matter to-day. Yet it is proposed to cover this money back into the Treasury. I have conferred with members of the Committee on Commerce, and they were not aware of these facts. No explanation had been made to them of the present condition of the proposed improvement. As the money stood there unused, they proposed to cover it into the Treasury. I understand from the chairman of the committee that there will be no objection to striking out this provision.

Mr. HORR. The Committee on Commerce supposed that they had examined this matter with great care. The gentleman from New York [Mr. HUTCHINS] states facts which there is no proof in the Department to substantiate. We have no evidence, nor could we get any, that the title to the property is in the United States Government. Is there any such proof on file?

Mr. HUTCHINS. It is on file in the city of New York.

Mr. HORR. Ah, but not here. We have no evidence of it, nor does the Department here understand that the Government has any such title.

Mr. HUTCHINS. Filing it here would not convey the title; but the officers in charge of the work in the city of New York are cognizant of the fact. And what is more, I make the statement myself, which I suppose the gentleman will accept.

Mr. HORR. I would not question the gentleman's word for a moment.

Mr. WASHBURN. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. If all the conditions of the law have been complied with, then why has not the appropriation been used?

Mr. HUTCHINS. I would state in answer to the gentleman that the conditions have not yet been complied with.

Mr. HORR. That is what we supposed; I do not yield any further.

Mr. HUTCHINS. I mean to say that the assessment map which has been made of this improvement covers over 7,000 different parcels, including more than 22,000 different lots; and of course it necessarily requires much time and preparation.

Mr. HORR. The gentleman admits what we learned to be a fact This money has been hung up, waiting the action of the people of Ne York city, and they have made no clean title to the Government.

The Committee on Commerce, in looking over the matter to see how we could in any way retrench expenditures and keep this river and harbor bill free from excrescences, found this large amount of money lying there and not being used. We also learned from the press of New York city that they considered the appropriations in the last river and harbor bill to be fraudulent and wrong. Our friends from New York city state that the bulk of them were steals. The newspapers of that city also stated the same thing. We, not knowing of any steals, supposed that they did know of one, and living right there we supposed that they knew that this was the one. Consequently we naturally proposed to put the money back into the Treasury, so as to prevent the steal which they said was going on. [Laughter.] It was done to preserve the virtue of the gentlemen from New York, and of the metropolitan press, and in obedience to their demands.

Mr. FLOWER. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. PAGE. I hope we will be allowed to have a vote.

Mr. FLOWER. I want to say a word or two.

Mr. PAGE. How long a time?

Mr. FLOWER. Not over two minutes. I desire to state that we have not been as anxious in New York to get this money out of the Treasury as some other gentlemen who have had appropriations made for their districts. We were willing to let it stay there until the right of way had been secured. The State of New York is going to secure that right of way, and make a four-hundred-foot canal, and give the Western produce which comes to her doors an outlet to the ocean. We ask that this appropriation remain in the Treasury, and that you will trust us another year. I hope this provision will be stricken out.

Mr. HUTCHINS. One word.

Mr. PAGE. Oh, no; let us now have a vote.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. HUTCHINS; and upon a division there were—ayes 31, noes 42.

Mr. HUTCHINS. No quorum has voted, and I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. HUTCHINS and Mr. PAGE were appointed.

Mr. KENNA. I ask that the rising vote be taken again. I do not think the question was understood.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the vote will be again taken.

Mr. WASHBURN. I desire, by unanimous consent, to ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. HUTCHINS] whether there is any reasonable probability that if this appropriation be allowed to stand for the present this right of way will be furnished within the next year, so that this work may go on?

Mr. HUTCHINS. I have no doubt that it will be furnished within ninety days.

Mr. WASHBURN. In that case I should be sorry to see it stricken out.

The question being again taken, there were—ayes 53, noes 24.

So the amendment was adopted.

Mr. JONES, of New Jersey. I move to amend by inserting the provision which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

That $400,000 be appropriated to continue the filling of the Potomac flats.

Mr. JONES, of New Jersey. I wish the committee would hear a statement of my reasons for offering this amendment. I have been informed by a number of gentleman——

Mr. PAGE. I make a point of order upon the amendment. It does not belong in this bill. It is not an improvement of a river or harbor for purposes of navigation or commerce, but is simply for sanitary purposes.

Mr. JONES, of New Jersey. Was not a provision of this kind inserted in the last river and harbor bill?

Mr. PAGE. It was put on in the Senate and was forced upon us in conference.

Mr. JONES, of New Jersey. I would be very glad to see an appropriation made for this purpose, because——

Mr. PAGE. It is not germane to any portion of this bill.

Mr. JONES, of New Jersey. I know well the contractor for this work. By the 1st of November the appropriation already made will have been expended. In putting his plant there the contractor has been at an expense of over $100,000. If no appropriation be made this year, and the contractor is obliged to stop work, he must suffer a great loss.

Mr. PAGE. The gentleman is not discussing the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey will be heard on the point of order, if he desires.

Mr. JONES, of New Jersey. The appropriation made last year for this purpose was in a river and harbor bill, and I do not know why it should not be made in the same bill this year.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the Secretary of War shall prescribe such rules and regulations as may be necessary to secure a judicious and economical expenditure of said sums, and shall cause to be made and submitted to Congress annual reports, on or before January 1, giving detailed statements of the work done, the expenditures made, and the effect of such work, together with such recommendations as he may deem it proper to lay before Congress. It shall be the duty of the Secretary of War to apply the money herein appropriated for improvements, other than surveys and estimates, in carrying on the various works, as far as can be without actual detriment to the interest of the Government, by contract. Where such works can not be done by contract without injury to the public interest, they may be prosecuted by hired labor. Where said works are done by contract such contract shall be made after sufficient public advertisement for proposals, in such manner and form as the Secretary of War shall prescribe; and such contracts shall be made with the lowest responsible bidders, accompanied by such securities as the Secretary of War shall require, conditioned for the faithful prosecution of the work according to such contract, and for the proper payment of all liabilities incurred in the prosecution thereof for labor and material.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 540, after the word "works," strike out to and including the word "labor," in line 544, and insert:

"By contract, except that works for which the appropriations herein made are less than $10,000 may be prosecuted by hired labor; and that works under the direction of the Mississippi River Commission may be prosecuted by hired labor if in the opinion of said commission the interests of the Government are better subserved thereby."

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. This amendment explains itself. It has had the consideration, I believe, of the committee to some extent, and I hardly think they will object to it.

Mr. DUNN. The gentleman will allow me to inform him that the work on the Mississippi River is to be executed by the Secretary of War, not by the commission—only in accordance with the plans of the commission. It may be done by contract or by labor employed directly by the Government.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Then the amendment can be modified by striking out "commission" and inserting "Secretary of War."

The object of this provision is to require that for all the important works contracts shall be made, so that there may be a proper accountability, and that the large sums appropriated for these improvements may be advantageously expended. I offer the amendment in the interest of accountability to the Government and to the people.

Mr. RANDALL. For several years, as I understand, the effort has been made so to arrange the law in this respect as to meet exactly the difficulties which at one time existed. After full consultation as I understood with the Engineer Corps, the language of this bill as recommended by the committee has been agreed upon. I think it would be a dangerous experiment to change it.

Mr. KENNA. I do not know that I caught exactly the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DAVIS] or the expression of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL], but I desire to say that the clause as it stands in the bill is in the very words adopted year after year for a number of years in bills of this kind. The engineers in charge of the various improvements are familiar with these requirements; and I trust the provision will be allowed to remain as it is.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, in many places throughout the country proposed contracts for public works have been declined by the Government for one reason or another. New machinery, new plants, have been brought into use by the Government, and subsequently destroyed, or sold for an inadequate price, thus entailing loss which should be avoided. My belief is that the Government can contract for this service without devoting a large sum of money to procuring plant. We notice here to-night in reference to the improvement of the Missouri River that the entire appropriation last year was exhausted and used to build a snag-boat, and no improvement was made. My object is to let all the work under $10,000 be by hired labor if desired, but in large contracts I think the Government is better served if it should contract down to the last dollar, and we will get a better accountability than we now receive from that Department.

Mr. WASHBURN. I think there is sufficient discretion left in the hands of the Secretary of War to provide for any such case as the gentleman from Illinois refers to.

The amendment of Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois, was rejected.

Mr. LYNCH. I move the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 553 insert the following:

"And upon the further condition that convict labor shall not be used or employed on any of the works named in this bill."

Mr. LYNCH. I do not wish to make a speech, but will merely ask for a vote.

Mr. LYNCH'S amendment was rejected.

Mr. HOLMAN. I offer the following amendment to come in at the end of line 553:

The Clerk read as follows:

No sum of money appropriated for any improvement specified in this act shall be expended until the Chief of Engineers shall report in writing to the Secretary of War that the improvements named would be of public utility.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. That is in the bill now.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 72, noes 97.

Mr. HOLMAN. No quorum has voted.

The CHAIRMAN appointed Mr. HOLMAN and Mr. PAGE as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 67, noes 103.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BAYNE. I move after line 553 to insert the following.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the Secretary of War be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to make such regulations as may be necessary to preserve and protect the channels of the rivers and harbors herein appropriated for from damage, injury, or impairment by the deposit of refuse or other matter or material.

Mr. KENNA. I hope that amendment will be adopted.

Mr. PAGE. I have no objection.

The amendment was adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

That surveys shall hereafter be made upon application to, and authorization of, the Secretary of War, and in every case where surveys are made the report thereon shall embrace such information concerning the commercial importance, present and prospective, of the improvement contemplated thereby, and such general commercial statistics as the Secretary of War may be able to procure: Provided, That no survey shall be made of any harbors or rivers until the Chief of Engineers shall have directed a preliminary examination of the same by the local engineer in charge of the district, and then only when such local engineer shall have made such examination and shall have reported to said Chief of Engineers that in his judgment said harbor or river is worthy of improvement, and that the work is a public necessity.

Mr. KASSON. I move to insert after the word "engineers," in line 570, these words: "with the approval of that officer."

Mr. PAGE. I have no objection to that amendment.

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. KASSON. I move to add at the end of the paragraph the words I send up to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In respect to commerce between the States, or with foreign countries.

Mr. KASSON. That is to say the report shall state the work is a public necessity in respect to commerce between the States or with foreign countries. My object is to make a distinction between a work of benefit to a locality not larger than a State, and those works which in my judgment come up to the constitutional provision of commerce between the States or with foreign countries.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. KENNA. I move, in line 70, to strike out the words "in his judgment," and in lieu thereof to insert "in the judgment of the engineer in charge."

The amendment was adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

That such parts of the money appropriated by this or any previous act for any particular improvement, whether requiring locks or dams or otherwise, as may be necessary in the prosecution of such improvement, may be expended in the purchase, voluntary or by condemnation, as the case may be, of necessary sites: Provided, That such expenditure shall be under the direction of the Secretary of War: And provided further, That if the owners of such lands shall refuse to sell them at reasonable prices, then the prices to be paid shall be determined and the title and jurisdiction procured in the manner prescribed by the laws of the State in which such lands or sites are situated.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I move to insert the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Kentucky River, Kentucky: Continuing improvement, $49,999.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I desire to say, Mr. Chairman, that last night this was stricken out——

Mr. ANDERSON. What is the motion?

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky will be again reported.

Mr. PAGE. Let me state, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman from Kentucky proposes to insert the clause which was stricken out of the bill last night, on page 16 of the bill, the following words:

Improving Kentucky River, Kentucky: Continuing improvement, $50,000.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. Fifty-one thousand dollars is the amount that it should be.

Mr. PAGE. I have no objection to the modification. On yesterday this was stricken out on motion of Mr. WHITE, the colleague of the gentleman from Kentucky. He desires now that it may be reinserted in the bill in its proper place. If it be adopted by the committee and ordered to be reinserted I hope there will be no objection, and I ask unanimous consent that it be inserted in its proper place.

Mr. WHITE. I object.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. There can be no objection to this, I think, anywhere.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will submit the question.

The question was taken.

Mr. WHITE. I demand a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 152, noes 15.

So the amendment as modified was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the clause will be inserted in its proper place in the bill.

There was no objection.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. Chairman, I wish to ask if the word "otherwise," in line 574, should not be "other works?" I think this is a misprint, and I ask that the correction be made.

Mr. PAGE. That is right; the correction should be made there.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PAGE. The improvement of the Kentucky River, which has just been reinserted in the bill, I understand by unanimous consent is to be put in its original place in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. That has already been done.

Mr. WHITE. I desire to say that I have objected to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks it is too late for the gentleman to object now; unanimous consent was asked and has been given.

Mr. WHITE. I rose when the Chair put the question, and did not understand there was any request for unanimous consent. I demanded a division on the adoption of the resolution, but nothing was said about putting it in its original place in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair begs to state to the gentleman from Kentucky that when unanimous consent was asked for no objection was made.

Mr. WHITE. I rose to object.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman from Kentucky will allow the Chair to state that when unanimous consent was asked for and given the eye of the Chair rested in that part of the Hall where the gentleman from Kentucky is now standing, and the eye of the Chair failed to notice the gentleman from Kentucky on his feet. [Laughter.]

Mr. WHITE. I desire to say in response to what the Chair has said that when the Chair put the question on the adoption of the resolution I objected. I did not object till the Chair put the question; but I supposed, of course, that the objection which I made was entertained by the Chair, since I made it when the gentleman from California, the chairman of the committee, first made the request. The moment it was asked for I objected. I objected to inserting in this bill $51,000 for the Kentucky River.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Kentucky say to the Chair that the moment the Chair announced that by unanimous consent this would be inserted in its proper place in the bill he rose in his place and addressed the Chair and made objection?

Mr. WHITE. I rose in my place. I do not remember if I addressed the Chair; but I rose in my place and said I objected. I took it for granted, however, that the objection had been entertained as it was made before.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman insists upon a literal construction of the rule. Now, the Chair will be compelled to apply a literal construction of the law to the gentleman from Kentucky. The Chair made the request for unanimous consent and the gentleman from Kentucky did not rise in his place to object. Therefore the Chair now holds that it is too late.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to offer an amendment to come in at the end of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That no sum of money appropriated by this act for any improvement therein named shall be expended until a board of five engineers of the Engineer Corps of the Army, of which the Chief of Engineers shall be the president, who shall be detailed for that duty by the Secretary of War, with the approval of the President, shall report in writing to the Secretary of War that the work named would be of public utility.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 38, noes 115.

Mr. LE FEVRE. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. A quorum has voted.

Mr. LE FEVRE. Then I demand tellers on that vote.

Tellers were refused, 14 members only voting in favor thereof.

Mr. RICHARDSON, of South Carolina. I desire to offer an amendment to which I think there will be no objection. I am informed by members of the Committee on Commerce that they do not object to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will submit his amendment.

Mr. RICHARDSON, of South Carolina. I move in lines 70 and 71 of the bill to insert "fifty" after the word "hundred;" so that it will read:

Improving harbor at Charleston, including Sullivan's Island, South Carolina: Continuing improvement, $150,000.

Mr. PAGE. You can not go back to that part of the bill.

Mr. BRAGG. I make the point of order upon the amendment

Mr. ANDERSON. That is subject to the point of order.

Mr. BRIGGS. I make the point of order that the amendment can not now be entertained.

Mr. BRAGG. We have passed that item in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hold that the point of order is well taken, that part of the bill having been passed.

Mr. PAGE. I move that the committee rise and report the bill to the House with the recommendation that it pass as amended.

Mr. BRIGGS. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BRIGGS. This bill has not been read in full.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk read the last line of the bill.

Mr. BRIGGS. The Clerk has not concluded the reading of the bill. I have been observing it carefully and it was not read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

That all moneys hereby appropriated shall be immediately available.

The CHAIRMAN. Are those the lines to which the gentleman refers?

Mr. BRIGGS. They are.

The CHAIRMAN. They have been read now.

Mr. KASSON. I offer a further amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 585 add:

"Provided, That not more than $5,000,000 of the aggregate sum by this act appropriated shall be expended before the end of the fiscal year beginning the 1st day of July next; nor in apportioning the same shall any larger sum be expended for any objects designated in this act than the sum herein assigned therefor."

Mr. KASSON. I suppose of course there will be objection to this amendment. But, as in the other case, I desire to place upon record my judgment of the limit that ought to be put upon the bill passed at this session. I shall ask for a division upon it.

The question being taken on the amendment, there were—ayes 59, noes 93.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. PAGE. I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House with the amendments.

Mr. ANDERSON. I call for a division; and I hope the Chair will count accurately.

The committee divided, and there were—ayes 151, noes 12.

Mr. ANDERSON. I call for tellers.

Tellers were not ordered—only 11 members voting therefor.

So the motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CANNON reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 7631) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same to the House with sundry amendments.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California [Mr. PAGE] is recognized.

Mr. WHITE. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from California.

Mr. PAGE. I move the previous question on the bill and amendments.

Mr. WHITE. Pending that I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question being taken on Mr. WHITE'S motion, there were—ayes 6, noes 110.

Mr. WHITE. I call for tellers.

Tellers were not ordered, only 3 members voting therefor.

So the motion to adjourn was not agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the demand for the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. PAGE moved to reconsider the vote by which the previous question was ordered; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question will first be on the amendments recommended by the committee.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that they be reported.

Mr. PAGE. I ask that the question be taken on all the amendments as one question.

Mr. WHITE. I object.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Indiana require the reading of the amendments?

Mr. HOLMAN. They are but few in number. I think there ought to be some consideration of them in the House.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the amendments.

The Clerk commenced the reading of the amendments reported from the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. PAGE. I understand the gentleman from Indiana withdraws his call for the reading of the amendments.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have noted the amendments in my own copy of the bill. Unless some other gentleman desires to hear them read, I withdraw the call for the reading.

The SPEAKER. The demand for the reading of the amendments being withdrawn, the question is on agreeing to the amendments reported from the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The question being taken, the amendments were agreed to.

Mr. PAGE moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendments were agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is now on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended. [Mr. ANDERSON rose.] For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. ANDERSON. I rise to move to recommit the bill to the Committee on Commerce, with instructions to report a substitute.

The SPEAKER. That motion is not now in order.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. PAGE. I move the previous question on the passage of the bill.

I desire to say, while I would be entitled to an hour, I do not desire to take any time. I had promised a portion of my time to the gentleman from New York [Mr. DWIGHT] and the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON]. I do not propose myself to occupy any time, and these gentlemen have kindly notified me that they would not claim the floor if I can obtain for all gentlemen who desire it permission to print in the RECORD their remarks on the river and harbor bill.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered. [See Appendix.]

Mr. HOUSE. Let us now have a vote.

Mr. ANDERSON. I move to recommit the bill to the Committee on Commerce, with instructions to report as a substitute for the bill what I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the sum of $3,000,000 be hereby appropriated, out of moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War in the preservation of the public works constructed by the United States in its rivers and harbors.

The question bring taken on a viva voce vote, the Speaker stated that the "noes" evidently had it.

Mr. ANDERSON. I call for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 12, noes 144.

So the motion to recommit with instructions was not agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California [Mr. PAGE] demands the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. PAGE moved to reconsider the vote by which the previous question was ordered; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. KASSON. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. KASSON. I wish to know whether the omission in the title of the bill of the fiscal year was intentional.

The SPEAKER. The title is no part of the bill. If necessary, the title can be changed after the bill is passed.

Mr. PAGE. The bill does not refer to the next fiscal year. The money appropriated is immediately available.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill, and in accordance with the rule will be taken by yeas and nays.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 111, nays 90, not voting 90; as follows:

So the bill was passed.

The following pairs were announced:

Mr. THOMPSON, of Iowa, with Mr. DUGRO.

Mr. REED with Mr. HAMMOND of Georgia.

Mr. PACHECO with Mr. PHISTER.

Mr. BLAND with Mr. NEAL.

Mr. MILES with Mr. SINGLETON of Illinois.

Mr. DE MOTTE with Mr. MATSON.

Mr. RUSSELL with Mr. WILLIAMS of Alabama.

Mr. SMITH, of Illinois, with Mr. MOULTON.

Mr. CHACE with Mr. TUCKER.

Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania, with Mr. BARBOUR.

Mr. RAY with Mr. TURNER of Georgia.

Mr. HAMMOND, of New York, with Mr. REAGAN.

Mr. DEERING with Mr. CULBERSON.

Mr. SPAULDING with Mr. ERMENTROUT.

Mr. MACKEY with Mr. RICE of Missouri.

Mr. BRUMM with Mr. MCKENZIE.

Mr. LINDSEY with Mr. DAVIDSON.

Mr. LATHAM with Mr. COBB.

Mr. MILLER with Mr. CABELL.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF with Mr. E. B. TAYLOR. Mr. TAYLOR would have voted "aye" and Mr. UPDEGRAFF "no."

Mr. DWIGHT. I desire to state that Mr. CONVERSE, of Ohio, is absent on account of illness. If here, he would vote "no."

Mr. VALENTINE. I was paired during the afternoon with Mr. ARMFIELD, of North Carolina; the pair was not to extend further than this afternoon. I understand, however, that he has gone home unwell; and therefore, to protect him, I will withdraw my vote.

Mr. HOLMAN. My colleague, Mr. MATSON, is detained from the House on account of sickness. If here, he would vote "no."

Mr. MCCOOK. My colleague, Mr. SKINNER, is absent by leave of the House on account of sickness in his family. If present, he would vote against this bill.

Mr. HENDERSON. I desire to say that if I was not paired with Mr. REAGAN, of Texas, I should vote "no."

Mr. REESE. I desire to state that my colleague, Mr. TURNER, of Georgia, is absent on account of indisposition.

Mr. HENDERSON. I notice that it is announced that Mr. HAMMOND, of New York, is paired with Mr. REAGAN. If so, I would like to vote.

The SPEAKER. It is too late now.

Mr. HENDERSON. If I am not paired with Mr. REAGAN, of Texas, I think I should be allowed to vote. My colleague, Mr. TOWNSHEND, paired me with Mr. REAGAN yesterday, and if the pair has been changed it was without my knowledge and consent.

Mr. SPRINGER. I think my colleague is entitled to vote, under the circumstances.

The SPEAKER. It is too late under the rules.

Mr. WALKER. My colleague, Mr. BRUMM, desires me to say that if he were present he would vote "no."

The SPEAKER. The Chair has been requested to state that Mr. JOYCE, of Vermont, is absent this evening on account of sickness in his family.

Mr. STEELE. My colleague, Mr. BROWNE, is absent on account of indisposition. If here, he would vote "no."

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. My colleague, Mr. RUSSELL, has been called home in consequence of sickness in his family. He is paired with Mr. WILLIAMS, of Alabama. If they were present, Mr. RUSSELL would vote "no," and I understand that Mr. WILLIAMS would vote "ay."

Mr. TALBOTT. I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the names be dispensed with.

Mr. WHITE. I object.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the names.

The Clerk began the reading of the names.

Mr. WHITE said: I notice that the name of Mr. JOSEPH H. BURROWS is announced in the affirmative. I do not think he has been here this evening.

The SPEAKER. The reading of the names can not be interrupted.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the names, but before concluding,

Mr. WHITE said: I withdraw the demand for the reading of the names.

The result of the vote was then announced as above stated.

Mr. PAGE. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The SPEAKER. If there is no objection it will be so ordered.

Mr. WHITE. I call for a division on that vote.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is too late.

Mr. WHITE. I called for it in time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WHITE] states that he rose in time and called for a division on the motion to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman from Michigan, Mr. BURROWS, rose immediately on the announcement by the Speaker of the vote.

The SPEAKER. The question will be taken by a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 66, noes 24.

Mr. ANDERSON. No quorum has voted.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. PAGE and Mr. ANDERSON were appointed.

Mr. WHITE. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. This is the regular order. The tellers will take their places.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 80, noes 27.

Mr. ANDERSON. I waive the question of a quorum.

So (no further count being called for) the motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. MCLEAN, of Missouri, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD remarks on one of the provisions of the deficiency appropriation bill. [See Appendix.]

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. In justice to my colleague [Mr. HENDERSON] I wish to state that I paired him to-day with the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN], who was absent on account of illness. I understand now the gentleman from Texas is paired with some one else, but he was first paired with my colleague.

BRIDGE ACROSS MISSOURI RIVER.

Mr. VAN HORN. I move to suspend the rules and pass a bill to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at some accessible point within ten miles below and five miles above the city of Kansas City, Missouri.

Mr. CASWELL. I desire to submit a privileged report.

The SPEAKER. Pending another proposition that can not be done. The bill which the gentleman from Missouri moves to pass under a suspension of the rules will be read.

Mr. HISCOCK. I ask the attention of the House for a moment. I believe that a privileged report should have preference over this business.

The SPEAKER. It has not preference of a pending proposition; it would have preference over a proposition not pending.

Mr. HISCOCK. I appeal to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. VAN HORN] to withdraw this bill and let the conferees on the part of the House on the Post-Office appropriation bill make a report. There are three or four of these bridge bills. I am in favor of all of them; and will come here to-morrow morning to help pass them.

Mr. ANDERSON. I think this bill of the gentleman from Missouri had better not be pressed now. The gentleman will save time by withdrawing it for the present.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Chillicothe and Kansas City Railway Company, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Missouri, be, and is hereby, authorized to construct and maintain a bridge and approaches thereto over the Missouri River, at some accessible point consistent with the interests of the river navigation within five miles above and ten miles below the present railroad bridge across said river, at the city of Kansas City, in the county of Jackson and State of Missouri. Said bridge shall be constructed to provide for the passage of railway trains, and, at the option of the corporation by which it may be built, may be used for the passage of wagons and vehicles of all kinds, for the transit of animals, and for foot-passengers, for such reasonable rates of toll as may be approved from time to time by the Secretary of War.

SEC. 2. That any bridge built under this act and subject to its limitations shall be a lawful structure, and shall be recognized and known as a post-route, upon which also no higher charge shall be made for the transmission over the same of the mails, the troops, and the munitions of war of the United States, or for passengers and freight passing over said bridge than the rate per mile paid for the transportation over the railroad or public highways leading to the said bridge; and it shall enjoy the rights and privileges of other post-roads in the United States.

SEC. 3. That if said bridge shall be made with unbroken and continuous spans, the spans thereof shall not be less than three hundred feet in length in the clear, and the main span shall be over the main channel of the river. The lowest part of the superstructure of said bridge shall be at least fifty feet above extreme high-water mark, as understood at the point of location, and at least eighty feet above low-water, and the bridge shall be at right angles to, and its piers parallel with, the current of the river: Provided, That if the same shall be constructed as a draw-bridge, it shall have two or more pivot or draw span openings over the main channel of the river, giving two hundred feet clear channel-way in each opening, and the piers of said bridge shall be parallel with, and the bridge itself at right angles to, the current of the river. Also that all fixed spans located between the shore lines, at the medium stage of water, shall be three hundred feet or more in length, and that the clear head-room under such spans shall not be less than ten feet at highest water: Provided also, That said draw shall be opened promptly by said company, upon reasonable signal, for the passage of boats; and said company or corporation shall maintain, at its own expense, from sunset till sunrise, such lights or other signals on said bridge as the Light-House Board shall prescribe. No bridge shall be erected or maintained under the authority of this act which shall at any time substantially or materially obstruct the free navigation of said river, and if any bridge erected under such authority shall, in the opinion of the Secretary of War, obstruct such navigation, he is hereby authorized to cause such change or alteration of said bridge to be made as will effectually obviate such obstruction; and all such alterations shall be made and all such obstructions be removed at the expense of the owner or owners of said bridge. And in case of any litigation arising from any obstruction or alleged obstruction to the free navigation of said river, caused or alleged to be caused by said bridge, the case may be brought in the district court of the United States of the State of Missouri in which any portion of said obstruction or bridge may be located: Provided further, That nothing in this act shall be so construed as to repeal or modify any of the provisions of law now existing in reference to the protection of the navigation of rivers, or to exempt this bridge from the operation of the same.

SEC. 4. That all railroad companies desiring the use of said bridge shall have and be entitled to equal rights and privileges relative to the passage of railway trains or cars over the same, and over the approaches thereto, upon payment of a reasonable compensation for such use; and in case the owner or owners of said bridge and the several railroad companies, or any one of them, desiring such use shall fail to agree upon the sum or sums to be paid, and upon rules and conditions to which each shall conform in using said bridge, all matters at issue between them shall be decided by the Secretary of War, upon a hearing of the allegations and proofs of the parties: Provided, That the provisions of section 2 in regard to charges for passengers and freight across said bridge shall not govern the Secretary of War in determining any question arising as to the sum to be paid to the owners of said bridge by said companies for the use of said bridge.

SEC. 5. That any bridge authorized to be constructed under this act shall be built and located under and subject to such regulations for the security of navigation of said river as the Secretary of War shall prescribe; and to secure that object the said company or corporation shall submit to the Secretary of War, for his examination and approval, a design and drawings of the bridge, and a map of the location, giving for the space of one mile above and one mile below the proposed location, the topography of the banks of the river, the shore-lines at high and low water, the direction and strength of the currents at all stages, and the soundings, accurately showing the bed of the stream, the location of any other bridge or bridges, and shall furnish such other information as may be required for a full and satisfactory understanding of the subject; and until the said plan and location of the bridge are approved by the Secretary of War the bridge shall not be built; and should any change be made in the plan of said bridge during the progress of construction such change shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of War.

SEC. 6. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved. And the right to require any changes in said structure or its entire removal, at the expense of the owners thereof, whenever Congress shall decide that the public interest requires it, is also expressly reserved.

Mr. WASHBURN. I wish to say that the Committee on Commerce considered this bill, or a bill precisely like it, and reported it unanimously.

The motion of Mr. VAN HORN to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 7682) was agreed to (two-thirds voting in favor thereof).

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] stated that there was a privileged report to be presented.

Mr. HISCOCK. We have concluded to defer it until to-morrow morning.

Mr. RANDALL. What is the report?

Mr. HISCOCK. The conferees of the two Houses have been unable to agree, the points of difference being the two items on which a disagreement was reported the other day. The Senate conferees refused to recede from either of those items.

A MEMBER. What are they?

Mr. HISCOCK. One is in reference to the compensation of subsidized roads; the other in relation to special mail facilities.

Mr. RANDALL. I think we had better have a fuller House when we vote on that question.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move that the House adjourn. There is no quorum present.

Mr. RANDALL. I hope we shall not adjourn. I desire to have passed a bill to remove the political disabilities of a confederate soldier.

The motion of Mr. HOLMAN was not agreed to.

BRIDGE ACROSS THAMES RIVER, CONNECTICUT.

Mr. BUCK. I move to suspend the rules so as to take from the House Calendar House bill No. 7115 and pass the same, with the amendments reported from the Committee on Commerce.

The bill as amended was read, as follows:

A bill to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Thames River, near New London, in the State of Connecticut, and declare it a post-route.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the bridge across the Thames River, not below Winthrop's Point, and also across any inlet thereof, in the State of Connecticut, to be constructed under and by virtue of joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Connecticut entitled "A resolution authorizing the New York, Providence and Boston Railroad Company to bridge the Thames River, and to extend its lines," passed at its January session, 1882, is hereby declared to be, when completed in accordance with the aforesaid joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Connecticut, a lawful structure and a post-route for the conveyance of the mails of the United States: Provided, That no higher charge shall be made for the transmission over the same of the mails, the troops, and the munitions of war of the United States, or for passengers and freight passing over said bridge, than the rate per mile paid for the transportation over the railroads leading to the said bridge; and it shall enjoy the rights and privileges of other post-roads in the United States: And provided further, That the said bridge shall be built with a pivot-draw, not less than five hundred feet in length, and so as to not practically interfere with the navigation of said river for commercial or naval purposes, or the usefulness and efficiency of the navy-yard upon the same. In order to secure a compliance with these conditions, the said New York, Providence and Boston Railroad Company, previous to commencing the construction of said bridge, shall submit to the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy of the United States a plan of said bridge, and of the location thereof, with a detailed map of the river at the proposed site of said bridge, and for the distance of a mile above and below such site, exhibiting such information touching said bridge and river as may be deemed requisite by said Secretary of War and said Secretary of the Navy to determine whether the said bridge, when built, will conform to the prescribed conditions of this act, to not practically interfere with the navigation of said river for commercial and naval purposes, or the usefulness and efficiency of the navy-yard upon the same.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy are hereby authorized and directed, upon receiving said plan and map and other information, and on the application of said railroad company, to designate a board of competent Army and Navy officers to examine such plan and location, and if, in the opinion of said board, such plan and location, or any modification thereof, will not practically interfere with the navigation of said river for commercial and naval purposes, or the usefulness and efficiency of the navy-yard upon the same, said board is hereby authorized to approve the same. The approval of said board shall be filed with the Secretary of War, and upon the filing thereof it shall be the duty of the Secretary of War, in writing, to notify said railroad company thereof; and, upon receiving such notification, the said company may proceed to the erection of said bridge, conforming strictly to such approved plan and location. Until the said board, so appointed as aforesaid, shall approve the plan and location of said bridge, and the Secretary of War shall, in writing, notify said railroad company of the same, said bridge shall not be built or commenced. And the said bridge shall be at all times so kept and managed as to offer reasonable and proper means for the passage of vessels through said structure; and to secure the safe passage of vessels at night there shall be displayed on said bridge, from the hour of sunset to that of sunrise, such lights as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War.

SEC. 3. That all railroad companies desiring the use of said bridge shall have and be entitled to equal rights and privileges relative to the passage of railway trains or cars over the same and over the approaches thereto upon payment of a reasonable compensation for such use; and in case the owner or owners of said bridge and the several railroad companies, or any one of them, desiring such use, shall fail to agree upon the sum or sums to be paid and upon rules and conditions to which each shall conform in using said bridge, all matters at issue between them shall be decided by the Secretary of War upon a hearing of the allegations and proofs of the parties: Provided, That the provisions of section 1 in regard to charges for passengers and freight across said bridge shall not govern the Secretary of War in determining any question arising as to the sum or sums to be paid to the owners of said bridge by said companies for the use of said bridge.

SEC. 4. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved. And the right to require any changes in said structure, or its entire removal, at the expense of the owners thereof, whenever Congress shall decide that the public interest requires it, is also expressly reserved.

The motion to suspend the rules was agreed to (two-thirds voting in favor thereof), and the bill was passed.

BRIDGE ACROSS ILLINOIS RIVER.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move to suspend the rules so as to take from the House Calendar and pass the bill (H. R. 7148) to establish a railway bridge across the Illinois River, extending from a point within five miles of Columbiana, in Greene County, to a point within five miles of Farrowtown, in Calhoun County, in the State of Illinois.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Litchfield, Carrollton and Western Railroad Company, its successors and assigns, are hereby authorized and empowered to erect, establish, and maintain a railway bridge across the Illinois River, extending from a point, to be by them selected, within five miles of Columbiana, in Greene County, to a point, to be selected by them, within five miles of Farrowtown, in Calhoun County, in the State of Illinois; and that said bridge shall not interfere with the free navigation of said river beyond what is necessary in order to carry into effect the rights and privileges hereby granted; and in case of any litigation arising from any obstruction or alleged obstruction to the free navigation of said river, the cause may be tried before the district court of the United States for the southern district of the State of Illinois.

SEC. 2. That any bridge built under the provisions of this act may, at the option of the company building the same, be built as a draw-bridge, with a pivot or other form of draw, or with unbroken or continuous spans: Provided, That if the said bridge shall be built with unbroken or continuous spans, it shall not be of less elevation in any case than fifty feet above extreme high-water mark, as understood at the point of location, to the bottom chord of the bridge, nor shall the spans of said bridge be less than two hundred and fifty feet in length; and the piers of said bridge shall be parallel with the current of said river, and the main span shall be over the main channel of the river, and not less than three hundred feet in length: And provided also, That if any bridge built under this act shall be constructed as a draw-bridge, the same shall be constructed as a pivot draw-bridge, with a draw over the main channel of the river at an accessible and navigable point, and with spans of not less than one hundred and sixty feet in length in the clear on each side of the central or pivot pier of the draw; and the next adjoining spans to the draw shall not be less than two hundred and fifty feet, and said spans shall not be less than thirty feet above low-water mark and not less than ten feet above extreme high-water mark, measuring to the bottom chord of the bridge; and the piers of said bridge shall be parallel with the current of the river where said bridge may be erected: And provided also, That said draw shall be opened promptly, upon reasonable signal, for the passage of boats.

SEC. 3. That any bridge constructed under this act and according to its limitations shall be a lawful structure, and shall be known and recognized as a post-route, and the same is hereby declared to be a post-route, upon which also no higher charge shall be made for the transmission over the same of the mails, the troops, and the munitions of war of the United States, or for passengers or freight passing over said bridge, than the rate per mile paid for their transportation over the railroads and public highways leading to the said bridge; and the United States shall have the right of way for a postal telegraph across said bridge.

SEC. 4. That all railway companies desiring to use said bridge shall have and be entitled to equal rights and privileges in the passage of the same, and in the use of the machinery and fixtures thereof, and of all the approaches thereto, under and upon such terms and conditions as shall be prescribed by the Secretary of War, upon hearing the allegations and proofs of the parties, in case they shall not agree.

SEC. 5. That the structure herein authorized shall be built and located under and subject to such regulations for the security of navigation of said river as the Secretary of War shall prescribe; and to secure that object the said company or corporation shall submit to the Secretary of War, for his examination and approval, a design and drawings of said bridge, and a map of the location, giving, for the space of one mile above and one mile below the proposed location, the topography of the banks of the river, the shore-lines at high and low water, the direction and strength of the current at all stages, and the surroundings, accurately showing the bed of the stream, the location of any other bridge or bridges, and shall furnish such other information as may be required for a full and satisfactory understanding of the subject; and until the said plan and location of the bridge are approved by the Secretary of War the bridge shall not be built; and should any change be made in the plan of said bridge during the process of construction, such change shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of War. And the said structure shall be at all times so managed and kept as to offer reasonable and proper means for the passage of vessels through or under said structure; and to secure the safe passage of vessels at night there shall be displayed on said bridge, from the hour of sunset to that of sunrise, such lights as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War; and the said structure shall be changed, at the cost and expense of the owners thereof, from time to time, as Congress may direct, so as to preserve the free and convenient navigation of said river; and the authority to erect and continue said bridge shall be subject to revocation and modification by law, whenever the public good shall in the judgment of Congress so require, without any expense or charge to the United States.

SEC. 6. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

SEC. 7. That this act shall take effect and be in force from and after its passage.

The motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill was agreed to (two-thirds voting in favor thereof).

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I move that the House adjourn; and I insist on my motion.

Mr. RANDALL. I hope the gentleman will not press that motion; I desire to have passed a bill for the removal of political disabilities.

Mr. WHITE. I appeal to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] to let the case of this repentant rebel come in.

The motion of Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan, was not agreed to.

SAMUEL H. LOCKETT.

Mr. RANDALL. I move to suspend the rules so as to pass the bill (H. R. 2816) to remove the legal and political disabilities of Samuel H. Lockett, of Alabama.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That all legal and political disabilities imposed by the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States be, and the same are hereby, removed from Samuel H. Lockett, of Alabama.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. We ought to be assured that this bill has been reported from a committee. I have no doubt that it has been.

Mr. MANNING. I made the report from the Judiciary Committee, and it was unanimous.

The motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill was agreed to (two-thirds voting in favor thereof).

SALARIES OF POSTMASTERS.

Mr. BINGHAM. I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 7611) to adjust the salaries of postmasters.

Mr. SIMONTON. I demand a second.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move the House do now adjourn. I shall insist on a quorum for the rest of the evening.

Mr. RYAN. We might as well adjourn.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am opposed to the bill and shall resist it.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. This can not pass unless a quorum is present. I do not object to its standing over until to-morrow.

Mr. HISCOCK. It had better go over until to-morrow as unfinished business.

Mr. HAZELTON. I object to that.

The question recurred on Mr. HOLMAN'S motion to adjourn.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 32, noes 34.

So the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. HOLMAN. I demand a second of the motion to suspend the rules.

The Clerk proceeded with the reading of the bill.

Mr. HISCOCK. I ask by unanimous consent that this shall go over until to-morrow.

Mr. HOLMAN. With the demand pending for a second?

Mr. HISCOCK. Certainly. Let us have unanimous consent to that. I hope no one will object.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will object hereafter to any business being done without a quorum.

Mr. HISCOCK. That is acceptable to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. BINGHAM. All I desire is to have a standing in the House for the bill.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. It now goes over as unfinished business.

Mr. FLOWER. It was not so with me, for I was on the floor the other day and on the Calendar.

Mr. BINGHAM. This bill must be considered in some shape.

The SPEAKER. Is it desired to have the bill printed in the RECORD?

Mr. BINGHAM. It is.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection, and the bill will be printed in the RECORD and go over as unfinished business.

Mr. HOLMAN. With a demand for a second pending.

The SPEAKER. That can be made at the time the bill is read.

Mr. HOLMAN. I made it before at the proper time but lost my opportunity.

The SPEAKER. You made it after the reading.

Mr. HOLMAN. I made it as soon as the Speaker stated it.

The SPEAKER. But not before the question was put. The Chair understands the right to demand a second is reserved.

Mr. HISCOCK. I hope we will adjourn with that understanding.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection.

The bill as reported from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the respective compensation of postmasters of the first, second, and third classes shall be annual salaries, assigned in even hundreds of dollars and payable in quarterly payments, to be ascertained and fixed by the Postmaster-General from their respective quarterly returns to the Auditor of the Treasury for the Post-Office Department or copies or duplicates thereof to be forwarded to the First Assistant Postmaster-General for four quarters immediately preceding the adjustment, at the following rates, namely:

First class:

Gross receipts, $40,000, and not exceeding $45,000, salary, $3,000.
Gross receipts, $45,000, and not exceeding $60,000, salary, $3,100.

Second class:

Gross receipts, $8,000, and not exceeding $9,000, salary, $2,000.
Gross receipts, $9,000, and not exceeding $10,000, salary, $2,100.
Gross receipts, $10,000, and not exceeding $11,000, salary, $2,200.
Gross receipts, $11,000, and not exceeding $13,000, salary, $2,300.
Gross receipts, $13,000, and not exceeding $16,000, salary, $2,400.
Gross receipts, $16,000, and not exceeding $20,000, salary, $2,500.
Gross receipts, $20,000, and not exceeding $24,000, salary, $2,600.
Gross receipts, $24,000, and not exceeding $30,000, salary, $2,700.
Gross receipts, $30,000, and not exceeding $35,000, salary, $2,800.
Gross receipts, $35,000, and not exceeding $40,000, salary, $2,900.

Third class:

Gross receipts, $1,900, and not exceeding $2,100, salary, $1,000.
Gross receipts, $2,100, and not exceeding $2,400, salary, $1,100.
Gross receipts, $2,400, and not exceeding $2,700, salary, $1,002.
Gross receipts, $2,700, and not exceeding $3,000, salary, $1,300.
Gross receipts, $3,000, and not exceeding $3,500, salary, $1,400.
Gross receipts, $3,500, and not exceeding $4,200, salary, $1,500.
Gross receipts, $4,200, and not exceeding $5,000, salary, $1,600.
Gross receipts, $5,000, and not exceeding $6,000, salary, $1,700.
Gross receipts, $6,000, and not exceeding $7,000, salary, $1,800.
Gross receipts, $7,000, and not exceeding $8,000, salary, $1,900.

And in order to ascertain the amount of the postal receipts of each office, the Postmaster-General may require postmasters to furnish the Department with certified copies of their quarterly returns to the auditor at such times and for such periods as he may deem necessary in each case.

Fourth class:

SEC. 2. That the compensation of postmasters of the fourth class shall be fixed upon the basis of the whole of the box-rents collected at their offices and commissions upon the amount of canceled postage-due stamps (provided for in section 270 of the Revised Laws and Regulations, edition of 1879), and on postage-stamps, official stamps, stamped envelopes, postal cards, and newspaper and periodical stamps canceled on matter actually mailed at their offices, and on amounts received from waste paper, dead newspapers, printed matter, and twine sold, at the following rates, namely: On the first $50 or less per quarter, 100 per cent.; on the next $100 or less per quarter, 60 per cent.; on the next $200 or less per quarter, 50 per cent.; and on all the balance, 40 per cent., the same to be ascertained and allowed by the auditor of the Treasury for the Post-Office Department in the settlement of the accounts of such postmasters upon their sworn quarterly returns: Provided, That when the compensation of any postmaster of this class shall reach $250 for four consecutive quarters each, exclusive of commissions on money-order business, and when the returns to the auditor for four consecutive quarters shall show him to be entitled to a compensation in excess of $250 per quarter, the auditor shall report such fact to the Postmaster-General, who shall assign the office to its proper class and fix the salary of the postmaster as provided by section 1 of this act: Provided further, That in no case shall there be allowed to any postmaster of this class a compensation greater than $250 in any one of the first three-quarters of any fiscal year, exclusive of money-order commissions, and in the last quarter of each fiscal year there shall be allowed such further sum as he may be entitled to under the provisions of this act, not exceeding for the whole fiscal year the sum of $1,000, exclusive of money-order commissions.

SEC. 3. That the Postmaster-General shall make all orders relative to the salaries of postmasters; and any change made in such salaries shall not take effect until the first day of the quarter next following the order; and the auditor shall be notified of any and all changes of salaries.

SEC. 4. That the salaries of postmasters of the first, second, and third classes shall be readjusted by the Postmaster-General, the first adjustment (under this act) to take effect simultaneously with the reduction of the rates of postage, and thereafter at the beginning of each fiscal year; and the salary of the postmaster at Washington city, District of Columbia, shall be $5,000; and in no case shall the salary of any postmaster exceed the sum of $6,000, except in the city of New York, where the salary of the postmaster shall remain as now fixed by law, at $8,000 per annum.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

Mr. WHITE, by unanimous consent, from the Special Committee on Woman Suffrage, reported back the joint resolution (H. Res. 255) proposing an amendment to the Constitution; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. SPRINGER. As a member of that committee I have not seen the report, and do not know whether it meets with my concurrence.

Mr. WHITE. I ask by unanimous consent that the minority may have leave to submit their views to be printed with the majority report.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection.

LOAN OF TENTS, ETC.

Mr. STEELE, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back joint resolution (H. Res. 336) granting the use of tents, &c., at the encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic of the Department of Pennsylvania on the battlefield of Gettysburgh in July, 1883; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. HISCOCK. I understand the Post-Office bill goes over as unfinished business, with the demand for a second pending, and therefore I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 15 minutes a. m., March 2) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By the SPEAKER: Memorial of the Legislature of Arizona Territory, asking for the appointment of a commissioner to investigate matters at the Papago Indian reservation—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. ANDERSON: The petition of P. H. Williams and 80 others, citizens of Hilton, Kansas, for free lumber—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. BELMONT: The petition of Lenette M. Frost, of Queens County, New York, for an extension of patent—to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. CANDLER: The petition of James S. White & Co. and others, praying for the repeal of sections 2907 and 2908 of existing law which requires the addition of inland transportation, costs, and charges to the ad valorem cost of goods—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. DEZENDORF: The resolutions of superintendents of schools in the State of Virginia, adopted at a meeting held in the city of Richmond, February 28, 1883, relative to educational matters—to the Committee on Education and Labor.

By Mr. S. S. FARWELL: The petition of citizens of Scott, and of citizens of Clinton County, Iowa, relative to the duty on lumber—severally to the Committee on Ways and Means.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, March 2, 1883.

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. J. BULLOCK, D. D.

The Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on motion of Mr. PLUMB, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

CREDENTIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented the credentials of Shelby M. Cullom, chosen by the Legislature of Illinois a Senator from that State for the term beginning March 4, 1883; which were read, and ordered to be filed.

Mr. VAN WYCK presented the credentials of Charles F. Manderson, chosen by the Legislature of Nebraska a Senator from that State for the term beginning March 4, 1883; which were read, and ordered to be filed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. SAULSBURY presented resolutions of the Wilmington (Delaware) Typographical Union, remonstrating against proposed legislation adverse to union printers in the Government Printing Office; which were ordered to lie on the table.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PLUMB. I desire to make a report from a conference committee.

Mr. MCMILLAN. Should not the bills that came from the House last night be laid before the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This takes precedence.

Mr. MCMILLAN. Very well.

Mr. PLUMB. I present the report of the conference committee on the District appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Principal Legislative Clerk read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7181) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 25, 27, 32, 34, 35, 37, 38, 47, 55, 69, 70, 71, 72, 76, 81, 82, 98, 101, 113, and 114.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 26, 29, 30, 31, 36, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 49, 50, 51, 52, 53, 57, 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, 65, 66, 67, 68, 73, 74, 75, 77, 79, 83, 84, 85, 86, 87, 88, 89, 90, 91, 93, 94, 95, 97, 100, 102, 103, 104, 105, 106, 107, 108, 109, 111, and 112; and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 15, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed in said amendment insert $1,900; on page 4, in line 9 of the bill strike out "two" and insert "three;" and in line 10 strike out "two clerks" and insert "one clerk;" and in line 11 strike out the word "each;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 28: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 28, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$61,450;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 33: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 33, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all after the word "full," in line 3, down to and including line 6 of said amendment; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 45: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 45, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: In line 1 of said amendment, after the word "building," insert "by the commissioners of the District;" and in line 2, after the word "be," insert "prepared by the inspector of buildings and;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 46: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 46, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment insert "$10,000, $5,000 of which shall be used for building a house on the premises, under the direction of the commissioners of the District of Columbia;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 48: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 48, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be stricken out by said amendment insert the following:

"And hereafter the commissioners of the District of Columbia are required to visit and investigate the management of all the institutions of charity within the District which may be appropriated for, and shall require an itemized report of receipts and expenditures to be made to them to be transmitted with their annual report to Congress."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 54: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 54, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: At the end of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"And in case a contract can not be made at that rate the commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized to substitute other illuminating material for the same or less price and to use so much of the sum hereby appropriated as may be necessary for that purpose."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 56: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 56, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed in said amendment insert "$1,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 58: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 58, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the number proposed by said amendment insert "eighty;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 64: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 64, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment insert "$301,560;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 78: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 78, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment insert "$543,675;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 80: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 80, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment, insert "$1,000;" and on page 17, in line 15 of the bill, before the word "dollars," insert "and fifty;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 92: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 92, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 2 of said amendment strike out the word "two" and insert the word "three;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 95: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 95, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the word "four" and insert the word "five;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 99: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 99, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$56,000," and add the following as a new paragraph:

"For new heating apparatus for the John F. Cook School Building, $2,500; for the Randall School Building, $2,400; for the Miner School Building, $3,900; for the Abbott School Building, $3,200; in all, $12,000."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 110: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 110, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be stricken out, insert the following:

"And the time allowed for filing claims in the Court of Claims under an act entitled 'An act to provide for the settlement of all outstanding claims against the District of Columbia and conferring jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear the same and for other purposes,' approved June 16, 1880, be, and the same is hereby, extended thirty days from and after the approval of this act; and all claims not so presented shall be forever barred."

And the Senate agree to the same.

P. B. PLUMB,
F. M. COCKRELL,
H. L. DAWES,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

J. H. KETCHAM,
FRANK HISCOCK,
WM. H. FORNEY,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. PLUMB. I move the adoption of the report.

The report was concurred in.

IMPROVEMENT OF THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I ask the Senate to excuse me from service upon the committee appointed yesterday to examine the Mississippi River improvement, under resolution passed by the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senate excuse the Senator from Minnesota? The Chair hears no objection; and the Chair appoints in his place the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SAWYER.]

HOUSE BILLS.

Mr. MCMILLAN. May I ask that the bill for the improvement of rivers and harbors be taken up and referred?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bills received from the House last night were sent to the Printer, and have not yet been returned. They are expected back every moment.

Mr. McMILLAN. When they arrive I shall ask that they be laid before the Senate.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. BLAIR. I ask leave, from the Committee on Education and Labor, to report back the bill (S. 1251) to provide for the preparation of a centennial record of the Government of the United States, without recommendation as to action, and I ask for the printing of the documents accompanying the same.

The documents were ordered to be printed.

Mr. BLAIR. There is on the table a resolution for the printing of the annual report of the Commissioner of Education, which passed the Senate at the last session with an amendment decreasing the number 7,000 copies, 20,000 being the number of copies the original resolution called for. The vote was very close, and after the resolution was passed as amended by the Senate the chairman of the Committee on Printing said to me that if the resolution were recalled he would make no further opposition to its passing as originally prepared; that is, 20,000 instead of 13,000 copies, whereupon the Senate voted to recall the resolution. I had entered my motion to reconsider the vote, and now I should like to call it up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not yet in order.

Mr. BLAIR. It will take but a moment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Morning business is still in order.

Mr. BLAIR. It is necessary to act this morning, it is so late in the session; but I will wait until the morning business is concluded.

Mr. McMILLAN, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2459) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend the statutes in relation to immediate transportation of dutiable goods, and for other purposes," approved June 10, 1880, reported it without amendment.

Mr. HARRISON submitted the report of the Congressional Board of Visitors to the West Point Military Academy for 1882; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3842) to pay Charles W. Button the costs of advertising property levied on by the collector of United States internal revenue in the fifth district of the State of Virginia, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon, which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. HAWLEY, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1843) dedicating the military reservation at Plattsburgh, New York, to the village of Plattsburgh for a public park, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon, which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. VAN WYCK. The Committee on Public Lands instruct me to make a couple of reports, for which I would like consideration at the present time. They have been waiting for a long time to get these two measures before the Senate. The facts are agreed upon. I report first the bill (H. R. 832) for the relief of Marzel Altmann, without amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands this is a bill which has been reported and is on the Calendar. It is not in order to report it now. It is on the Calendar already.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I should like to have it considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Reports of committees are now in order.

Mr. VAN WYCK, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2073) for the relief of Wesley Montgomery, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2401) for the relief of William H. Simmons, reported it without amendment.

Mr. BLAIR. I rise to the consideration of a report from the Committee on Printing, which has been partially considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is not in order now.

Mr. JONAS, from the Select Committee to Investigate and Report the Best Means of Preventing the Introduction and Spread of Epidemic Diseases, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2318) to establish a floating ward in the port of New Orleans, reported it with amendments.

Mr. FRYE. I am instructed by the Committee on Claims to report back the bill (H. R. 3850) for the relief of Joseph Wescott & Son, favorably without amendment; and as it is a very simple affair I should like to have it considered now.

Mr. MORGAN. I object to its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill goes to the Calendar.

HEIRS OF LOYAL COWLES.

Mr. JONES, of Nevada, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the following resolution submitted by Mr. BARROW on the 5th of February, reported it without amendment.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the resolution:

Resolved, That the Acting Secretary of the Senate be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to pay out of the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate, to the legal heirs of Loyal Cowles, deceased, late assistant in the stationery-room of the Senate, the sum of $500, being an amount equal to six months' salary as assistant aforesaid; the above sum to be considered as including the funeral expenses and all other allowances.

The resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REPORT OF DIRECTOR OF THE MINT.

Mr. ANTHONY. I am instructed by the Committee on Printing, to which was referred a concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives to print additional copies of the report of the Director of the Mint, to report it without amendment and recommend its passage. I ask for its present consideration.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent and concurred in, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring therein), That 9,000 copies of the report of the Director of the Mint on the annual production of gold and silver in the United States be printed; 4,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, 2,000 copies for the use of the Senate, and 3,000 copies for the use of the Director of the Mint.

Mr. ANTHONY. I would say, and I wish my voice could reach the heads of Departments and Bureaus, that the Committee on Printing is exceedingly reluctant to report resolutions for printing documents coming from the Executive Departments. They should be provided for in their appropriation for printing.

CENSUS REPORT MAPS.

Mr. ANTHONY. The Committee on Printing, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 143) authorizing the Committee on Printing to instruct the Public Printer relative to the maps, &c., for the census reports, have instructed me to report it back with an amendment. I ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution. It proposes to authorize the Committee on Printing to instruct the Public Printer to accept private proposals for printing the required number of copies of maps and other illustrations for the census reports from plates or stones which were engraved under special appropriations for printing and engraving for the Tenth Census prior to the act of August 7, 1882, whenever it shall clearly appear that expense can be saved thereby.

The amendment reported by the Committee on Printing was to strike out, in lines 3 and 4, the words:

That the Committee on Printing be, and they are hereby, authorized to instruct the.

And in line 4, after "Public Printer," to insert:

Is authorized under the direction of the Joint Committee on Public Printing or of the Senate Committee on Printing in case there be no committee on the part of the House.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ANTHONY. There is a resolution to dispense with advertising for the maps and plates of the census that have already been engraved. They have already been engraved for the bulletins, and the stones are now in the possession of the engraver and the work can be done much cheaper by him than they can be by an outsider, who would have to make the engraving over again.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SMITHSONIAN REPORT.

Mr. ANTHONY. The Committee on Printing, to which was referred a concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives for printing extra copies of the report of the Smithsonian Institution, have instructed me to report it without amendment and recommend its passage. I ask for its present consideration.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent and concurred in, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That 15,560 copies of the report of the Smithsonian Institution for the year 1882 be printed, 2,500 copies of which shall be for the use of the Senate, 6,060 for the use of the House of Representatives, and 7,000 copies for the use of the Smithsonian Institution.

NEW EDITION OF SENATE MANUAL.

Mr. ANTHONY. The same committee, to which was referred a resolution for printing a new edition of the Manual and Rules, have instructed me to report back the same and ask to be discharged from its further consideration. The rules require revision, and it is hardly proper to print them until they have been revised. When the matter of printing comes up the Printing Committee, if it is referred to them, will take it into consideration, but at present it belongs to the Committee on Rules.

The report was agreed to, and the committee were discharged from the consideration of the following resolution:

Resolved, That there be prepared under the direction of the Committee on Rules a new edition of the Manual, and that 1,000 copies of the same be printed for the use of the Senate.

OFFICIAL RECORDS OF WAR OF REBELLION.

Mr. ANTHONY. The same committee, to which was referred the joint resolution (H. Res. 365) in relation to the distribution of the volumes of the Official Records of the War of the Rebellion, have instructed me to report back the same with an amendment. I ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The amendment of the Committee on Printing was to strike out the word "Senators" in line 3.

Mr. ANTHONY. The House of Representatives, if I may say it without disrespect, seem to be exceedingly vacillating about the distribution of these records. This is the second resolution they have sent over to us, and we have amended this as we did the former by striking out "Senators" and allowing them to distribute their own copies as they see fit. We distribute ours under the law as originally passed.

Mr. HOAR. I ask the Senator from Rhode Island does the resolution propose, as the committee recommended it, to require Senators to make their final allotment before September, or otherwise lose the power?

Mr. ANTHONY. The word "Senators" is stricken out, which confines it entirely to the House.

Mr. HOAR. There are sometimes new libraries or new wants made known to Senators, and as this is a document of one hundred or more volumes it may be desirable to keep one or two sets without disposing of them for the time being. I hope the Senator will look sharply to that point.

Mr. ANTHONY. The committee thought of that, and by striking out the word "Senators" it leaves the distribution as to Senators to remain under the existing law, and allows the Representatives to distribute their copies as they see fit.

Mr. FRYE. There is a provision also in the sundry civil bill on this subject.

Mr. PLUMB. The provision in the sundry civil bill applies to Senators and extends the time to July, 1884. I understand that the Secretary of War holds that every Senator, Representative, or Delegate who does not, between now and the 4th day of this month, designate the persons to whom he will have these documents sent, waives the right to designate them at all.

Mr. ANTHONY. That is another illustration of the folly of legislating on appropriation bills. If that had been referred to the Committee on Printing, it never would have had our recommendation. We are willing that the House shall distribute their reports as they see fit, but the Senators, we infer, are satisfied with the law as it exists.

Mr. HAWLEY. So we lose our chance if we do not do it by the 4th of March.

Mr. PLUMB. I have not named mine, but if I do not name them before the 4th of March I lose them and the Secretary sells them. We simply extend the time for naming until the 1st of July, 1884.

Mr. ANTHONY. Then I think this had better be amended so as to reserve the rights of Senators.

Mr. PLUMB. I think so. That provision was inserted in the sundry civil bill to cover this construction of the Secretary of War.

Mr. HOAR. The gentleman from Kansas thinks it is reserved till the 1st of July, 1884.

Mr. PLUMB. Certainly, that is the provision in the sundry civil bill.

Mr. ANTHONY. I ask, then, that this joint resolution be recommitted to the Committee on Printing.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be recommitted to the committee on printing.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. McMILLAN. I move that the bill commonly known as the river and harbor bill be read the second time and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. HOAR. When that motion of reference is put I wish to say a few words.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is the question now. The Senator from Massachusetts has the floor on the motion to refer, the bill being considered as read the second time.

Mr. HOAR. When the motion of reference is put I desire to say a few words.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is now in order.

Mr. HOAR. It may possibly take five or ten minutes. As I see my friend on my left [Mr. BLAIR] and several Senators are desiring to have the attention of the Senate, I would a little rather defer what I have to say to a later period, if my friend from Minnesota will withdraw the motion.

Mr. McMILLAN. Very well.

Mr. BLAIR. I wish to recall the attention of the Senate to the resolution for the printing of the report of the Commissioner of Education.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Reports of committees are now in order.

Mr. BLAIR. This is a resolution, and I supposed reports of committees were through.

Mr. HAWLEY. By no means through.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Reports of committees are in order now.

GOVERNMENT DEPARTMENT AT CENTENNIAL EXPOSITION.

Mr. HAWLEY. I am instructed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred a joint resolution (H. Res. 359) to print 5,000 copies of the report of the board on behalf of the United States Executive Departments at the international exhibition of 1876, to report it without amendment. I ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

YORKTOWN CENTENNIAL COMMISSION.

Mr. HAWLEY. I am instructed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the following resolution, to report it with a slight amendment, changing it to a concurrent resolution:

Resolved, That 10,000 copies of the report of the proceedings of the Yorktown Centennial Commission be printed, of which 6,000 shall be for the use of the House and 4,000 for the use of the Senate.

The amendment of the Committee on Printing was, after the word "resolved," to insert the words "by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring)," and in the same line, after "thousand," to insert "additional."

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

SORGHUM SUGAR REPORT.

Mr. HAWLEY, from the Committee on Printing, to whom the subject was referred, reported the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Report of the National Academy of Sciences on the sorghum sugar industry be printed with such portions of the appendix and accompanying exhibits as may be selected by the Joint Committee on Public Printing, and that there be printed 6,500 additional copies, of which 2,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 3,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, 1,000 copies for the use of the Department of Agriculture, and 500 copies for the use of said National Academy of Sciences.

FEES OF PENSION ATTORNEYS.

Mr. MITCHELL. I am instructed by the Committee on Pensions to report back the bill (S. 2263) to amend the pension laws, and for other purposes, with an amendment, and I ask for its present consideration. It is an important bill, though very short.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania asks for the present consideration of this bill.

Mr. INGALLS and others. Let it be read for information.

Mr. MITCHELL. The committee are unanimously in favor of it, and the Commissioner regards it as very important.

The Acting Secretary read the amendment reported by the Committee on Pensions, which was to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert a substitute.

Mr. MITCHELL. If the Senator will allow me about three minutes, I think I can explain it.

Mr. INGALLS. I ask for an explanation.

Mr. MITCHELL. The existing law allows a $10 fee to pension attorneys and claim agents, but it does not provide when the payment shall be. As a result of that the payment of the claim agents often precedes the filing of pension claims, and they proceed at once to collect their pay for their work before it is done, and in some instances delay the settlement of cases in the Pension Office, as it appears plain to some members of the Committee on Pensions, for the purpose of securing their pay. The bill proposes to go back to the old law in that respect and provide that the fee shall not be demandable until the case is settled and allowed, and that then it shall only be paid by the pension agent when the certificate is forwarded to him by the Commissioner of Pensions, as was formerly done.

That is the substance of the whole bill. The first section, however, is necessary in view of the construction which has been placed on the act of 1868 fixing the amount allowed of $10, which has been decided by the courts in this District, as I understand, not to apply to cases of claims for arrearages of pension, so that the claim agents have been going on and making their contracts and getting their pay in arrearage cases without regard to the legal limitation.

Mr. HOAR. Does this make the fee of the claim agent or pension attorney a lien in all cases?

Mr. MITCHELL. It depends on the successful prosecution of the claim.

Mr. HOAR. Is that the present law?

Mr. MITCHELL. It is not the present law.

Mr. HOAR. I think I must, unless there is very strong reason for it, though I have great respect for the judgment of the Pensions Committee, enter my protest against solemnly enacting the doctrine of contingent fees by legislation. I regard the having any person who is prosecuting a claim in a court of justice or anywhere else interested——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senate object to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HOAR. Yes, sir; I must object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will go over.

LAND CLAIM OF JOHN J. JACKMAN.

Mr. HALE (by request) submitted the following resolution, which was read:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands be, and is hereby, instructed to inquire into and report to the Senate upon the questions herein, relating to the southwest quarter of section 32, township 139 north, range 80 west, Dakota Territory:

First. Whether said lands were awarded to John J. Jackman, a settler thereon, under the pre-emption law, by a decision of the Secretary of the Interior, rendered July 26, 1876.

Second. If so, whether such award was conclusive and final, and binding upon the Government of the United States.

Third. Whether such decision was fully executed and carried into effect by the subsequent allowance of an entry of said lands by John J. Jackman, and the issuance of a certificate of entry and a receipt for the purchase-money to him.

Fourth. Whether said Jackman, by virtue thereof, became vested with the title to said lands and the right to a patent therefor.

Fifth. If so, whether said Jackman's entry was subsequently set aside and canceled, and he denied the right to such patent.

Sixth. If so, by what authority and for what reason the same was done.

Seventh. What action has been since taken by the land department with reference to said lands.

Eighth. That said committee inquire into and report all other matters material to a full knowledge of everything that has been done by the land department affecting Jackman's right and title to said lands, examining all evidence, reports, opinions, and decisions relating thereto in the Interior Department and any other information deemed material, sending for persons and papers, if necessary, and report the same to the Senate by bill or otherwise.

And the President is hereby requested to withhold said lands from disposition in any manner or to any person or persons until such time as the investigation herein and hereby directed can be made and due and proper action had thereon.

Mr. INGALLS. Let that go over until to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution goes over, objection being made to its present consideration.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PLUMB. I submit the report of the committee of conference on the Post-Office appropriation bill.

The Acting Secretary read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7049) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 4.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 6, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the word "July" in said amendment and in lieu thereof insert the word "October;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 11, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"And report to Congress in December next, with the data upon which it is based, a more complete system of gauging the rates of pay for carrying the mails on railroad routes if practicable, in order to secure the better protection of the interests of the Government and the adjustment of rates of compensation for the service required; and he is authorized to expend not to exceed $10,000 out of the appropriation for the transportation of mails for actual and necessary expenses involved, including such extra compensation as he may deem just and reasonable to officers of the Department for specific services rendered, which sum shall be immediately available."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Upon amendments numbered 2 and 3 the conference committee are unable to agree.

P. B. PLUMB,
W. B. ALLISON,
JAS. B. BECK,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

L. B. CASWELL,
GEO. M. ROBESON,
E. JNO. ELLIS,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. PLUMB. I move the adoption of the report.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let the report be explained a little.

Mr. PLUMB. I will state that the conferees agreed upon everything that was in issue except the amendment of the Senate providing $185,000 for special mail facilities and the action of the Senate in striking out the provision of the House amending the charters of the Pacific railway companies.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Do I understand this report to be an agreement?

Mr. PLUMB. This is an agreement as to certain items and a disagreement as to others.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Can the Senator tell us in brief the items agreed to?

Mr. PLUMB. The Senate inserted $25,000 additional for steamboat transportation, and that the Senate recedes from. The Senate also named the 1st day of July next ensuing as the date when the 2-cent postage shall take effect; that has been by agreement made the 1st day of October instead of the 1st day of July. Then there was some verbiage connected with the last section of the bill which requires the investigation of the relations of the Government as to the methods of carrying the mails on railroads.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What does that investigation provide for?

Mr. PLUMB. It provides that the Postmaster-General shall investigate the relations of the Government to the railroads.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is that in the print of the bill?

Mr. PLUMB. I think it is.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have no objection to the report as far as it goes.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I should be glad to know from the Senator making the conference report what is the exact point of it? He said there was something stricken out in regard to the Pacific railways, and that there was $185,000 added by the Senate to the bill for fast mails. There was also an amendment by the Senate, on the motion of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN], asking for future information from the Postmaster-General from time to time on that subject. Is that in the conference report or is it stricken out?

Mr. PLUMB. The precise language of the amendment of the Senator from Maryland is not in the bill. The whole paragraph was recast in such a way as we thought would better express the idea that was evidently in the mind of the Senate and still get the information which the Senator from Maryland desires.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Now I ask is the information that was intended by the Senate to be called for still retained in the paragraph in substance?

Mr. PLUMB. The committee thought it not only contained it in substance, but that we were more certain to get in the proper logical way what was wanted on that subject by the Senator from Maryland than we should by the amendment that he proposed and that was adopted by the Senate.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Now I should like to ask whether the real difference is about the Pacific Railroad provision or the $185,000 for fast mail facilities?

Mr. PLUMB. The difference is in regard to both. As far as I can ascertain by the language of the conferees on both sides it is no more in regard to one item than in regard to the other.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. So far as the $185,000 is concerned for fast-mail service, I am under the impression, and I believe others are, that if the Senate is willing to recede from that amendment the bill may be readily settled. If there are other differences I have no disposition to ask the Senate to recede just now before another effort is made to procure a settlement; but if that is the only difference, I think the bill is too important to have it in hazard at this late day of the session by reason of the fact that the Senate is very anxious to pay $185,000 for certain fast mail facilities to certain portions of the country, when the great mass of the people and that part of the country that needs facilities as much as the part which is now served is left without any mail facilities, and certain cities get benefits from the Government in the shape of large subsidies when others are left entirely unprovided for. I think it very unequal, very unfair, and unjust to give $185,000 to be paid in that way. I believe the discussion and examination that took place here shows that the great mass of the people of the country, especially of the West and Southwest, would get on just as well without paying the $185,000 as with it. If that is the real difference that prevents an agreement between the conferees of the House and Senate, I hope that the Senate will not cause the probable loss of the passage of this bill on that account.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the report.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I should want to know what that means.

Mr. PLUMB. The report is simply an agreement on the minor points of which I have spoken, and a disagreement on the two major points which I stated in the beginning.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Is a further conference asked for?

Mr. PLUMB. We simply propose now to adopt the report. After that there can be subsequent action in that direction. The moment the report is adopted, I understand it then devolves on the House to take action, and if they desire a further conference they can ask for it.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Suppose the House do not ask for a further conference, will the bill remain on the table?

Mr. PLUMB. They will undoubtedly act upon it. It is for them to take new affirmative action.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I merely wish to add that I hope the conferees on the part of the Senate will persist resolutely and to the end of this session, if necessary, against tacking on to this bill in conference any new legislation about the relation of the United States to railroads or to anybody else. I am not on the question of how much they ought to be paid for transportation, but in respect to going into legislation as to what should be done with the money or how it shall be collected and what shall be their duty toward the United States I beg the conferees to resist riding on anything of that kind; and my reason is not because I am in favor of the railroads but because I am in favor of the United States, and I do not want to run the slightest risk of disturbing the supremacy that we now by the decisions of the courts have got over them in respect to these affairs.

Mr. PLUMB. Let me say in regard to the observations of the Senator from Vermont and the Senator from West Virginia that so far as I am authorized to speak for the Senate conferees, being admonished by the vote of the Senate and by the discussion which has been had from time to time on the subject of legislation, especially material legislation, on appropriation bills, there need be no apprehension that the position of the Senate will not be maintained. In regard to this other matter I think the Senator from West Virginia need not feel unnecessarily alarmed about the loss of the bill on account of the item of which he has spoken. If that item should be, as he seems to think it ought to be, eliminated, the bill will still pass; and I may say that I think the action of the Senate conferees will not much disappoint him.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I am very glad to have the Senator say so.

Mr. BROWN. I hope the conferees, who ever they may be, on the matter of the fast-mail appropriation will be as firm as the Senator from Vermont wants them to be on the other subject. The position of the Senate should not be yielded. In my opinion the Senate is clearly right about it.

The Senator from West Virginia says we can not have a fast mail to every section. That is true. It is not expected that the fast-mail service will be able to reach every town and every village in the country, but it penetrates some sections of the country, and from the points reached by the fast mail in that way the mail is distributed throughout the entire country. The fast mail from here to Florida is a very important one. It passes through Richmond, Wilmington, Charleston, Savannah, and Jacksonville, Florida. It accommodates an immense travel in the winter season of people who are desirous of going from the northern section down to that semi-tropical garden of ours in Florida, and it affords facilities to travel which are important in connection with the carriage of the mails. Then it is a vast accommodation to business people and to the public generally in having their letters and newspapers and other mail matter carried rapidly through and distributed.

I think there is no more important appropriation in the bill than the one to which I have just referred. I trust the Senate will not yield upon it, but will insist on it that the appropriation be made.

Mr. GORMAN. I desire only to call the attention of the Senate to the report of this conference committee in one respect. As I understand the eleventh amendment of the Senate to this bill the conferees propose to make a change and the simple change is to appropriate $10,000 additional compensation to the superintendent of the railway mail service and the employés in that office who are now amply paid. That seems to me, from the examination I have given it, the only change, to increase the compensation of these gentlemen for performing a service that they are well paid for now, and which in the last eight years they have failed to perform as it might have been. Everything else that the Senate placed on the bill is disposed of except the $185,000 appropriated for fast mails. As I understand the report, all there is in it is what I have stated. I trust it will not be adopted.

The report was concurred in.

Mr. PLUMB. To complete the proceedings in regard to the Post-Office bill I move that the Senate further insist on its second and third amendments and ask a new committee of conference.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. PLUMB, Mr. ALLISON, and Mr. BECK were appointed.

SANTA RITA DEL CABRE LAND CLAIM.

Mr. MORGAN submitted the following resolution; which was read:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, directed to furnish the Senate with copies of all papers, of any kind, on file in the General Land Office, relating to the claim heretofore made and filed with the surveyor-general of the Territory of New Mexico, by or for the heirs of Don Francis Manuel Elquea, deceased, to and for what is known as the "Santa Rita del Cabre" mineral grant or tract of land in the Territory of New Mexico. Also all papers relating to the claim of Martin B. Hayes, as the purchaser of said grant or tract of land from said heirs, together with the action had on both of said claims by the surveyor-general of said Territory or the Commissioner of the General Land Office. Also all the papers relating in any manner to any location or locations or attempted locations made for any purpose upon any lands embraced within said claims, together with the action had on each of such locations, or attempted locations, by either the general or local land officers.

Mr. PLUMB. Let that go over.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let it be printed also.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be printed.

CONDITION OF SIOUX INDIANS.

Mr. LOGAN submitted the following resolution; which was read:

Resolved, That a select committee of five Senators be appointed by the Presiding Officer to examine into the condition of the Sioux Indians upon their reservation, the character of the same, and the feasibility and propriety of proposed reduction of said reservation, and such other matters concerning the welfare of said Sioux Indians as they may think necessary. Said committee shall also have power and are directed to examine into the grievances of the Indian tribes in the Territory of Montana, and receive and consider such propositions from said Indians looking to legislation for the adjustment of their differences with each other and with the Government as they may make; and said committee may in their discretion accept of the advice, assistance, and co-operation of not more than three members of the House of Representatives of the Forty-eighth Congress, and shall have power to send for persons and papers, examine witnesses under oath, employ a clerk and stenographer, and sit during the recess of the Senate, and at such times and places as the committee may determine, and shall report their proceedings to the Senate at its next session, and that the actual and necessary expenses of said investigation be paid, on the approval of the chairman of said committee, out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

Mr. MORGAN. It seems to me extraordinary that a committee should be allowed to select three members from the House of Representatives to compose a part of the committee.

Mr. LOGAN. It does not mean that at all. It does not mean that they shall select, but that they may confer with members of the House instead of having a joint committee, which can not be got through now. The object is to allow a conference with persons of the House connected with the Indian Committee. That is all it means.

Mr. MORGAN. I think it is unprecedented.

Mr. LOGAN. That may be.

Mr. HOAR. Would not that power be in the committee without expressing it?

Mr. LOGAN. No doubt about that; but I did not suppose there was any impropriety in putting it into the resolution that they might confer, and then in their report they can show what conference has been had.

Mr. HOAR. But it says "not more than three." It ties up the committee. We do not know but that the House may hereafter make some appointment. Of course these three have got to be selected by the Senate committee. I would suggest to the Senator whether he has not got all the power he wants without that clause?

Mr. LOGAN. There would not be power to pay them.

Mr. HOAR. I will not interfere.

Mr. LOGAN. I wish to say, as I offered the resolution, that the presumption might be that I desired to be on the committee. I do not. I offered the resolution for the purpose of having this examination made, but I do not desire to be appointed on the committee and shall decline to serve on it. The Indian Committee, which holds over, is a very competent committee, and I think appointments can be made from it.

The resolution was agreed to.

PROTECTION FOR FISHERIES.

Mr. WINDOM. I am instructed by the Committee on Foreign Relations to offer the following resolution and ask its present consideration:

Resolved, That the sub-committee of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, as designated by the chairman of said committee at the last session of Congress, to act in conjunction with the Commission of Fish and Fisheries to examine into the subject of the protection to be given by law to the fish and fisheries of the Atlantic coast, as proposed in the bill S. 1823, be, and the same is hereby, continued for the purpose of completing said investigation and reporting thereon.

Resolved, That said committee have power to employ a clerk and stenographer, to send for persons and papers, and that it have leave to sit during the recess of the Senate.

Resolved, That the expenses incurred under the foregoing resolution be paid out of the appropriation for the contingent expenses of the Senate, on vouchers approved by the chairman of said sub-committee.

I will say that owing to the engagements of Senators last summer this work was not completed. It will cost but a very small sum, as I am informed, and it is considered desirable especially by the people of New Jersey who are affected by menhaden fishing operations.

Mr. GARLAND. I ask the attention of the Senator from Minnesota. There is some doubt about one part of the resolution in my mind. I do not believe it is the custom of the Senate to instruct a sub-committee, but generally they instruct the committee and then the committee gives its own instructions to its sub-committee. Would it not be better to use the phraseology that the Committee on Foreign Relations be instructed to do so and so?

Mr. WINDOM. I have no objection to changing it in that way.

Mr. GARLAND. I do not think it is parliamentary for the Senate to instruct a sub-committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota modifies the resolution by making it an instruction to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The resolution as modified was agreed to.

CORTE DE MADERA DEL PRESIDIO.

Mr. PLUMB. I submit the following resolution. I will state that it is substantially a copy of the resolution under consideration day before yesterday, but it is now put in shape to meet the objection made then:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands be continued as now constituted until the first Monday of December next, and that it have authority to sit during the vacation and to make the investigation committed to it by order of the Senate on the 26th day of February, 1883, concerning a certain grant of lands in the State of California; and for the purposes of said investigation it shall have power to send for persons and papers and to employ a stenographer, and the expenses of said investigation shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.

Mr. INGALLS. Does that mean that Senators whose terms expire on the 3d of March are to be continued on the committee until December?

Mr. PLUMB. That would not be within the power of the resolution. It was drawn by the Senator from Vermont, who gave the subject ample consideration.

Mr. INGALLS. Let the first part of it be read again.

The Acting Secretary read the first portion of the resolution.

The amendment was agreed to.

REVISION OF THE RULES.

Mr. FRYE. I sent a resolution to the Committee on Printing a few days since providing for a new edition of the Manual. The Senator from Rhode Island, chairman of the committee, reported this morning adversely, giving as a reason that no new edition of the Manual should be provided for until there has been a revision of the rules, a correction of errors, &c. I concur with him that there ought to be something of that kind, and I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Rules be, and it is hereby, continued, and authorized to sit during the recess of Congress, at Washington or elsewhere, for the purpose of revising, codifying, and simplifying the rules of the Senate, and of correcting and preparing the Manual for publication; and it may employ such assistance as may be required; and the necessary actual expense incurred in the execution of this order shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

Mr. BAYARD. Let that lie over and be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will lie over and be printed, if that is requested.

Mr. FRYE subsequently said: The Senator from Delaware withdraws his objection to my resolution.

Mr. BAYARD. I withdraw my objection to the consideration of the resolution about the revision of the rules.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will put the question on the resolution offered by the Senator from Maine.

The resolution was agreed to.

H. B. LITTLEPAGE.

Mr. CALL submitted the following resolution:

Resolved, That H. B. Littlepage be reinstated to the messenger-roll of the Senate, with compensation from the date of his removal.

Mr. INGALLS. Let that lie over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will lie over.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Amendments were submitted by Mr. JOHNSTON, Mr. JONAS, Mr. LAPHAM, Mr. MILLER of California, and Mr. PLUMB, intended to be proposed by them, respectively, to the bill (H. R. 7637) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for prior years, and for those certified as due by the accounting officers of the Treasury in accordance with section 4 of the act of June 14, 1878, heretofore paid from permanent appropriations, and for other purposes; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Amendments were submitted by Mr. ANTHONY, Mr. CALL, Mr. CAMDEN, Mr. CONGER, Mr. JOHNSTON, Mr. LAMAR, Mr. MAHONE, Mr. MILLER of California, and Mr. SLATER, intended to be proposed by them respectively to the bill (H. R. 7631) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. McMILLAN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 7679) to establish post routes; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury transmitting the names of the clerks and other persons employed in the several bureaus of his Department during the calendar year ended December 31, 1882, with the sums paid to the same and the time they were employed; which was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War in answer to resolution of February 27, calling for a report in regard to the condition and progress of the improvement of Charleston Harbor, &c.; which was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

LOUISVILLE EXPOSITION.

Mr. BECK. There is a House bill on the table that I ask may be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the bill (H. R. 7623) relative to the Southern exposition to be held in the city of Louisville, State of Kentucky, in the year 1883; and it was read twice by its title.

Mr. BECK. I ask that that bill be passed now. It is an exact copy of the centennial bill. It will only take the time necessary to read it. The Committee on Finance have examined it and recommend it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Has that bill come up this morning?

Mr. BECK. No; it has been here a week.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has been here some days.

Mr. BECK. It is agreed to by the Committee on Finance.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Has that not been laid before the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The attention of the Chair was not called to it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I merely rise now to call the attention of the Chair and the Senate to the fact about these House bills, that the order that the Senate adopted on the yeas and nays the other day, so that it is a standing order of the Senate, commands us to take up House bills on the Calendar in their order and nothing else. I do not object to this bill, but I wish to have the opportunity to make that objection when the river and harbor bill shall be moved, if it is moved, from the Calendar where it now is in point of parliamentary law, for its second reading. I make no objection to this bill; I believe it is right.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 7623) relative to the Southern exposition to be held in the city of Louisville, State of Kentucky, in the year 1883.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MINING AND INDUSTRIAL EXPOSITION AT DENVER.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the bill (H. R. 7597) to admit free of duty articles intended for the national mining and industrial exposition to be held at Denver, in the State of Colorado, during the year 1883; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. BECK. That also was examined by the Committee on Finance.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MISSOURI RIVER BRIDGE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the bill (H. R. 7682) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at some accessible point within ten miles below and five miles above the city of Kansas City, Missouri.

Mr. VEST. This is a House bill. The Committee on Commerce reported favorably a similar Senate bill, and pending its consideration here the House passed this bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to its consideration?

Mr. ROLLINS. I object, merely for the purpose of saying this: The Senate has adopted an order that it will consider House bills. Now, this case simply reverses the order by considering House bills that last came over instead of those that first came over. Instead of considering House bills in their proper order, this is an attempt to reverse that order and take those that have just come over from the House. All I desire in this matter is to secure not equal justice, for I do not expect that, but an apparent show of justice, so that the bills from the House which have been lying on our tables and on the Calendar for a long time may have some chance of consideration.

Mr. PLATT. May I have the attention of the Senator from New Hampshire a single moment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There are two bills, one for Thames River, Connecticut, and this.

Mr. ROLLINS. With the understanding that other States asking for this consideration, as well as Connecticut and Missouri, are to have a fair show some time before the close of the session, I shall withdraw the objection.

Mr. VEST. Certainly. I desire to have all these bills taken up and disposed of now.

Mr. BROWN. I make no objection now, but hereafter I shall object and insist on the regular order.

Mr. MORGAN. I object. We have adopted an order of business here and it is not fair for any Senator to insist that we shall depart from it. I object.

Mr. PLATT. May I appeal to the Senator from Alabama for a single moment? These bills came over from the House last night; they were laid before the Senate last evening.

Mr. MORGAN. I have had bills here for eight months, and I have petitioned the Senate time and again to take them up for consideration and never can get it done. I object to this bill being considered, and will continue to object to this and all others, not because it is this bill——

Mr. PLATT. The Senator may strike, but I beg him to hear. These bills came over from the House last evening——

Mr. MORGAN. I know they did.

Mr. PLATT. They were laid before the Senate, and I supposed there was unanimous consent last evening that they should be acted upon this morning. I do not know that that unanimous consent was formally expressed, but it certainly was understood when they came here last night that if they were read last evening and printed, they should be acted upon this morning. We have just acted upon two bills that came over from the House relating to industrial expositions. These bills will not take any time except the time required to read them.

Mr. MORGAN. I withdraw my objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is withdrawn. The bill will be read.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 7682) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at some accessible point within ten miles below and five miles above the city of Kansas City, Missouri.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INTERNAL-REVENUE AND TARIFF DUTIES.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask unanimous consent for the printing of the report of the conference committee on the tax reduction bill, in order that we can have it here for the examination of Senators.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the printing?

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is, before you submit it to the Senate?

Mr. MORRILL. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection, and the order is made.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE THAMES RIVER.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the bill (H. R. 7115) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Thames River, near New London, in the State of Connecticut, and declaring it to be a post-road.

Mr. EDMUNDS. This is done by unanimous consent, the objection, I understand, having been withdrawn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama withdraws his objection.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 7148) to establish a railway bridge across the Illinois River, extending from a point within five miles of Columbiana, in Greene County, to a point within five miles of Farrowtown, in Calhoun County, in the State of Illinois, was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

LIGHT-HOUSE AT SOUTHWEST PASS.

Mr. KELLOGG. I ask unanimous consent to take up the bill (S. 1943) making an appropriation for rebuilding the light-house at Southwest Pass, Vermillion Bay, Louisiana, which is No. 1026 in the order of business. It will take but an instant.

Mr. HARRISON. I object. We have a standing order and some of us are interested in matters that will be reached by pursuing it; but if time is consumed by special cases——

Mr. KELLOGG. I appeal to the Senator from Indiana to hear me a moment.

Mr. MCMILLAN. Objection being made, I ask the Senate——

Mr. KELLOGG. Wait a moment. This is a bill that I offered in the form of an amendment last night. Under a misapprehension it did not go to the Committee on Appropriations, though I was ordered to report it from the Committee on Commerce. It is a very simple matter establishing the only light-house on the Gulf coast from Florida to Sabine. I am sure the Senator from Indiana will not object. It will take but a moment. It is the only bill I have asked for.

Mr. HARRISON. There are a hundred bills on the Calendar that will take but a moment. The question is whether we shall follow the order adopted by the Senate, and let each one of us have a chance in matters in which our constituents are interested, or whether we shall occupy the whole time as we have been doing this morning.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made to the request of the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I ask for the disposition of the river and harbor bill.

Mr. KELLOGG. I believe I have the floor. I move to postpone the pending and all prior orders and take up this bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is not now in order.

Mr. KELLOGG. When it is in order I shall make that motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will not be in order at all. A resolution can be offered to-day to change the order.

Mr. KELLOGG. I am sure this bill will pass if it is only brought to the notice of the Senate.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will call the attention of the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] to the state of the river and harbor bill. While the Senator was out this morning it was taken from the table, read the second time, and a motion made by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. MCMILLAN] to refer it to the Committee on Commerce. The vote on the reference would have been taken then, but the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] wished to say something, and by common consent it was passed over until morning business was concluded.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I make the point of order that the bill having been read the first time can not be read a second time until it is taken up by vote of the Senate; and, secondly, that under the standing order of the Senate in relation to House bills, this bill can not be considered at this time. It having been read the first time it went on the Calendar; there is no other place for it now; and it can not be taken up for a second reading on the Calendar any more than if it was reported from one of our own committees. It goes to the foot of the Calendar and it can not be taken up until we have got down to it under the order of the Senate, adopted after discussion on the yeas and nays.

Mr. MCMILLAN. This is still within the morning hour, and the bill has been read the second time and a motion has been made to refer it to the Committee on Commerce. Last evening the bill had its first reading and it went over upon objection; but there was no order sending it to the Calendar, and until an order of the Senate is entered sending it to the Calendar, it does not go there.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understood from what was done this morning that it was taken up and read a second time. The motion to refer was simply postponed by common consent of the Senate until the morning business was ended. The Chair thinks the motion to refer is in order. The question is, Will the Senate refer the bill to the Committee on Commerce?

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to give notice, so that if I happen to step into the lobby to speak to a gentleman for a moment the bill will not pass, that when this report is made I shall insist that the bill shall go upon the Calendar, as it must then, of course, and then the standing order of the Senate will forbid it to be taken up out of its order.

Mr. MCMILLAN. The Senator's remarks certainly are not just if they are intended to imply that the Senator has not had full notice of everything that has been done.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator is mistaken. I did not have notice when it was taken up; but I take no offense at all.

Mr. HOAR. I had desired to address the Senate perhaps fifteen or twenty minutes in regard to the general subject embraced in this bill. But it seems to me in the present condition of public business, with the large number of matters which demand the attention of the Senate during the next forty-eight hours, at the end of which time this session will terminate by the operation of the Constitution, I ought not to avail myself of my privilege for such a discussion.

I wish, however, to say a word. It is the constitutional duty of every Senator to act according to his own judgment of what is right and for the public interest without regard to mere clamor, but with regard and deference and consideration to honest public sentiment. Still I think that regard requires, in the present condition of public sentiment upon this question, that every proposition for a river and harbor improvement which should be adopted here should be accompanied by a careful consideration of every item on the part of a committee of the Senate, and should also be accompanied by such a statement of the importance to national commerce of every individual improvement as will make its way not merely to the favorable judgment of the Senate, but to the general favor of the public.

There is no mode of ascertaining in the end what is the public sentiment of a self-governing people in regard to legislation but by the laws which the constitutional representatives of the people enact. The public sentiment of the American people in matters of legislation is to be found in its laws. I do not speak of temporary gusts of passion, but the permanent, sober second thought of this people in regard to what should be law is to be ascertained, and ascertained only by inquiring what is law.

Now, Mr. President, it is manifestly impossible that upon a bill containing, I suppose, hundreds of items—I have not read the particular pending bill—it is manifestly impossible that in forty-eight hours this committee, however industrious, however intelligent, however well informed, however conscientious, can give the necessary scrutiny; and therefore it is manifestly impossible that in the present stage of the public business this bill can be properly considered by the Senate itself and become a law.

The reference of the bill will only enable the committee to ascertain the impossibility of reporting it to the Senate with such facts and information as the Senate has a right to require at the hands of the committee before it can act. Therefore, not in the least having changed my mind as to what the interest of this people requires, not in the least doubting that the permanent and final judgment of the people will be in favor of developing its water ways all over the country, and its harbors, by the use of the national forces and the national resources, which are alone adequate to that purpose, I have risen to say that I can not doubt that this committee, when this bill is committed to them, will be compelled to report to the Senate that it is impossible to deal intelligently and properly with this subject at the present session.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7595) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes, asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. FRANK HISCOCK of New York, Mr. BENJAMIN BUTTERWORTH of Ohio, and Mr. JOSEPH C. S. BLACKBURN of Kentucky managers at the conference on its part.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7181) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills:

A bill (S. 719) for the relief of the representatives of Sterling Austin, deceased;

A bill (S. 826) for the relief of Powers & Newman and D. & R. Powers; and

A bill (S. 1829) to amend an act donating public lands to the several States and Territories which may provide colleges for the benefit of agriculture and the mechanic arts.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 5543) to confirm certain entries on the public lands; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HILL. There are two bills from the Post-Office Committee which are of very great importance. One is a bill that will not require five minutes to consider, and the other is the post-route bill. The post-route bill requires a good deal of time for enrolling, and unless it is passed early it can not be enrolled, and so the bill will be lost.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. VOORHEES in the chair). The Senator from Colorado asks consent to take up at this time a certain bill.

Mr. HILL. I will say first the joint resolution (H. Res. 333) validating certain contracts executed by the Postmaster-General.

The joint resolution was read.

Mr. INGALLS. How does that come before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair does not know. The Senator from Colorado calls it up.

Mr. INGALLS. Is it reported to-day?

Mr. HILL. It is on the Calendar.

Mr. INGALLS. Does it come up under the order of the Senate?

Mr. HILL. No, sir.

Mr. INGALLS. Then I object.

Mr. HILL. It will not require five minutes.

Mr. INGALLS. There are a great many others that will not require five minutes.

Mr. HILL. It is very important to the Post-Office Department.

Mr. INGALLS. I think this matter has gone far enough. I have been waiting two hours to get at some District bills on the Calendar from the House. I propose from this time to oppose everything out of order.

Mr. MAXEY. I hope the Senate will go on with the post-route bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is not in order. Nothing is in order except the execution of the order passed on the motion of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN].

Mr. HILL. Then I ask unanimous consent to take up the post-route bill.

Mr. INGALLS. I object.

Mr. HILL. Can it not be taken up by a vote of the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No, not while the order remains. You must get rid of the order first. The Senate will proceed to the consideration, under the regular order, of pension bills on the Calendar.

Mr. FRYE. Is it not in order to move to postpone the order of the Senate and to take up, for instance, the shipping bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No; this is a standing order of the Senate. The Senator can give notice. He can get it up to-morrow if he offers a resolution to-day, and it can be considered to-morrow; but this is the rule. That was understood at the time it was adopted. The Senator from Vermont so stated; he stated that the hands of the Senate would be tied.

Mr. FRYE. The shipping bill occupied a special committee during the whole vacation, and it has passed the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair personally would be glad to see the shipping bill under consideration. The order is to proceed to the consideration of pension bills of any kind.

Mr. PLATT. If I could be heard I should like to have an understanding as to the construction of that order. There are on the Calendar fifty or sixty pension cases which have been reported adversely, some of them with the views of the minority and some without the views of the minority having been presented. There are perhaps eight or ten cases which have been reported favorably, in which there are minority reports. The order itself seems broad enough to consider every pension case on the Calendar. That I think would take a very long time. I desire to have a construction of the order at this time to know whether it necessitates the taking up of all cases on the Calendar, or what cases on the Calendar it does bring up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair does not think there is any reasonable doubt about the construction of the order. It was that the Senate should proceed to the consideration of the pending pension bills after the then unfinished business should be disposed of. That unfinished business has been disposed of. It was next that House bills reported favorably should be considered. It does not speak in the first order of any pension bills reported favorably, but orders that the House bills reported favorably shall be considered after going through with the pending pension bills. The Chair is of the opinion that the pending pension bills on the Calendar are to be considered under the order, whether they are reported favorably or unfavorably.

Mr. FRYE. The Calendar was not finished the other day?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No; the Senate will go on and finish the Calendar of pension bills and then go back to House bills reported favorably.

SUSAN BAYARD.

The bill (H. R. 5558) granting a pension to Mrs. Susan Bayard was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Mrs. Susan Bayard, widow of Anthony W. Bayard, a soldier of the war of 1812.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARGERY NIGHTENGALE.

The bill (H. R. 5103) granting a pension to Margery Nightengale was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for a pension of $8 a month to Margery Nightengale, widow of Michael Nightengale, late of Company D, Fifty-first Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EDGAR B. LAMPHIER.

The bill (H. R. 1443) granting a pension to Edgar B. Lamphier was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll the name of Edgar B. Lamphier, late a private in the Twenty-sixth Regiment New York Light Artillery Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DANIEL M. MORLEY.

The bill (H. R. 1860) granting a pension to Daniel M. Morley was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It places on the pension-roll the name of Daniel M. Morley, late a private in Company E, Twenty-ninth Regiment Ohio Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMANDA STOKES.

The bill (H. R. 3743) granting a pension to Miss Amanda Stokes was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It places on the pension-roll, at the rate of $15 per month, the name of Miss Amanda Stokes, of Lebanon, Warren County, Ohio.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HELEN M. THAYER.

The bill (H. R. 6923) granting a pension to Mrs. Helen M. Thayer, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It places on the pension-roll the name of Mrs. Helen M. Thayer, widow of Charles H. Thayer, late a private in Company C, Tenth Regiment Maine Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PATRICK HORAN.

The bill (H. R. 6501) granting a pension to Patrick Horan was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll the name of Patrick Horan, late a teamster in the Quartermaster's Department of the United States Army, with the same rate of pension to which a private soldier would be entitled for like disabilities.

Mr. PLATT. I did not concur in that report. I ask for the reading of the report.

The Acting Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. MITCHELL February 27, 1883:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred House bill 6501, granting a pension to Patrick Horan, have examined the same, and report:

The Committee of Invalid Pensions, in the consideration of the above bill, report as follows:

"The petitioner, Patrick Horan, of Joliet, Illinois, was enrolled on or about September 15, 1861, as a teamster of the Quartermaster's Department, by Captain G. E. D. Diamond, at Saint Louis, Missouri. He was never discharged, but paid last at Fort Riley, Kansas, and sent back to Saint Louis on the 28th of November, 1866.

"While serving as a teamster he was taken prisoner of war at the battle of Poisons Springs, and was confined at Camp Ford, Tyler, Texas, from about April, 1864, to about the middle of February, 1865. While a prisoner he was without shelter or covering of any kind, and in June, 1864, was exposed to a rain-storm of fourteen days' duration. During his confinement he dug a hole in the ground, in which he slept. In consequence of his exposure and suffering, he was stricken with paralysis, from which disease he has been suffering to the present time.

"His statement as to his imprisonment, exposure, and incurrence of paralysis in rebel prisons is corroborated by the testimony of Henry B. Clark, himself an inmate of said prisons, and by the testimony of John B. Arnold, of the Chicago Mercantile Battery.

"The evidence also shows that prior to and on his arrival at said prison he was in sound health. The testimony of neighbors, of Joliet, Illinois, shows that upon his return to Joliet, after the war, he was afflicted with paralysis, which has continued to the present time, making him completely unable to perform any physical labor.

"Dr. W. Dougall, of Will County, Illinois, states that since 1874 petitioner has been under his treatment; that he has carefully studied his case; that he is suffering from 'locomotor ataxia,' caused by exposure and sleeping upon damp ground; that it gradually grows worse; is incurable, and will soon render him entirely helpless. His claim was rejected by the Pension Office on the ground that petitioner was not in the military service of the United States, and therefore does not come under the general provisions of the pension law; but the Pension Bureau is of opinion that his claim is a meritorious one and should be allowed by 'special act;' and that, if such special act is granted, the pension should commence from the date of its passage, at such rate as the claimant, upon examination, may be found to be entitled to."

Your committee find the facts set forth in the above report substantially correct. There can be no doubt from the evidence on file that his disability originated while in the discharge of his duties as teamster in the Quartermaster's Department; in other words, he was performing actual service for the Government and while so engaged became permanently disabled, and, as is stated by examing surgeons, "he is incapacitated from obtaining his subsistence by manual labor," and "his disease is incurable."

Your committee believe this to be a meritorious case, and in justice the claimant should receive the relief asked for, and therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. PLATT. I only desire to state the circumstances of the case. This soldier was a teamster serving in the Quartermaster's Department. While so serving he undoubtedly contracted an illness of which he died. We have had several contests in the Senate as to whether by special act we should pension scouts and teamsters and employés of the Quartermaster's Department.

Mr. BLAIR. This is the man himself; he is living.

Mr. PLATT. I am much obliged to the Senator from New Hampshire. I thought it was on account of his widow, but I find I am mistaken. It is an application made by the soldier himself, and I should have said that the disability which he now suffers was undoubtedly contracted while he was a teamster in the employ of the Quartermaster's Department. We have pensioned scouts and teamsters for wounds actually received; we have never, so far as I know, pensioned any scout, any teamster, any employé of the Quartermaster's Department on account of illness contracted in the service. This goes one step beyond anything we have ever done, so far as my recollection serves me. If the Senate desires to pass the bill I have no further remarks to make.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, and read the third time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

The bill was rejected.

FEES IN PENSION AND BOUNTY LAND CASES.

The bill (S. 2263) to amend the pension laws and for other purposes was announced as next in order.

Mr. INGALLS. How does that come up, Mr. President?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That was reported this morning and placed on the Calendar.

Mr. INGALLS. Therefore under the order it can not come up at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is a pension bill.

Mr. PLATT. All pension bills come up at this time.

Mr. INGALLS. All pension bills?

Mr. PLATT. So I understand.

Mr. INGALLS. The bill has not been read yet.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was read this morning in full.

Mr. INGALLS. I should like to hear it read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The substitute reported by the Committee on Pensions will be read.

The ACTING SECRETARY. The Committee on Pensions report to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and to insert:

That section 1 of the act entitled "An act relating to claim agents and attorneys in pension cases," approved the 20th day of June, in the year of our Lord 1878, be, and the same is hereby, made applicable to bounty-land cases and pension cases in which arrears of pension are or shall be claimed or granted.

SEC. 2. That the fee of $10 prescribed by law shall not be payable to nor demanded or received by any agent or attorney in any pension case, whether for arrears or otherwise or in any bounty-land case, in whole or in part, until such claim shall be allowed. Upon allowance the Commissioner of Pensions shall direct that the same be paid by the proper pension agent in the manner provided for in sections 4768 and 4769 of the Revised Statutes.

SEC. 3. The provisions of section 5485 of the Revised Statutes shall be applicable to any person who shall violate this act.

Mr. INGALLS. That is not a bill which comes within the order that has been adopted by the Senate. It never was contemplated that bills amending the pension laws should have a right of way. It was simply bills for pensioning soldiers; what are called private pension bills. I do not think the widest possible latitude could embrace that bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The order technically refers to "pending pension bills."

Mr. INGALLS. I withdraw my suggestion.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Committee on Pensions.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. PLATT. Does the order require us to go to the commencement of the Calendar, or the point last reached?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. To commence at the beginning of the Calendar is the quickest way, because the Senate can not consider certain bills.

Mr. FRYE. It is limited to House bills.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No; it covers all pension bills, Senate and House. The order reads as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate proceed to the consideration of the pending pension bill; secondly, to House bills reported favorably.

Mr. FRYE. The Chair is right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The word "favorably" applies only to the second clause.

Mr. PLATT. I am bound to say that I do not think the Senate so understood the matter when the order was passed. A strict construction of the order now requires us to go back to the commencement of the Calendar and take the bills which have been reported adversely, some of them postponed and reconsidered and placed on the Calendar. There are probably fifty or sixty of them on the Calendar, every one of which, if considered, will of course incur the opposition of the committee or a majority of the committee.

Mr. FRYE. If that is done, the day is gone.

Mr. PLATT. I do not think that was what the Senate supposed they were ordering when they passed the order.

Mr. HARRISON. Will not the Senator from Connecticut ask unanimous consent that the contested cases be passed over?

Mr. JACKSON. I ask unanimous consent that the contested cases go over.

Mr. BLAIR. I object to it in that form. There are quite a number of cases where there are majority reports which have passed the House. I think those cases certainly should be disposed of. I do not think the contested cases should be made use of to waste the remainder of the session. They will not result in benefit to the pensioners or the applicants themselves, and will result only in great injury to the country. As soon as these few cases where there are majority reports in favor of the passage of the pension bills——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the majority report is favorable, although there is a minorty report, it is a favorable report.

Mr. BLAIR. What I mean to say is that we should consider, first, the House and then the Senate bills, because such cases going to the House can be disposed of there during the remainder of the session.

Mr. PLATT. Allow me to suggest to the Senator from Tennessee that he ask to confine it to cases reported adversely.

Mr. JACKSON. Yes; that they go over.

Mr. BECK. I took part in endeavoring to reach the Calendar by voting for all the pension cases to have preference; but I supposed when I did that that it was the uncontested pension cases that were to be considered, and then that we should proceed with the House bills that had been reported favorably without amendment; so that something would become law. There are some ten or twelve of them. While I do not want to delay the contested pension cases, I hope we shall be allowed to pass them over temporarily until a few other cases than pension cases that have come from the House and are reported unanimously without amendment may be considered subject to objection.

Mr. BLAIR. I do not think the class of cases I now speak of can consume half an hour. Then the pension matters will all be out of the way.

Mr. BECK. The trouble of enrolling is very great now. There are a few House bills to which there is no objection that the Senator from New Hampshire can stop, if they give rise to debate, by a single objection.

Mr. BLAIR. It is exceedingly unpleasant to object, but in half an hour the pension bills will all be out of the way.

Mr. BECK. I know it is not a very pleasant thing to do. We thought we would go to the unobjected House bills reported favorably after we got through with the unobjected pension cases, so as to dispose of as much business as we could.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would suggest that unanimous consent be given to pass over all pension cases reported adversely.

Mr. JACKSON. That is right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Evidently the author of the rule desired that all cases reported adversely should be passed over.

Mr. FRYE. There will be no objection to that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there unanimous consent that all cases reported adversely be passed over?

Mr. BLAIR. I agree to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is agreed, then, that the Secretary shall begin the call at the commencement of the Calendar and then the Senator from Kentucky will get at the House bills.

Mr. BECK. I am only endeavoring to obtain some action on unobjected cases.

ELECTION OF PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE.

Mr. ANTHONY. I desire to interpose at this time a privileged resolution relating to the order of business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). The resolution will be received.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Whereas the President pro tempore has signified his purpose to resign the chair at 12 o'clock to-morrow: Therefore,

Resolved, That at that hour the Senate will proceed to the election of a President pro tempore.

ANN CORNELIA LANMAN.

Mr. PLATT. The first case I see on the Calendar is the bill (S. 2133) granting an increase of pension to Ann Cornelia Lanman.

Mr. BLAIR. I suggest that these bills be taken up as we find them. We shall get rid of them quickest in that way.

The bill (S. 2133) granting a pension to Ann Cornelia Lanman was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll the name of Ann Cornelia Lanman, and proposes to pay her a pension of $50 a month in lieu of the pension now received by her.

Mr. JACKSON. The majorty and minority reports in that case had better be read.

The Acting Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. MITCHELL July 8, 1882:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of Mrs. Ann Cornelia Lanman, widow of the late Rear-Admiral Joseph Lanman, praying for an increase of pension, having examined the facts in the case, respectfully submit the following report:

Admiral Lanman entered the naval service of the United States as a midshipman January 1, 1825, and passed through all the grades of the service up to rear-admiral. He served during the late war, and distinguished himself at the attack on Fort Fisher under Admiral Porter. Admiral Lanman was officially recognized for gallant service throughout the war. In 1869 he was promoted to be a rear-admiral, and placed in command of the South Atlantic fleet, where he served three years. On his return from this command he was placed on the retired-list.

On the 20th of February, 1874, he received a telegram from Secretary of Navy Robeson to report at Washington, District of Columbia, as a witness. The order was received by him at 5 o'clock in the afternoon, and he left for Washington the same evening. On that journey he contracted a very severe cold, and when he reached home he was scarcely able to walk. He immediately took to his bed, and grew worse until the 13th of March, 1874, when he died. The physician who attended him in his last sickness swears that he died of pneumonia, contracted during his journey to Washington as above stated.

The evidence shows that Rear-Admiral Lanman left a widow, the present claimant, and two minor children, to wit, Alice Blanche and Rosalie Decatur, aged, respectively, 10 and 12 years.

A pension of $30 a month was granted to Mrs. Lanman by special act of Congress. This was the pension allowed by law at that time in the cases of the widows of admirals, so that the special act gave Mrs. Lanman the full benefit of the law at that time. Now she petitions Congress to increase the pension allowed her to $50 per month, on the ground that her present pension is inadequate to the support of herself and her children.

In connection with this petition for an increase of pension, it is pertinent to inquire into the equity which has governed the committee's action in similar cases.

By the pension law as it existed prior to the act of July 14, 1862, the pensions granted to officers of the Navy, and to their widows and minor children in case of death, were made equal to the half-monthly pay of such officers, such pay as existed in 1835, which forms the basis upon which such pensions were granted. These pensions were payable from the interest of the naval pension fund. By this law rear-admirals, their widows, &c., received a pension of $50 a month.

The act of July 14, 1862, established pensions for the Army and Navy according to rank, making Navy pensions correspond with Army pensions. By this act of July 14, 1862, the pension granted to rear-admirals was reduced to $30 a month. The act of July 14, 1862, was construed as affecting only pensions which should be granted after the passage of said act.

Section 3 of the act of July 25, 1866, provided—

"That the provisions of an act entitled 'An act to grant pensions,' approved July 14, 1862, and of the acts supplementary thereto and amendatory thereof, are hereby so far as applicable extended to the pensioners under previous laws, except Revolutionary pensions."

In applying this act no reduction of the naval pensions previously granted was made.

Section 13 of the act of July 27, 1868, provided—

"That the third section of an act entitled 'An act increasing the pensions of widows and orphans, and for other purposes,' approved July 25, 1866, shall be so construed as to place all pensioners whose right thereto accrued subsequently to the war of the Revolution and prior to the 4th of March, 1861, on the same footing as to rate of pension from and after the passage of said act as those who have been pensioned under acts passed since said 4th day of March, 1861, and the widows of Revolutionary soldiers and sailors now receiving a less sum shall hereafter be paid at the rate of $8 per month."

Under this act, upon the decision of the Secretary of the Interior, naval pensions already granted were reduced to the rates provided in the act of July 14, 1862, such reduction taking effect from the last half-yearly payment made prior to February 10, 1870, the date of the decision.

This decision gave rise to the passage of the act approved June 9, 1880, entitled "An act to restore pensions in certain cases," which provides—

"That section 3 of an act entitled 'An act increasing the pensions of widows and orphans and for other purposes,' approved July 25, 1866, and section 13 of an act entitled 'An act relating to pensions,' approved July 27, 1868, and section 4712 of the Revised Statutes shall not operate to reduce the rate of any pension which had actually been allowed to the commissioned, non-commissioned, or petty officers of the Navy, or their widows or minor children prior to the 25th day of July, 1866; and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to restore all such pensioners as have already been so reduced to the rate originally granted and allowed, to take effect from the date of such reduction."

Under this act such pensioners as had been reduced under the decision rendered by the Secretary of the Interior, February 10, 1870, were restored to their original rate of pension.

All those widows, &c., of rear-admirals who have applied for a pension since the rendering of the decision of the Secretary of the Interior, February 10, 1870, have only been granted a pension of $30 per month, which presents the inconsistency of a portion of rear-admirals' widows receiving $50, while the balance are pensioned at $30 a month, without difference of rank, merit, or long service. Since the restoration of this class of pensions to $50 per month by the act of June 9, 1880, the widows who are allowed but $30 per month at the Pension Office under the act of July 14, 1862, have from time to time applied to Congress for an increase of pension from $30 to $50, and for original pensions of $50 per month, and such increase, or original granting of pensions at $50 per month, has frequently occurred during the present session of Congress. (See Mr. Teller's report, Elizabeth Wirt Goldsborough; Mr. JACKSON's report, Louisa Bainbridge Hoff; Mr. PLATT's report, Rebecca Reynolds; Mr. PLATT's report, Elizabeth H. Spotts.)

Some of these cases are for long and meritorious services, and for original pension; others for an increase from the $30 allowed by the Pension Office to $50. In the report of the case of Admiral Goldsborough, where it is not alleged that he died of any disease contracted in the line of duty, or even in the service, the concluding clause in the Goldsborough case is as follows:

"Such a record of service, in the opinion of the committee, justifies the payment to his widow of the same pension allowed in other cases by special act of Congress to the widows of other officers of the Navy of similar rank. The committee therefore recommend that Senate bill 743 be passed."

That concluding clause is open to but one conclusion, to wit, that Mrs. Goldsborough's pension was a gratuity pension for the long and meritorious services of her husband.

Regarding any objection being raised to the granting of a pension to Rear-Admiral Lanman's widow on the ground that he was on the retired-list, it is proper to say that Admiral Goldsborough was retired in 1874 and died in 1879, and Admiral Hoff was retired in 1869 and died in 1878. Therefore they were both on the retired-list at the time of their death.

Now, the widow of Rear-Admiral Lanman is entitled to a pension to a greater extent than the widow of an admiral whose only claim was long and meritorious services, as her husband died directly from a malady contracted in obeying an order of the Secretary of the Navy, and within a few days after contracting the disease.

The $30 pension granted by special act was acceptable to Mrs. Lanman until others of no greater merit were increased to $50. The inconsistency of her receiving but $30 became apparent, and no reason prevailing why her case should be an exceptional one, she thought it proper to ask Congress by a special act to remove this inconsistency.

Inasmuch as the Forty-sixth Congress thought proper to increase certain cases of the widows of admirals to $50 (see Lelia E. McCauley, page 609 Statutes at Large, 1879–'81, and Ann M. Paulding, 608 Statutes at Large, 1879–'81), and have frequently seen fit in the present Congress to grant the same pension in similar cases, your committee can see no good reason why Mrs. Lanman should not receive a like pension, and therefore report a bill to that effect, and recommend its passage.

Mr. JACKSON. I ask that the views of the minority be incorporated in the RECORD, and I will state briefly the ground of objection to the allowance of this claim.

The views of the minority, submitted by Mr. JACKSON July 2, 1882, were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The undersigned, members of the Committee on Pensions, not concurring in the report of the majority upon the bill (H. R. 4795) granting an increase pension to Mrs. Ann Cornelia Lanman, respectfully submit the following views of the minority:

Rear-Admiral Joseph Lanman, whose career as a naval officer is fully set forth in the majority report, was placed upon the retired-list of the Navy in 1871 or 1872. On the 20th of February, 1874, he received a telegram from the Secretary of the Navy to come to Washington, District of Columbia, as a witness before a naval court-martial. He left for Washington on the same evening he received the notice. On the trip he contracted a severe cold and when he reached home he was quite unwell; immediately took to his bed and grew steadily worse until the 13th March, 1874, when he died. The physician who attended him in his last sickness states that he died of pneumonia contracted during his trip to Washington as above stated. He left a widow (the present applicant for increase of pension) and two minor children, aged respectively 10 and 12 years.

Under the general law Mrs. Lanman was not entitled to a pension, the disease of which her husband died not having originated in the service, and because contracted subsequent to the 27th day of July, 1868. The second section of the act of July 27, 1868 (now contained in section 4694 of the Revised Statutes), denies the right to pension in cases like that of Admiral Lanman, unless the officer was—

"At the time of contracting the disease, borne on the books of some ship or other vessel of the United States, at sea or in harbor, actually in commission, or was at some naval station, or on his way by direction of competent authority to the United States or to some other vessel or naval station or hospital."

Mrs. Lanman accordingly applied to Congress for a pension, and by special act approved March 3, 1879, she was granted a pension of $30 per month in consideration of the long and distinguished service of her husband. She now asks Congress by another special act to increase her pension to $50 per month, resting her application upon the same considerations which induced its former action, together with the further averment in her petition that her present pension is not adequate for the support of herself and minor children. It does not appear what estate Admiral Lanman left, nor what are the present circumstances of his widow and children. It is not shown that they are in want or that the increased pension asked for is necessary for the widow's comfortable support. Nothing of the sort is alleged. But it is said in support of her application that she should be granted the same rate of pension allowed the widows of Rear-Admirals Goldsborough and Hoff at the present session of Congress. In the case of Rear-Admiral Hoff it clearly appeared that he died of disease contracted in the service and in the line of duty.

In the Goldsborough case the report does not show the facts and circumstances connected with his death. In neither of these cases was there a second application to Congress upon the same state of facts on which special relief had been granted. And in the cases referred to there were special considerations, such as the necessitous circumstances of the applicants. But whether these cases can or can not be distinguished from the present by any meritorious or special considerations, we think it would be establishing a mischievous precedent to pass the bill in question. Its effect will be to invite repeated applications and appeals for special acts, and Congress will find itself embarrassed in the effort to produce strict and exact equality in every case. If the widows of all rear-admirals are to be allowed a pension of $50 per month without reference to their pecuniary circumstances or necessities, then Congress should so declare by general law. Special legislation in the matter of pensions is steadily increasing, and at a rate which, if precedents are to be followed and control its action, will soon be exceedingly embarrassing to Congress. It should be assumed that when Congress, with all the facts before it now presented, fixed Mrs. Lanman's pension at $30 per month, it intended that as its final action in the mattter.

For these and other reasons that will readily suggest themselves, we think the bill should not be passed but be indefinitely postponed by the Senate.

HOWELL E. JACKSON.
JAS. H. SLATER.

Mr. JACKSON. Mrs. Lanman was not entitled to a pension by the general law. In the second section of the act of July 27, 1868, now incorporated in the Revised Statutes as section 4694, there is a provision that unless the officer was at the time of contracting the disease "borne on the books of some ship or other vessel of the United States, at sea or in harbor, actually in commission, or was at some naval station, or on his way, by direction of competent authority, to the United States, or to some other vessel or naval station, or hospital," he should not be entitled to a pension when on the retired-list.

Mrs. Lanman's case came within that provision of the law. She accordingly applied to Congress in 1879 for a special act placing her name upon the pension-roll. By a special act passed the 3d of March, 1879, she was granted a pension of $30 a month in consideration of the long and distinguished services of her husband. She now comes to Congress and asks for another special act raising her pension to $50 a month, based upon the same considerations exactly.

When Congress acted upon her application in 1879 and by a special act gave her a pension that she was not entitled to under the general law, it expressed its opinion and conclusion as to the merits of her case. She is here now asking for $50 a month upon the same state of facts exactly. It is stated in the report of the majority that the pension granted her by that special act was acceptable to her, and her only ground of making the application now is that others have been raised to $50.

This shows the danger and the mistake of these special bills increasing pensions, and in cases that are not strictly meritorious or needy. There is nothing in this case to show her need. I am opposed to the granting of pensions on these repeated special applications. I hope the Senate will disagree to the report of the majority.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. BLAIR. I did not make this report. I wish to remind the Senate that it is a majority report, however. We waived the consideration of the cases which are reported adversely. This woman is the widow of a rear-admiral. She is one of that class, forty or fifty, it may be perhaps nearly sixty, who are widows of officers of high rank who are now being pensioned at the rate of $50 a month. She asks nothing but what we are doing for all other widows of officers of the same rank of her condition and of her necessities.

Mr. PLUMB. That illustrates, as the Senator from Tennessee well says, exactly what we are coming to. We took up the case of another widow, perhaps of an officer of similar rank, the other day, and having taken that up on one pretext we now come upon a case without the same pretext, and we are asked to put up this one.

Mr. JACKSON. Will the Senator from Kansas allow me to call his attention to the fact that in the case of Admiral Goldsborough, cited by the report of the majority, his widow was pensioned at the rate of $30 per month, the highest rate allowed by law. She got the increase from the fact of her husband having incurred disability in the service.

Mr. PLUMB. Now as before I protest against this as unjust and injurious in its discrimination.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on ordering the bill to a third reading. Shall the bill be read a third time? [Putting the question.] The noes appear to have it.

Mr. PLATT. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. GROOME. I desire to say before the roll is called, by way of explanation of my vote, that it is a gratuity pension which this lady is now receiving. Having appealed to Congress when the general law clearly did not entitle her to a pension, and having received a very large measure of relief, I do not think she ought to show a want of appreciation of the liberality with which she has already been treated by again appealing to Congress for additional relief. I think Congress should not encourage others to do the same thing by passing this bill.

Mr. PLATT. I do not see how any distinction can be made in this case and this lady discriminated against. I think there has been no case in which the widow of a rear-admiral has asked Congress to give her a pension at the rate of $50 that it has not been done. I do not think this is exactly a case to stop upon. It is a case which was reported favorably a long time ago. The case which the Senator from Kansas refers to was reported very recently, but was first reached under the order of the Senate and was taken up and passed.

It would be a very unjust discrimination against this lady, whose case was reported favorably a long while ago, not to extend the same relief to her which was extended in the case of the widow of Rear-Admiral Beaumont. A rear-admiral, if I mistake not, ranks with a major-general. It seems to me we can do no less, in view of the previous action of Congress, than to pension the widows of rear-admirals at $50 or to pass a law providing that henceforth they shall only be pensioned at $30 and that those who receive $50 shall be reduced to $30. But until Congress is ready to do that, I do not see how we can make a discrimination.

Mr. GROOME. The Senator from Connecticut states that a rear-admiral ranks with a major-general. Such is the fact, but it is also a fact, of which I remind the Senator from Connecticut, that there are numerous widows of major-generals who are only receiving $30 a month under the general law, and whose pensions have never been increased by special legislation. I am aware that there are other cases of major-generals who were killed in battle whose widows are receiving $50 a month in consequence of that fact; but as a general rule the widows of major-generals who died otherwise than in battle are only receiving to-day $30 a month. That rate of pension this lady is receiving, although under the general law she is not pensionable. Having once appealed to the liberality of Congress, and having received from it the measure of liberality which that tribunal, in view of all the circumstances upon which her application was based, saw fit to adopt, I feel that she comes here with a very bad grace when she asks Congress to review its action and increase the liberal allowance already made to her. I hope the bill will not pass.

Mr. PLATT. Of course I can not say that the Senator is absolutely mistaken when he says that there are widows of major-generals in the Army receiving $30 a month, but I did not suppose there were any such cases. If there are it is, I presume, because they have not made an application to Congress for an increase of pension. I know it has been done in every case where the increase has been asked.

Mr. GROOME. I will say to the Senator from Connecticut that I recollect very well a year or two ago, while I was upon the Committee on Pensions, a claim was made before that committee that the widow of every major-general was receiving $50 a month. Information was asked of the Pension Department, and it was ascertained that the claim was not correct, and that very few widows of major-generals were receiving that allowance unless their husbands had been killed in battle.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the bill be read a third time? upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Principal Legislative Clerk called the roll.

Mr. RANSOM. I am paired with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN]. I do not know how he would vote.

The result was announced—yeas 19, nays 22; as follows:

YEAS—19.

Anthony,	Edmunds,	Ingalls,	Mahone,
Blair,	Frye,	Jones of Florida,	Miller of N. Y.,
Call,	Harrison,	Jones of Nevada,	Platt,
Conger,	Hawley,	McDill,	Sherman.
Dawes,	Hill,	McMillan,

NAYS—22.

Barrow,	Davis of W. Va.,	Jackson,	Rollins,
Beck,	Fair,	Jonas,	Slater,
Brown,	Garland,	McPherson,	Vance,
Camden,	George,	Maxey,	Van Wyck.
Cameron of Wis.,	Groome,	Morgan,
Coke,	Harris,	Plumb,

ABSENT—35.

Aldrich,	Gorman,	Logan,	Sawyer,
Allison,	Grover,	Miller of Cal.,	Sewell,
Bayard,	Hale,	Mitchell,	Tabor,
Butler,	Hampton,	Morrill,	Vest,
Cameron of Pa.,	Hoar,	Pendleton,	Voorhees,
Cockrell,	Johnston,	Pugh,	Walker,
Davis of Ill.,	Kellogg,	Ransom,	Williams,
Farley,	Lamar,	Saulsbury,	Windom.
Ferry,	Lapham,	Saunders,

So the bill was rejected.

DANIEL G. GEORGE.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next pension bill on the Calendar favorably reported will be announced.

The ACTING SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 1011) granting an increase of pension to Daniel G. George.

Mr. BLAIR. I wish to call that bill up at another time, and will reserve the right to do so. I am not ready to discuss it now; let it be passed over without prejudice.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over if there be no objection.

PATRICK DRONEY.

Mr. DAWES. The next case on the Calendar is the bill (H. R. 718) granting a pension to Patrick Droney. I wish to ask unanimous consent that it may be considered. I was absent in the committee-room of appropriations when the order was passed this morning in reference to adverse reports. That is a question which was decided the other day on the passage of a bill like it in another case. I ask unanimous consent to take it up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to proceed at this time to the consideration of the pension bill mentioned by him adversely reported.

Mr. JACKSON. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is objection.

Mr. DAWES. I will state to the Senate that I only ask it because I was absent in the committee-room of the Committee on Appropriations; that is the only reason why I ask it. I do not want to have the rule set aside for me; I only ask it on that ground.

Mr. JACKSON. I will state to the Senator from Massachusetts that the Senate a few moments ago determined not to take up any of these adverse reports.

Mr. DAWES. I know they did.

Mr. JACKSON. I object to it. We want to get on to other cases.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is objection. The Secretary will report the first House bill favorably reported.

SUSAN SHEARER.

Mr. PLATT. If there is no objection, I should like to have House bill 3322, for the relief of Susan Shearer, indefinitely postponed. The report is adverse to it, but it appears on the Calendar as having been favorably reported. It is order of business No. 1193. There was an adverse report in the House and in the Senate also, and it may as well be disposed of. I move that the bill be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). The Chair hears no objection, and the bill will be indefinitely postponed.

JOHN R. SMITH.

Mr. BLAIR. In the last print of the Calendar there is a disarrangement of cases. It will be found that cases 35 and 36 are in the index, and I call attention to No. 1221, a bill for the relief of John R. Smith. There is an adverse report, but I had before the action of the committee drawn a favorable report when the case was referred to me, but it was disapproved by the committee, and my report has in some way got among the papers, and it appears to be printed as the report of the committee. It is so on the files of the Senate. It is a mistake, and I ask that the document be withdrawn from the files.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection that order will be entered.

Mr. BECK. I do not know what it is. I object to everything but the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR] asks for the withdrawal of a favorable report not adopted by the committee. The Chair hears no objection, and the order is entered.

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] is interested in the case, and I will say to him that my own opinion is favorable and so I drew the report; but the committee were adverse. My opinion has got among the papers and appears to be printed as a favorable report by the committee and has been so distributed. I only ask that entries showing how the mistake occurred be made, and I suppose the report as such ought to be withdrawn.

Mr. VOORHEES. There can be no objection to that; but I thought the case was being brought up for action, and I want to be heard on it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The correction desired by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR] will be made.

LAURA C. P. HASKINS.

Mr. McMILLAN. I desire to call attention to order of business No. 1026, being the bill (S. 771) granting a pension to Laura C. P. Haskins. There is an adverse report, and the bill was postponed indefinitely and subsequently reconsidered. I ask now that the case may be passed for the session, as I may be absent in the Committee on Commerce for some time.

Mr. PLATT. That is the order of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Those pension bills reported adversely are not being considered.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7049) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes, and had receded from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2 and 3 to the said bill further insisted upon by the Senate.

ALABAMA MINERAL LANDS.

Mr. BECK. The first bill I can find on the Calendar reported favorably from the House is order of business 1022.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the first House bill favorably reported.

The ACTING SECRETARY. "A bill (H. R. 4757) to exclude the public lands in Alabama from the operation of the laws relating to mineral lands."

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is that the first House bill beginning where we left off on the Calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary reports to the Chair that it was under consideration at the last time the Senate was proceeding with the Calendar.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That makes it right, then.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

Mr. INGALLS. Is there any report in that case, Mr. President?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is no printed report.

Mr. INGALLS. I should like to hear any communication from the General Land Office.

Mr. MORGAN. There is a printed report.

Mr. INGALLS. I should like to hear it read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read if there is one. The Chair is informed that there is a report on the Senate bill similar to this, but no written or printed report upon this particular bill.

Mr. INGALLS. Let us hear the report on the Senate bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the report on the Senate bill.

Mr. HOAR. Was the report favorable or adverse?

Mr. MORGAN. It is a unanimous favorable report of the committee.

The Acting Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. MORGAN April 20, 1882:

The Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred Senate bill 140, have had the same under consideration and report the same back with a substitute therefor, entitled "A bill to exclude the public lands in Alabama from the operation of the laws relating to mineral lands," and recommend its passage.

The General Land Office, acting on the report of F. Winter, a geologist and special agent, made in March, 1879, designated a section of country in Alabama, of coal lands, which covered an area of over 260 miles square, and known as the "Warrior coal-field," and the Coosa and Cahaba coal-fields, and the public lands in this entire region were thereafter held for his disposal under the act of March 3, 1873.

According to Mr. Winter's estimate the entire area (of which a considerable part had passed into private ownership) amounted to 1,537,280 acres of coal lands, and 224,000 acres of iron lands; nearly all of which was taken up before the date of the act of May, 1872, regulating the disposal of mineral lands. Mr. Winter's reports state that not more than one-third of the coal-land area would probably be of any value for mining purposes.

Upon these reports of Mr. Winter the Secretary of the Interior made the following order:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, August 2, 1879.

SIR: I have received your letter of June 10, 1879, inclosing the reports and exhibits of Special Agent Winters, who was detailed in pursuance of instructions contained in my letter of September 11, 1878, to investigate the coal and iron lands of the State of Alabama.

From these reports and exhibits it appears that there is a large quantity of coal and iron lands in said State, some of which, in the opinion of Mr. Winters, are very valuable, and some of them of little or no value. The statute, however, fixes the value of coal, as well as other mineral lands, and without further legislation, I do not think that we are authorized to dispose of any of said lands at prices other than those established by law. Some of the lands are now considered valuable because of the means of transportation and other advantages. Others are not now considered valuable for the want of means of transportation, and because also of the expense of operating the mines. These difficulties in relation to the latter class of lands mentioned may be overcome in the future, but whether this be so or not, it can not change your duty nor mine.

So far as the lands are mineral they should be withheld from sale and disposal, no matter what their value at present may appear to be, until further legislation is had upon the subject. The lands not mineral in said district should be offered for sale and disposal in accordance with existing law.

I herewith return the papers transmitted in order that you may take such action in the premises as you may deem necessary.

Very respectfully,

C. SCHURZ, Secretary.

The COMMISSIONER OF THE GENERAL LAND OFFICE.

The necessity of legislation is clearly indicated in this order, to relieve this large area of country from the incubus of a law, to more than two-thirds of which it could not have been intended to apply.

If a third of this area may have any value as a mining region, it is clear that two-thirds of it is only fit for agricultural purposes.

All the public lands in this area were offered for entry at 12½ cents per acre, under the graduation acts of Congress, and only a small part of it was taken up. It was then known as a country in which there were valuable beds of coal and iron, but little was known, or is yet known, as to the localities in which mining could be done with profit.

No land has been taken up in Alabama under the act of March 3, 1873; nor has any land been disposed of under that law in any other States of the Union, except in Oregon, where 2,154 acres have been entered, and 185 acres in California.

The estimated area of coal lands in the land States is about 2,000,000 acres. So that this law is practically a failure as a means of disposing of coal lands. It has only retarded settlement and defeated commercial and manufacturing industry in the regions set apart as "coal lands."

The General Land Office, in order to prevent these evils, as far as possible, has permitted the entry of lands, under the homestead laws, within the "coal-land" limits, where persons would make oath that the lands claimed under the homestead laws were non-mineral in character. This practice has led to much abuse, and is a fruitful source of litigation and disquietude as to the validity of titles, even after patents have issued.

The bill reported herewith, as to its provisions, has the approval of the Department of the Interior, as will be seen from the letter of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, appended to this report.

Of the 1,683,280 acres in the areas that are included in the coal-land limits, in all the States and Territories, as already defined by the orders of the Interior Department, Alabama furnishes 1,573,280 acres, leaving only 146,000 acres as yet actually classified as "coal-lands" in all the other States and Territories.

In Michigan, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Missouri, and Kansas, Congress has repealed the acts of March 3, 1873, and May 10, 1872, as to coal and other mineral lands, leaving Alabama as the only land State that has any considerable area of coal and iron lands east of the Rocky Mountains under the restrictions of these laws.

Grants to railroad companies in Alabama, made prior to 1860, have given them a large quantity of coal and iron lands, which they sell at prices that prevent any sale of the public domain at the prices fixed by law for such lands. This gives to those railroad companies the practical monopoly of the coal lands in the State, which is an injury to the commerce of the State and a decided obstruction to its growth and prosperity, and the only relief seems to be that which is proposed in this bill.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, Washington, February 28, 1882.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith copy of report on House bill 19, "to exclude the State of Alabama from the provisions of the act of Congress entitled 'An act to promote the development of the mining resources of the United States,' approved May 10, 1872," by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, to whom you referred it for an expression of his opinion.

Very respectfully,

S. J. KIRKWOOD, Secretary.

Hon. JOHN VAN VOORHIS,
Chairman Committee on Mines and Mining, House of Representatives.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., February 18, 1882.

SIR: I have received from Hon. JOHN VAN VOORHIS, chairman of House Committee on Mines and Mining, his letter of 8th instant, inclosing House bill No. 19, "A bill to exclude the State of Alabama from the provisions of the act of Congress entitled 'An act to promote the development of the mining resources of the United States,' approved May 10, 1872," and asking whether in my opinion it ought to pass, and whether it is necessary to incorporate a proviso similar to one indorsed in pencil on said bill.

I have the honor, subject to your approval, to submit the following:

The lands in Alabama have been in market for many years, but until a comparatively recent date the lands were not probably considered of special value, because of their mineral character.

The main information officially brought to this office of the mineral character of these lands was derived from an examination made in the field by a special agent and geologist from this office in the years 1878 and 1879.

His examination extended over portions of the Montgomery and Huntsville land district.

He reported a considerable list of land as containing iron and coal, some as valuable and others as of little value. No entries of coal or iron have as yet been made in said State, although all the lands reported by him were withheld from disposition except under the laws applicable to the sale of coal and mineral lands.

It is probable that the coal and iron deposits are of considerable extent, as it is a matter of general notoriety that extensive iron-works and mining have during the last few years been established there. Probably such deposits are not more extensive than in Missouri, in which State, as well as in Kansas, by act of May 5, 1876, all lands were made subject to disposal as agricultural lands.

The policy of so disposing of the public lands that large areas will be owned by single individuals or corporations may well be doubted, or at least merits careful consideration. It is also to be borne in mind that a too restrictive policy is a substantial inducement to fraud, and at the best may postpone but briefly the acquisition of large titles by individuals who command the necessary capital and enterprise.

This result would be more likely to occur in a State like Alabama, where there is doubtless so much land which contains coal and iron, but the amount and value of the deposits in which are so uncertain.

The policy of the proposed law is one which it is the peculiar province of Congress to determine, and concerning which I prefer to make no recommendation.

If, however, it should be deemed advisable to place Alabama on the same footing as Missouri and Kansas in the respect indicated, I would recommend the inclosed draft of a bill as a substitute.

The proviso for a public sale of the lands supposed to be valuable for their mineral deposits I would think wise, because it will enable the Government to realize the largest possible price for the lands.

Said substitute, letter, and bill are herewith inclosed.

Very respectfully,

N. C. MCFARLAND, Commissioner.

Hon. S. J. KIRKWOOD,
Secretary of the Interior.

COMMITTEE ON COMMERCE.

Mr. McMILLAN. I ask leave of the Senate that the Committee on Commerce be permitted to sit during the sessions of the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That can not be done. We shall lose you entirely. Is that motion in order pending a bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Not strictly while a bill is being considered; but if there be no objection the Chair will entertain the motion, and unless there be objection the order will be made. The Chair hears no objection, and the order is made.

ALABAMA MINERAL LANDS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4757) to exclude the public lands in Alabama from the operation of the laws relating to mineral lands.

Mr. MORGAN. I ask now that the Secretary read a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Teller, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The letter will be read.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, Washington, July 10, 1882.

SIR: I have received your letter of the 7th instant, and the inclosed copy of Senate bill 140, "to regulate the disposal of coal lands in the State of Alabama," with the report of the Senate committee thereon. The report contains a letter from my immediate predecessor, transmitting a letter from the Commissioner of the General Land Office, who submitted draft of bill on the subject, which you state is embodied in Senate bill 140.

The bill meets my entire approval, and will, I hope, become a law.

Very respectfully,

H. M. TELLER, Secretary.

Hon. JOHN T. MORGAN, U. S. Senate.

Mr. MORGAN. I now ask the Secretary to read a joint resolution of the Legislature of Alabama, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be read.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

[S. 131.]

Enrolled joint resolution of the senate and house of representatives of the General Assembly of Alabama.

Resolved by the senate (the house of representatives concurring), That the Senators from Alabama in the Congress of the United States are hereby requested to vote for, and procure, if possible, the passage of the act now pending in the Senate, providing for the disposal of mineral lands in Alabama.

GEO. P. HARRISON, JR.,
President of the Senate.
WILBER F. FOSTER,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Approved December 12, 1882.

E. A. O'NEAL, Governor.

I, Ellis Phelan, secretary of state, hereby certify that the foregoing is a true copy of the original joint resolution, in relation to mineral lands in Alabama, as the same is on file in my office.

Witness my hand and the great seal of the State, at Montgomery, Alabama, this 15th December, 1882.

[SEAL.] ELLIS PHELAN, Secretary of State.

Mr. MORGAN. I regret that I have any statement to make at all; but I do it more in justice to my colleague and myself than for the purpose of giving the Senate more full information, because the information in this report is about as full as it can be made, I believe, on this subject. Coal lands in Alabama have been known to exist there for a great many years, as far back as the territorial settlement of the country. Under the pre-emption laws and laws for the sale of public lands, and especially under the graduation act, these lands were brought into market, and many of them passed into private ownership, some as low as 12½ cents an acre. They were taken up by persons who emigrated to a rather poor country, on what is termed the sand mountain of Alabama. They were taken up for farming purposes. Little farmers came from Georgia, South Carolina, North Carolina, and poorer countries to settle there. They had no expectation that the minerals that were in this land would ever be of any value, though they were used in blacksmiths' shops and were known to exist. The country having become occupied in that way railroad companies pushed their enterprises along under land grants from the Government of the United States around the borders of this coal-field, the Memphis and Charleston road running on the north, the Mobile and Ohio road on the west, the Alabama and Great Southern road on the south, and the South and North Alabama road (now the Louisville and Nashville) on the east. Each of these was a land-grant road. The railroads took up large bodies of this coal land, having grants of alternate sections for fifteen miles wide on either side. I believe only one of these railroads was in operation and had been constructed before the war. That was the Memphis and Charleston road. I am not quite sure as to the Mobile and Ohio road; but that road has not taken any of the coal land, because it has just fringed along the coal measures, and has scarcely lapped over the border of the coal measure at all. The other two roads—the Alabama and Chattanooga and the North and South Alabama Railroads—have been built since. So this coal region has been circumvallated by these railway lines that have the outer boundary of the entire coal system there, and have a monopoly of the coal lands in that region of country. This fact prevents, of course, the development of that country, and has done so all the time.

These railway companies have not desired that the coal lands in the interior of this seam should come into competition with them, and so far no railway enterprises have been pushed into the interior of this region any more than seven or eight miles at the outside. The result is that Congress by making these grants to the railway companies has thrown the virtual control of the whole of this coal area into the power of these companies. The legislation of Congress, if nothing else, has made it impossible that the interior of it should be taken up in competition with companies that have received their land grants for nothing.

This matter of entering up the land by small settlers went on until the act of 1873 was passed, which provided that the coal lands of the United States undisposed of lying within fifteen miles of any completed railroad should not thereafter be sold at less than $20 an acre, and the coal land lying outside of the fifteen-mile limit of the railways should not be sold at less than $10 an acre, and providing a system of pre-emptions for corporations or companies or copartnerships and for individuals, by which they might settle up the lands and take them at those prices, gaining a pre-emption of certain parcels.

The taking up of this land in forty, eighty, and one hundred and twenty acres, and the like, under the different acts of Congress has broken the coal-field up, so that there is no very considerable body of lands to be found in any one place in juxtaposition. The result is that not one foot of that land has ever been taken up under this act of 1873. More than that, very little of the lands of the United States in all of our broad domain that have been segregated from the public domain as coal lands have been taken up at all.

The act of 1873 has become an incubus upon the disposal of these lands, the products of which are so absolutely essential for the progress and development of our civilization.

I am not here for the purpose, however, of asking that that law shall be repealed. I am only asking that Alabama shall have like privileges which Congress has granted to the States of Kansas, Missouri, Nebraska, Michigan, and other States, without hesitancy, relieving those States from the burdens of this law. All of the coal lands in these different States and all mineral lands of every description, including the finest of iron ore, have been, by act of Congress, relieved from the shackles of the act of 1873, and the people have been allowed to go on to take up the lands; to invite capital from other countries to go in there, start manufacturing industries, and to turn out coal and other minerals for the benefit of commerce at large.

There is no reason, I think, that can be stated why the State of Alabama should be kept beneath this law when the other States have been released from it. I know of no facts operating in behalf of the other States that Alabama may not equally claim the benefit of. Indeed, sir, the matter has gone so far down there, capital having settled itself around this margin in various places, that it has become more a matter of interest to people in other States who wish to go there and take up the lands and engage in these industries than it has to the people who immediately occupy that country; very much more so.

The only objection that I have heard urged at all to the passage of this bill has come from what I conceive to be an interested source. It is that certain frauds have been perpetrated there in the taking up of the public lands; that men have availed themselves of the homestead system and the pre-emption system for the purpose of taking up these lands by fraud and perjury and in contravention of the statute. Suppose I should admit that that has been done, and yet in making that admission I think I should go far beyond the facts. Suppose I should make that admission, yet we should find that not so much fraud has been perpetrated in that section of Alabama as the reports made to this session of Congress show have been perpetrated in almost every land district in the United States, especially in those places where public lands are valuable. I have before me now a report sent to us by the Secretary of the Interior, in which he goes into a detailed statement of the frauds perpetrated on the land system, and in comparing this statement with what is alleged to have taken place in Alabama I find that we become almost tabula rasa by comparison.

Now, sir, I wish to state to the Senate—and I feel called upon to do it because a person has sent a letter here impeaching my motives in this case and those of my colleague and those of Mr. FORNEY, in the House of Representatives from that State—I wish to state that nothing could induce me to put any cover whatever upon or over any fraud that has been or can be perpetrated against the Government of the United States. I have not lived this long to get my consent even to be inattentive to a question of this kind, whether it concerns the people of my own State or the people of other States.

I will further remark that the allegations which are made in this very report in respect to the frauds which have been committed in that State do not relate to men of my own party. They relate to individuals who are distinguished men and who I take great pleasure in saying are very honorable and high-toned men, who do not belong to the political party to which I belong; and if I could have any malevolence at all in connection with this subject it would be in propagating charges that are brought by other persons for the purpose of casting odium upon them, their motives, and their conduct.

The courts of the country stand open, fully equipped with all necessary statutes and regulations, for the punishment of any fraud that may have occurred. For more than two years a person directly interested in getting up litigation, out of which he is to make profits as attorney, has had the full opportunity of prosecuting these cases before the grand juries of the Federal courts in Alabama; he has brought witnesses from great distances; the Government of the United States, almost without stint, has supplied money to carry on that operation; and the result is, according to the report of George Turner, who signs himself as special counsel for the United States, that the indictments found at Huntsville were, for conspiracy seven, for perjury five; at Montgomery, for conspiracy two, for perjury six. That is the result of two years of active and diligent search into this matter.

Mr. President, the Government of the United States is represented in that State by men who are reasonably well qualified to discharge the public duties that come before judicial tribunals, and these gentlemen have also been at work and they have had my hearty, earnest, faithful co-operation. If it can be shown that any man has been guilty in Alabama of a violation of these laws, I say in the name of justice and right let him be punished for it.

At the last Congress the Senate passed a bill upon this subject in the exact language of the statute passed in reference to Kansas, which was simply a bill that hereafter the public lands in Alabama should be disposed of as agricultural lands any law to the contrary notwithstanding.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That was not the language of the Kansas bill, I think.

Mr. MORGAN. That is about it. That is the substance of it, I think.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The phrase "agricultural" does not occur in the Kansas act, I think.

Mr. MORGAN. Yes; that occurs—"agricultural lands." I think so, at least.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes; I see by examining that the Senator is right. It does say so.

Mr. MORGAN. At this Congress I introduced that bill again. It went to the Committee on Public Lands, and received a very thorough consideration. In the mean time the same bill had been introduced in the House, referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and the Public Lands Committee sent that bill to the Interior Department.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Please do not state what took place in the House.

Mr. MORGAN. I am trying to state what took place outside of the House.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Oh, no.

Mr. MORGAN. I am not trying to influence the action of the Senate. I am trying to get at a statement of fact to show how the bill came to be in the state it is now.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But I beg the Senator not to allude to proceedings in the House of Representatives. I know we have been in the habit of doing it, but it is a very bad practice.

Mr. MORGAN. I am not referring to anything that took place in the House of Representatives except to a bill introduced there, and that the Public Lands Committee sent that bill to the Interior Department. Is there any harm in that?

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is contrary to parliamentary practice and ought not to be done.

Mr. MORGAN. I was not aware of it. I confess that there are some sensibilities on that subject which are so nice that they are entirely beyond me. I was stating nothing certainly with a view of influencing the action of the Senate except this: I wanted to show that the bill in its present form was a bill prepared at the Interior Department, not prepared by me—it was prepared by the Commissioner of the General Land Office; there is no harm in that statement—and that bill was prepared in full view of the fact that this investigation was going on in Alabama and that these indictments were pending there, and with a view that these indictments and the persons charged should have no mode of escape by the bill.

Mr. HAWLEY. May I ask a question for information?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. HAWLEY. In that letter of Mr. McFarland, the Commissioner of the General Land Office, dated February 18, 1882, he says:

If, however, it should be deemed advisable to place Alabama on the same footing as Missouri and Kansas in the respect indicated, I would recommend the inclosed draft of a bill as a substitute.

Mr. MORGAN. That is this bill.

Mr. HAWLEY. That is what you speak of as being afterward substituted?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. McFarland, the Commissioner, does not recommend it.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. McFarland expresses no opinion on the policy; Mr. Kirkwood expressed no distinct opirion on the policy; but Mr. Teller followed with a very decided affirmative recommendation of the policy of the measure, and Mr. Teller has given the subject a most thorough and intelligent consideration.

When the Commissioner of the General Land Office under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior prepared a brief bill that the House has passed and sent here, I thought that all had been done that could be done—all that was necessary to be done to protect the Government. I can afford to state as a lawyer that there is not the slightest doubt, at least in my own mind, that the passage of this bill can not have the effect to relieve any person in the world from any crime that he has committed or to cover any crime that he may commit against the public land laws.

I have been long enough upon the Committee on Public Lands to know one fact. I have heard it stated very frequently by the Secretary of the Interior, by the Commissioner, and by other officers of the General Land Office, that our land system is assailed with fraud and contrivances every day and every hour. There is no doubt about that. It has been a matter that seems to be beyond the reach of human power absolutely to extirpate these frauds.

Suppose that five cases of perjury or seven of conspiracy, or suppose that fifty have occurred in this large area of country, can that be a reason why the Government of the United States should decline to allow the people who are acting honestly and faithfully in that State and elsewhere to have the benefit of this land? We see by experience that they will not get it. They will not take it. Never has one acre of land been sold in that way under the law of the United States rating it at from $10 to $20 an acre since the law was passed in 1873; and that being so, what is this statute but a mere embargo on the sale of the land, a regular lock-up of the resources of that great country against enterprise from all sections of the Union? Gentlemen from Pennsylvania and from other Northern States have gone down there and they have invested their money in various places. They desire to enlarge their possessions. This bill provides that this land shall be put up to public sale in 40-acre tracts according to the regulations of the law and the Department.

Mr. EDMUNDS. With the consent of my friend from Alabama I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business for a few minutes.

Mr. MORGAN. That will not displace this bill?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Not at all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had concurred in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 1410) to amend the pension laws by increasing the pensions of soldiers and sailors who have lost an arm or a leg in the service.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. 7115) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Thames River near, New London, in the State of Connecticut, and declare it a post-route; and

A bill (H. R. 7682) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River, at some accessible point within ten miles below and five miles above the city of Kansas City, Missouri.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

The Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 3 hours and 12 minutes spent in executive business the doors were reopened.

ALABAMA MINERAL LANDS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GARLAND in the chair). The bill (H. R. 4757) to exclude the public lands in Alabama from the operation of the laws relating to mineral lands is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President——

Mr. MORGAN. I am entitled to the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama had the floor on the pending bill when the Senate went into executive session. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. MORGAN. If the Senator from Iowa can not do his business at any other time than this I shall yield the floor to him with the universal understanding that by doing so I do not yield the precedence of the bill which is now before the Senate. I want to say to the Senate that the Senator from Vermont came to me and asked me to yield the floor in order that he might move for an executive session. I did so understanding that the bill was not to be interrupted.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is not. It stands just as it did. My friend is on the floor and he is entitled to go on.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the state of the case.

Mr. PLUMB. Let me make a suggestion to the Senator from Alabama.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. PLUMB. The Senator knows that the time of the Senate is precious, and he knows that if his bill, in addition to whatever opposition it may encounter, encounters the feeling that it is obstructing the legislation of this body, it will undoubtedly come to an untimely end. I therefore beg to ask him if he is not willing to have a vote on this bill, which I think the Senate understand now as well as it will after three or four hours' debate.

Mr. MORGAN. I am willing to have a vote.

Mr. EDMUNDS. There will have to be something said about other aspects of the case.

Mr. MORGAN. If we can have a vote on the bill I am entirely willing to yield the floor.

Mr. EDMUNDS. There can not be a vote without discussion.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I may want to say a word on this bill, but I should prefer not to do it just now.

Mr. BLAIR. I appeal to the Senator from Alabama to allow a moment during which the resolution which provides for the printing of the regular annual report for the year 1881 of the Commissioner of Education may be taken from the table and passed. It is necessary it should go to the House, or the printing of the report for that year will entirely fail. It will not lead to debate, and it should pass now. I have been trying for several days to get the floor to call it up.

Mr. MORGAN. I would yield to the Senator from New Hampshire if I felt that I could do so in justice to myself personally; and I wish to say to him that I have been censured in Alabama very heavily because I have not asked the Senate to consider this bill.

Mr. BLAIR. Will the Senator then allow me to state that under the order of the Senate the pension bills would have consumed the entire residue of the session, but being appealed to by the honorable Senator from Kentucky I consented to the postponement, which is the destruction of the bills for this session of some twenty-five or thirty contested pension cases, in many of which I feel a very deep personal interest, and where I thought great injustice was being done by delay. I did it in the interest of the public service, and it was in consequence of that that the Senator is on the floor at this moment. I have been trying for a long time to get the opportunity simply of having this ordinary resolution passed providing for the printing of this annual report. I think under the circumstances the Senate and the Senator ought to grant this unanimous consent which I desire.

Mr. MORGAN. Any consent of that kind is death to this bill. It will displace the bill, and it will require unanimous consent to get it back.

Mr. BLAIR. I do not wish to take the Senator from the floor. I simply ask his indulgence to let this resolution be passed. It will not take five minutes, and I agree that there shall be no discussion.

Mr. MORGAN. If the Senate of the United States want to vote down this bill that I have been advocating to-day, let them do it. That will exonerate me to my own constituents. I have never asked a Senator in the middle of an argument on a case that was taken up by the Senate in regular order to yield the floor that I might pass a bill.

Now, I have stated to the Senator from New Hampshire that I have strong personal reasons why I can not do this, that I should be censured very greatly if I should permit an opportunity to have a vote on this bill pass. I would rather lose the bill than not do what my constituents and my own Legislature require of me in this respect.

Mr. BLAIR. I have stated this case to the Senator and to the Senate. As soon as he yields the floor I will once again, if I can get the floor, ask unanimous consent for action on the resolution.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I desire to say a few words after the Senator from Alabama concludes.

Mr. MORGAN. I wish the opportunity of saying a very few words on this bill. I yielded to the Senator from Vermont to go into executive session because I thought my duty to the country required it.

Now, I wish to say only a very few words further. When this bill was first introduced by me into this body, a bill copied from the statutes in reference to Kansas and Missouri, it provided:

> That the coal lands of the United States within the State of Alabama shall be hereafter subject to disposal as agricultural lands, any law to the contrary notwithstanding.

That was my preference. I desired that bill much before the one that I am now advocating. I have described to the Senate that the Interior Department were not satisfied with the bill. They said that these lands had become more valuable in consequence of improvements at Birmingham and in that vicinity and in consequence of the fact of railway communication having been opened all around the margin of these coal-fields. Consequently they said that the fair way to dispose of these lands was for the Government to get the most money out of them, and to do that at public sale, and thereupon they included all mineral lands—coal lands, and all—and proposed to expose them to public sale, by the following provision:

> That within the State of Alabama all public lands, whether mineral or otherwise, shall be subject to disposal only as agricultural lands: Provided, however, That all lands which have heretofore been reported to the General Land Office as containing coal and iron shall first be offered at public sale: And provided further, That any bona fide entry under the provisions of the homestead law of lands within said State heretofore made may be patented without reference to an act approved May 10, 1872, entitled "An act to promote the development of the mining resources of the United States," in cases where the persons making application for such patents have in all other respects complied with the homestead law relating thereto.

That is the bill of the Land Office. That is the method which they think is best for the disposal of these lands, open competition in open market where all persons who desire to purchase may come, and where the sales are to be conducted precisely as they have been in every other case of public-land sales in the United States.

It is said that that may lead to combinations, to a monopoly. I do not see how it is possible that it can do so; but if it does do so there is no other way you can dispose of the public lands by which you will prevent it. If you leave them alone and at the present price of $10 or $20 an acre according to the distance from a railway, we find that agents of the Government are reporting that frauds occur, the value of the lands tempting persons to make transfers. The department can not allow that to go on. It involves the whole country in litigation and in strife. A country that ought now to be the habitation of peaceful and prosperous industries is one that is covered all over with strife and litigation.

Therefore, the department has selected this as the best method of disposing of these lands. I have yielded my concurrence to that. The House has done so by voting this bill and sending it here. It is the best thing that can be done now. It is the only thing that can be wisely done at any time. Let the capital come from where it may, let men come from where they may, and attend the land sales and buy these lands.

Now, I wish to say that neither my political nor my personal friends, as it turns out in the South or elsewere, are men of large capital; on the contrary, the people who support me and who support my colleague are most of them people of very moderate means. We have no powers of combination among us, because we have not got the money. If combinations come into that area from any direction at all, they will come from abroad and not from Alabama. I would gladly prevent them. The only chance to sell the lands is in forty acres at a time, or in the subdivisions required by law, and let those go there and buy them who desire to do so, and who will pay the Government the most money. That is fair and that is right.

These lands, as I have stated, have been considerably entered upon, largely entered upon by men who have gone there for homesteading and other purposes long before the act of 1873 was passed. These men have their patents. The field is broken up in this way, and it is impossible that combinations should exist to any great extent for the reason that these intervening forty, eighty, and one hundred and twenty-acre tracts of land will prevent them from taking place. This is the only thing I know of that we can do for that section of country to bring these lands into market, and to prevent that which occurs every day now.

The railroad companies that have the monopoly of the coal lands within the limits we have granted to them for nothing have now got the demand for coal to such an exorbitant amount as that they are not supplying much more than half that the furnaces there need. They raise the prices at will and pleasure. When you keep land at $20 an acre within the fifteen-mile limit, it makes every acre of coal land that the railroad companies have got from the United States Government worth $20; it brings prices up and there is no chance to compete with them otherwise than to pay them their prices for their coal lands. The result of our own legislation is that by it we have put the monopoly of these coal lands into the hands of the railroad companies.

I have remarked to the Senate that I am not here advocating any friend at all, neither a personal friend nor a political friend, in respect to this bill. My Legislature have taken the thing into consideration. They have canvassed it; they have passed resolutions requesting my colleague and myself to vote for it. I have petitions and letters in great number from men who know the sentiment and wishes of the people of that country, and they all say "pass the bill." Opposed to it there are but two or three men and they are officers of the United States Government who are now making a living out of the strifes that exist in that country.

That is the case, Mr. President, and I regret very much that I have been compelled to occupy so much time.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask unanimous consent to lay this bill aside informally that I may ask for the passage of a joint resolution which passed the House several weeks ago relating to compensation of employés of the House. The Senate Committee on Appropriations reported the resolution with amendments. I ask to withdraw the amendments of the committee and have the resolution passed as it came from the House.

Mr. MORGAN. Will the Senator allow me to inquire of the Chair whether if that is yielded to it will displace the bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Not if it is done by unanimous consent.

Mr. ALLISON. I asked unanimous consent.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear this matter explained.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be read, subject to objection.

DEFICIENCIES IN HOUSE SALARIES.

Mr. ALLISON. Some time ago the House of Representatives passed a joint resolution for a deficiency in reference to their employés. We added to it an amendment providing for a deficiency for our employés.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Has the Senate voted in the amendment?

Mr. ALLISON. No, the Senate has taken no action. The Committee on Appropriations proposed an amendment. The Committee on Appropriations now intend to put this amendment on the regular deficiency bill and it is said to be important that this House resolution should pass. I ask that it may be passed without amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Does the Senator ask unanimous consent to take it from the Calendar out of its order, being a House resolution?

Mr. ALLISON. I do.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have no objection.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (H. Res. 324) to provide for the deficiencies in the appropriations for salaries of officers, clerks, messengers, and others in the service of the House of Representatives for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883.

The amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations was, to add to the joint resolution the following clause:

That the following sums, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same are hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay necessary expenses of the Senate for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, namely: For salaries of officers, clerks, messengers, and others, $1,377.20; for clerks to committees, and pages, $9,523; for furniture and repairs of furniture, $1,200; for miscellaneous items, $4,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment was rejected.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BECK. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] is not aware perhaps that the sundry civil bill is here, with a message asking for a committee of conference.

Mr. ALLISON. Then I ask that the bill be laid before the Senate, and that the Senate agree to the conference asked by the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives non-concurring in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7595) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes, and asking a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the House.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent the Presiding Officer was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. ALLISON, Mr. HALE, and Mr. BECK, were appointed.

REPORT OF THE COMMISSIONER OF EDUCATION.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. BLAIR. I ask unanimous consent to take from the table the resolution relative to printing the annual report of the Commissioner of Education, that it may be disposed of at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection the pending measure will be informally laid aside and the resolution referred to by the Senator from New Hampshire will be read for information.

The Acting Secretary read the resolution, as follows:

Be it resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the report of the Commissioner of Education for 1881 be printed, and 4,000 additional copies for the use of the Senate, 8,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 13,000 copies for distribution by the commissioner.

Mr. BLAIR. This resolution passed the Senate with an amendment reducing the number of copies originally called for, which was 20,000, to 13,000. That was done after a very close vote in the Senate, and the resolution thus amended went to the House. Immediately after the resolution had gone to the House the honorable chairman of the Committee on Printing, the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ANTHONY], came to me and said that on further consideration he had no opposition to the full number, and should I call up the resolution again he would make no objection to its passing for the full 20,000, which the interests of the bureau and of the country require. I entered a motion to reconsider at the time, and I now ask that the vote whereby the resolution was amended to diminish the number from 20,000 to 13,000 be reconsidered, and the resolution put on its passage.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion to reconsider.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution is before the Senate. The question is on the resolution as introduced.

The resolution as agreed to is as follows:

Be it resolved by the Senate of the United States (the House of Representatives concurring), That of the report of the Commissioner of Education for 1881 there be printed 4,000 copies for the use of the Senate; 8,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives; and 20,000 copies for distribution by the Commissioner.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. LOGAN. I present the conference report on the Army appropriation bill.

The Acting Secretary read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7077) "making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes," having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 3, 7, 9, 18, 27, 30, 31, and 36.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 6, 8, 10, 12, 13, 19, 21, 22, 23, 24, 26, 28, 29, 32, 33, 34, 35, and 38; and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 1: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed, insert "$1,750;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 4: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 4, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the number proposed by said amendment insert "thirty;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 5: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After the word "line" in said amendment, insert the following: "And no more than thirty aids-de-camp shall be paid as such in addition to their regular pay in the line."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 11: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 11, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the number proposed by said amendment insert "seventy-five;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 14: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 14, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment insert "$11,900,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 15: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 15, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be stricken out by said amendment, insert the following:

"Provided, That vacancies that may hereafter occur in the Pay Corps of the Army in the grades of lieutenant-colonel and major by reason of death, resignation, dismissal, or retirement, shall not be filled by original appointment until the Pay Corps shall by such vacancies be reduced to forty paymasters, and the number of the Pay Corps shall then be established at forty and no more; and hereafter vacancies occurring in the Quartermaster's and Commissary's Departments of the Army may, in the discretion of the President, be filled from civil life."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 16: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 16, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the number stated in said amendment insert "seventy-five;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 17: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 17, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the number of rations as fixed by said amendment insert "10,125,000 rations;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 20: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 20, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment insert "$2,940,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 25: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 25, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment insert "$100,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 37: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 37, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the word "employés," where it occurs in said amendment, and in lieu thereof insert the word "clerks;" and the Senate agree to the same.

JOHN A. LOGAN,
P. B. PLUMB,
M. W. RANSOM,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

BENJ. BUTTERWORTH,
J. C. BURROWS,
E. JNO. ELLIS,
Managers on the part of the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). Will the Senate at this time consider the report of the committee of conference? The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. HARRISON. I should like to ask the Senator from Illinois briefly to explain to us what has been done with some of the principal points of difference, for instance the one as to the Signal Corps. What was done with that?

Mr. LOGAN. There was nothing done with that; it is left in.

Mr. HARRISON. We get no information from the report, because we can not identify the amendments by numbers.

Mr. LOGAN. The amendments as to sums were mostly reductions by the Senate on account of a recalculation of rations. Then in reference to contract surgeons the House fixed the number at fifty, the Senate agreed to eighty, the House insisted on fifty, and the conferees have fixed it at seventy-five. In reference to the Pay Corps, it is left just as the Senate committee and the Senate arranged it. The House insisted on their provision, but now have agreed to the amendment that the Senate proposed.

Mr. HARRISON. How about the matters of general legislation?

Mr. LOGAN. The House recede as to the railroad matter. That is all stricken out. The bill is left pretty much as the Senate agreed to it, with the exceptions I have stated.

Mr. EDMUNDS. There is no provision in it in respect to readjusting the rates of railroad companies?

Mr. LOGAN. None whatever. That was disagreed to by the Senate, and the conferees of the House have receded.

The report was concurred in.

ALABAMA MINERAL LANDS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4757) to exclude the public lands in Alabama from the operation of the laws relating to mineral lands.

Mr. VAN WYCK addressed the Senate. [See Appendix.]

Mr. LOGAN. I do not want to enter into this discussion at all, but this is so remarkable a proceeding, without any precedent whatever, that I must ask the Senator a question. Are these the original papers of the Attorney-General's office?

Mr. VAN WYCK. These are the papers which were sent from the Department.

Mr. LOGAN. That is not the question. I merely want to ask a question or two.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I will tell you as nearly as I can. The resolution required the Department to send copies of vouchers. It was a call on the Secretary of the Treasury, and the resolution required him to send vouchers, items, and how much he paid, and the reason why he paid them, under what authority of law the men were employed and paid; and he sends these papers as a reply to the resolution.

Mr. LOGAN. The Secretary of the Treasury?

Mr. VAN WYCK. Yes, sir.

Mr. LOGAN. The resolution called for these papers?

Mr. VAN WYCK. Copies of vouchers and items.

Mr. LOGAN. The resolution was introduced by the Senator.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Yes. I will read it to the Senator.

Mr. LOGAN. No; the Senator need not read it. These papers have not been referred to any committee?

Mr. VAN WYCK. They have not been referred to any committee.

Mr. LOGAN. They come to the possession of the Senator himself. Is that the idea?

Mr. VAN WYCK. They have come to the possession of the Senate. They are in the possession of the Senate.

Mr. LOGAN. I mean in the possession of the Senate. The Senator does not move to refer them to a committee to investigate the matter?

Mr. VAN WYCK. I intend to do so.

Mr. LOGAN. But he takes the opportunity of making a general attack upon the Attorney-General's Office, without reference to or any examination by a committee, without any report, without regard to anything whatever, except to get this harangue before the country, this attack on the Attorney-General. Is that it?

Mr. VAN WYCK. I will tell you what it is.

Mr. LOGAN. I want to know.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I will explain it.

Mr. LOGAN. I want to know, because this is, I will not say so undignified, but it is so far from the course that I have ever known pursued in the Senate of the United States. Without having anything to say, for I do not propose to enter into this discussion either to attack or defend any one, I must say that for a speech of this kind to be made without any investigation whatever, while this trial is going on here for the prosecution of men for robbing the Government of the United States—if a man outdoors had made the speech, the whole country would have understood that he was the attorney for the defendants.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I will explain it to my friend. I said before he appeared in the Senate this afternoon that on two occasions at the last session I felt it my duty to demand the same information that I have been seeking at this time, and I waited until an expiring day of the session to obtain the information. Matters had been stated as to the manner of conducting the Department of Justice in the payment of special assistants, and I felt it my duty to know the truth of these charges. If it were so that $100 was being paid every day to three or four attorneys I desired to know it, and when I called upon the Treasury Department and they sent their vouchers indorsed by the Attorney-General, it needs no report from any committee. Here are the facts under his own sign manual, and when they show that $150 was paid a day to two or more attorneys it became my duty to make this "harangue," as the Senator chooses to term it, which I proposed to do and have done.

The Senator says that if this harangue was made outside, persons would suppose that it was made by some one as an attorney for the defendant. Is it possible? Is that the way gentlemen would seek or that the Attorney-General would seek to meet the charges? If the statements I have read are true, and they are, because he signed them, if these charges which he admits the truth of affect his management of that department, then he must submit to the consequences. He must subject himself to any arraignment, whatever that arraignment may be. And must we sit by and see the Treasury plundered, as plundered it is, no matter whether by the conspiracy of star-route men or in any other mode, and not raise our voice, forsooth, until the whole thing is done?

I said in that connection that the payment of such a per diem was a temptation, an inducement, to protract the trial of a cause. I said further that in any country where justice was decently administered it could not possibly be that an ordinary criminal prosecution could protract itself as long as this one has done. I speak in no connection with that matter. The matter was brought out by the energy of a former Postmaster-General, and not by the money taken out by these fees of lawyers at $150 a day. That is my position, and I am ready and prepared to stand by it. I desire this matter of taking these extravagant charges from the Treasury to stop.

Look at it a moment. Do you suppose that the Attorney-General in his own private business would employ an attorney at $150 a day and then pay all his expenses? I say that any public officer who will not administer his trust with the same fidelity, with the same honesty, and the same diligence that he would his own private matters is subject to the charges that may follow from pursuing such a course. That is all there is in this matter.

I have not had time to have the papers in response to the resolution referred to a committee so as to have a report made on them. The only opportunity there was was to make just this explanation which has been made. I took occasion when the Senator from Illinois was not here to say that it was our boast that we had punished our own thieves, that we had stopped our own plunder, stopped our own peculation. This matter had ended, and then when it became known that these outrageous charges, these wasteful expenditures had been made, it would have been a good reason to arraign the Republican party, and men with an inquiring turn of mind would come with a microscope in their hands and try to ascertain the cause of Republican defeat.

I desire to call attention to this matter; and as the Senator from Pennsylvania and the Senator from Illinois made some question, I desire that my position shall be understood. What effect is this to have? The Senator from Illinois says that it would be supposed I was an attorney for the defendant; I should like to know what effect this will have? Will gentleman tell me, will any lawyer, will any judge, will any man of common comprehension tell me how this will affect the matter? Suffer this to go on, how will it affect the administration of justice in this city? I ask that these things shall stop. When the Attorney-General is willing to pay one lawyer for less than one year's service as much as he himself is getting for his whole term of service, does that affect the administration of justice? Can it be any worse by any possible means than it is already in this city under the influences which surround it?

Mr. President, if the Senate will excuse me for trespassing thus far on its attention, I ask that the letters of transmittal from the Treasury Department, together with the vouchers numbered 12 here, may be printed and referred to the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Have they not already been printed?

Mr. VAN WYCK. No, sir.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no objection, the order to print will be made.

Mr. EDMUNDS. How came they here if they have not already been presented to the Senate?

Mr. VAN WYCK. They were presented to the Senate but not printed?

Mr. EDMUNDS. All right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the order to print and refer as suggested by the Senator from Nebraska will be entered.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, the casual spectator and auditor will be surprised to hear that the bill before the Senate is Senate bill No. 140, report No. 454, to regulate the disposal of coal lands in the State of Alabama. I desire to occupy the time of the Senate but a very few minutes. There are about forty hours left of this session and very great interests are at stake. I consider it a crime to spend time upon matters not before us.

The bill provides "that within the State of Alabama all public lands, whether mineral or otherwise, shall be subject to disposal only as agricultural lands." Those three lines of themselves show the very great changes made by this bill in the land policy of the United States.

Provided, however—

Says the bill—

That all lands which have heretofore been reported to the General Land Office as containing coal and iron shall first be offered at public sale.

Those lands containing coal and iron in Alabama are of vast extent and enormous value. One comparatively small tract of them has lately been sold for a million dollars. It is evident, then, that the bill is concerned with great interests and with very serious changes in our land policy.

My residence in the East and my interests and connections have not made me very familiar with the land laws of the country, but certain papers were laid in my hands when this bill was first brought up which it seemed to me to be my duty to bring in a general way to the attention of the Senate. I have no feeling or interest whatever in this matter except as a Senator.

I have in my hands a copy of a report made to the General Land Office by one J. H. Perdue, who was a special agent. He noticed the introduction of this particular bill, or perhaps the original one for which this is a substitute, aiming at the same general purpose. The Senator from Alabama, whose motives I never thought of doubting, will excuse me if I read some of the expressions in this almost private letter, an official letter, however. Last May he wrote to Mr. Kirkwood, then Secretary of the Interior, as follows:

This is a fraud attempted to be practiced upon Congress, and for this reason: The lands classed mineral in the first place can never be made agricultural lands, because they are poor and mountainous and too broken and rough for such purposes, and if not so, there is not one out of one hundred acres of said mineral lands that have not at this time some kind of a claim upon it, either a homestead entry or a declaratory statement made fraudulently by and for the use and benefit of the great land sharks in this country. So you may see that the people will not be benefited by such a law, but a few capitalists who are already loaded down with wealth will secure the benefit, and I hope, sir, that you will use all the honorable means in your power to prevent the passage thereof.

If these lands could be put upon the market and give every one an equal chance to enter them, I for one would not object, but this would not be the case as you must know from the reports I have made to the honorable Commissioner of the General Land Office.

I have forwarded to-day to the Commissioner of the General Land Office the affidavit of R. C. Bradley, clerk of the circuit court of Jefferson County, Alabama, which will show that Peters & Co. have paid the fees in about one hundred and thirty-five cases with the agreement that they were to furnish all money to pay fees and to pay for the land at $1.25 per acre, and that they (Peters & Co.) were to have the mineral right to the same. Many of the tracts of land mentioned in the affidavit of the said Bradley have been commuted to cash entries and the mineral right conveyed to the said Peters & Co., and to others as shown by the records in the office of the probate judge of Jefferson County. This is only one firm or corporation that I mention out of many. There are other corporations here that have done quite as large a business in this swindle as Peters & Co. I have twenty-three township plats covering nearly the entire county of Jefferson which show six hundred and twenty-four homestead entries made upon lands classed coal by the geologist. Besides this there are a great many entries of the same kind made upon iron-ore lands. I have investigated about one hundred of these entries and find that in every case they are fraudulent. I consider Jefferson County about a fair average of the mineral lands and of the fraudulent entries. I am fully satisfied that Shelby, Saint Clair, Walker, Tuscaloosa, and Bibb, and probably many other counties, have the same amount of fraudulent entries. The entries in Jefferson County alone will cover about 80,000 acres of coal land worth at the Government price one million and a half dollars, all of which has been wrongfully entered. In addition to this there are other valuable coal lands that are not so classed. For some unaccountable reason they have been overlooked by the geologist. The lands I speak of are in township 17 south, range 3 west, in Jefferson County, and not included in the list I have given before. In this township there is the largest coaling business in Alabama, known as the Pratt mines. From these mines which are situated near the line between sections 19 and 30 and on section 18 are two slopes or shafts sunk from which the coal is being taken out at the rate of 1,000 tons per day. This property has been recently sold, so I am informed, for the sum of $1,000,000; and notwithstanding these mines have been worked for the last three or four years the geologist now reports three hundred and twenty acres of land in this township as coal land, to wit: three forties in section 4; four forties in section 6, and one forty in section 8.

Here is another communication from the same agent:

I will state that the swindle in this section in the way of mineral lands is the greatest that has ever been perpetrated in the United States. Whisky rings and star-routes are small matters compared to this swindle. It will take time, energy, and expense to uncover what has already been done by the large capitalists and corporations in this section, but when accomplished will restore to the Government millions of dollars' worth of mineral land, such as can not be found in any other part of the United States.

He says in another report:

I will state for your information that I have no doubt but what there have been great frauds committed in every county in this State where there are coal or iron lands located, and there is both coal and iron land in every county named in your letter; and, upon investigation, if it is found that there have been fraudulent entries made in each one of these counties in proportion to those made in Saint Clair, Shelby, and Jefferson, the only counties that I have made investigations, it will be found that the fraud is one of great magnitude and of huge proportions, more gigantic than any ever perpetrated in any civilized country or recorded in history.

That is pretty strong, perhaps extravagant language. I do not mean to say that this bill is intended to cover up or assist those at all, but it proposes to throw open to unlimited public sale this whole tract of immensely valuable land. There are comparatively no restrictions in the bill itself. The lands are to be thrown open to private entry, and whether there be anything in the statute that regulates the details of sale I do not know. This changes the statute so, and then they are to be thrown open to public sale, and they shall be subject to disposal only as agricultural lands. How long they are to be thrown open to public sale and under what terms exactly I am sure I can not tell.

At present in Alabama agricultural lands can be obtained under homestead laws and by private purchase to any extent in lots of one hundred and sixty acres or less. Other or mineral lands in Alabama can be obtained under the coal and iron acts in lots of one hundred and sixty acres with the usual limitations. Coal lots of one hundred and sixty acres can be obtained by individuals, and corporations can obtain coal lands in lots of six hundred and forty acres, a whole section. The iron lands can be obtained at from $2 to $5 an acre, and coal lands at $10 to $20 an acre, according to their vicinity to railroads, &c.

There is apparently no difficulty in corporations obtaining whatever mineral lands they may need. There is no limitation more than prevails anywhere upon any person desiring to obtain lands for agricultural purposes.

I have paid more or less attention to the course of the Government in regard to its public lands for twenty-five years, and I have always supposed its generous, wise, careful policy was a matter of great national pride. Therefore my inquiry would naturally be, why in the world this extraordinary and sudden change, and why this throwing over these vast possessions to a sort of public sale that would seem to me to be only a great scramble. The inevitable result will be, I submit to the Senator from Alabama—he understands this and can perhaps explain—it seems to me the inevitable result will be that these inestimable treasures will fall directly into the hands of great wealthy corporations and speculators. Some of these will undoubtedly immediately build furnaces there and other improvements and bring in industrious people from abroad, and in that way the State will be benefited.

I hope those lands will be opened; I would gladly vote for anything that would facilitate their fair, impartial purchase; but it ought not to be a sudden opening to those great firms of wealthy people who are able to make the first grab and swoop up enormous profits. Perhaps by and by somebody will make a speech that will sound like that extraordinary harangue we heard this afternoon, in regard to the errors of the Senator from Alabama and others voting for this bill.

I can not find that the Interior Department is anxious to have this bill passed. I have an indistinct recollection that the Senator from Alabama referred to some letter from some Secretary of the Interior approving it, but certainly the following letter of Mr. Kirkwood, of a year ago, indicated no opinion whatever on his part:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, February 28, 1882.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith copy of report on House bill 19, "To exclude the State of Alabama from the provisions of the act of Congress, entitled 'An act to promote the development of the mining resources of the United States,' approved May 10, 1872," by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, to whom you referred it for an expression of his opinion.

Very respectfully,

S. J. KIRKWOOD, Secretary.

Hon. JOHN VAN VOORHIS,
Chairman Committee on Mines and Mining,
House of Representatives.

The report is by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, to which Mr. Kirkwood referred the bill for an expression of his opinion. Mr. Kirkwood expressed no opinion whatever. Now, I read an extract or two from the report of Commissioner McFarland:

The lands in Alabama have been in market for many years, but until a comparatively recent date the lands were not probably considered of special value, because of their mineral character.

The main information officially brought to this office of the mineral character of these lands was derived from an examination made in the field by a special agent and geologist from this office in the years 1873 and 1879.

Mr. McFarland therein refers to a valuable, but hasty and exceedingly imperfect, survey made by one Mr. Winter, a geologist of more or less qualifications. His work was rapidly done and very imperfectly. He did not designate all the coal lands by any means. Probably all that he did designate were really valuable coal lands, but he certainly omitted a large quantity.

Mr. McFarland continues to say:

It is probable that the coal and iron deposits are of considerable extent, as it is a matter of general notoriety that extensive iron-works and mining have during the last few years been established there. Probably such deposits are not more extensive than in Missouri, in which State, as well as in Kansas, by act of May 5, 1876, all lands were made subject to disposal as agricultural lands.

They surely are of greater extent and more value. I do not know, however, that the circumstances connected with that change in Missouri and Kanses were analogous to these circumstances. I do not know whether wealthy corporations were able under those changes to possess themselves suddenly of illimitable wealth. I proceed with the letter.

The policy—

I invite attention to this:

The policy of so disposing of the public lands that large areas will be owned by single individuals or corporations may well be doubted, or at least merits careful consideration. It is also to be borne in mind that a too restrictive policy—

That is a very safe expression, Mr. President, a wise, safe, conservative expression—is a substantial inducement to fraud, and at the best may postpone but briefly the acquisition of large titles by individuals who command the necessary capital and enterprise.

This result will be more likely to occur in a State like Alabama, where there is doubtless so much land which contains coal and iron, but the amount and value of the deposits in which are so uncertain.

Observe that the Commissioner of the Land Office thinks that this enormous sweep in the hands of wealthy corporations would be much more likely to occur in that State:

The policy of the proposed law is one which it is the peculiar province of Congress to determine, and concerning which I prefer to make no recommendation. If, however, it should be deemed advisable to place Alabama on the same footing as Missouri and Kansas in the respect indicated, I would recommend the inclosed draft of a bill as a substitute.

Neither in the bare letter of transmission from Secretary Kirkwood nor in the comparatively brief statement by Mr. McFarland is there an intimation that either approve of the purpose of this bill. There is an intimation in Mr. McFarland's letter that he has very great doubts on the subject; but he expressly throws upon the legislative branch of the Government all responsibility for it.

That is all I care to say. It seems probable that the Senate will vote for the bill. I have cleared myself. I have shown that I had, what were to me, strong reasons for inviting a closer attention to this grave measure, and I leave it to the Senator from Alabama, in whom I have great confidence, to say whether these lands are to be so put on the market as to give a fair opportunity to people to purchase them and to bring to the Government that price which these lands ought to bring, and whether he is at the same time preserving the rights of the agriculturists who have gone upon the lands and reserved their rights—that is not a good expression in this case—whether he has had sufficient regard to those nominal farmers who have gone upon these mineral lands and located homestead entries when the sole purpose was to evade the law and get possession of mineral lands. They have done that to a vast extent. It is a gross, acknowledged, daring fraud by which wealthy men are seeking to get possession of mineral lands. Many who apply for homesteads there know that they do not intend or hope to farm them but wish to get the land in behalf of these wealthy men, to whom they turn over the title. Undoubtedly the matter needs regulation. Perhaps the Senator from Alabama has taken the wisest measure; I do not know; but it is a matter requiring great consideration and there are untold millions of dollars at stake. The bill seems to me very dangerous and I shall vote against it.

Mr. EDMUNDS rose.

Mr. MORGAN. Does the Senator from Vermont wish to speak to the bill?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Not now. I wish to move that the Senate take a recess until a quarter past 8, in order that we may get a little rest. On account of the conference committee reports we shall have to stay late to-night. This will leave this bill on the tapis, just where it is.

Mr. MORGAN. I am not aware that any one wants to discuss it further.

Mr. EDMUNDS. We want to discuss it, but there is hardly anybody here. Everybody has gone to dinner except half a dozen who stay here; and I move that this half dozen take a recess until a quarter past 8.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Vermont, that the Senate take a recess until 8 o'clock and 15 minutes. [Putting the question.] The noes seem to have it.

Several SENATORS. Let us take a division.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If we have a division we shall have to send for everybody.

Mr. HAWLEY. Let the question be stated again.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont moves that the Senate take a recess till 15 minutes past 8 o'clock this evening. Those in favor of the motion will say "ay;" the contrary "no." [Putting the question.] The ayes seem to have it.

Mr. ROLLINS. I ask for a division. ["No!" "No!"]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire demand a division?

Mr. ROLLINS. He does.

The question being put there were on a division—ayes 15, noes 2.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The ayes have it, and the recess will be taken.

Mr. ROLLINS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays are demanded. Is there a second to the demand? The Chair does not see a sufficient number seconding the call. The ayes have it.

The Senate accordingly (at 7 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) took a recess until 8 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m., at which hour it reassembled.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting a report of the court of inquiry relating to the loss of the steamer Jeannette; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bill and a joint resolution; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 7611) to adjust the salaries of postmasters; and Joint resolution (H. Res. 338) in relation to the claim made by Dr. John B. Read against the United States for the alleged use of projectiles claimed as the invention of said Read, and by him alleged to have been used pursuant to a contract or arrangement made between him and the War Department, and for which no compensation has been made.

The message also announced that the House had concurred in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2156) for the relief of certain owners of the steamer Jackson.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills:

A bill (S. 171) in relation to certain fees allowed registers and receivers;

A bill (S. 729) for the relief of Charles H. Tompkins, of the United States Army; and

A bill (S. 964) for the relief of Joseph C. Irwin.

INTERNAL-REVENUE AND TARIFF DUTIES.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to give notice that I shall call up the report of the conference committee on the revenue bill probably at about 9 o'clock, when the other members of the committee have arrived. I desire also to give notice to Senators that they will find on their desks a copy of the report in print.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask leave now to make a report from the committee of conference on the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report? The Chair hearing no objection, the report will be considered. It will be read.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7482) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 22, 23, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 44, 45, 46, 57, 58, 59, 72, 73, 87, 88, 94, 96, 97, 98, 101, 102, 104, 106, 107, 109, 119, 128, 129, 130, 131, 132, 133, 134, 135, 136, 137, 138, 139, 140, 145, 146, 150, and 152.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 19, 20, 21, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, 52, 53, 54, 55, 56, 60, 61, 62, 63, 64, 65, 66, 67, 70, 71, 74, 75, 76, 77, 78, 79, 80, 81, 82, 83, 84, 85, 86, 99, 103, 108, 110, 112, 113, 116, 118, 120, 121, 123, 124, 125, 141, 142, 143, and 144, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 18: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 18, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: At the end of the amended paragraph insert the following:

"For clerk to Committee on Military Affairs for balance of current fiscal year, at the rate of $2,000 per annum, $666.67;" and in lieu of the sum stated in lines 10, 11, and 12, on page 7 of the bill, insert the sum of "$364,694.87."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 24: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 24, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out "twelve" and insert "ten;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 25: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 25, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert the sum of "$112,350;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 42: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 42, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the word "sixty" and insert the word "fifty-five;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 43: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 43, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment insert "$183,610;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 68: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 68, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be stricken out by said amendment, insert "one clerk of class 2, who shall be a stenographer;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 69: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 69, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment insert "$54,100;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 89: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 89, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the number proposed insert "thirty-three;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 90: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 90, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the number proposed insert "forty-six;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 91: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 91, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the number proposed insert "fifty-seven;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 92: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 92, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the number proposed insert "fifty-eight;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 93: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 93, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the number proposed insert "forty-seven;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Allow me to ask the Senator whether that is not possibly a mistake? The House bill had twenty-seven and the Senate put in thirty, and now it is proposed to make it forty-seven. What is that for?

Mr. ALLISON. That is one of a whole series of amendments relative to the General Land Office. The Senate inserted a provision known in the bill as amendment numbered 96, providing a lump sum of $50,000, the Senator will remember, which was to be used by the Secretary of the Interior in bringing up the accumulated work of the General Land Office. The Senate also added a considerable number of clerks. Now, amendment 96, being the amendment appropriating a lump sum, was disagreed to by the committee of conference, and the Senate recede from that amendment, but recede with the understanding that twenty clerks should be added at line 1792, being on amendment numbered 93.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is to say you add twenty clerks and pay for them in the regular force.

Mr. ALLISON. In the regular force.

Mr. EDMUNDS. And added in the regular force they will be subject to the civil-service law?

Mr. ALLISON. They will be in every sense subject to the civil-service law which is now in force.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think I understand that. Let the reading proceed.

Mr. ALLISON. I will say upon this point that the total increase in the General Land Office is thirty clerks proposed by the committee of conference.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What struck my attention in amendment No. 93 was that the House had provided for twenty-seven clerks and we had increased it three, making it thirty clerks, and then (the House disagreeing to thirty, having proposed twenty-seven) the conference committee made it forty-seven, which is rather an extraordinary thing for a conference committee to do, to go entirely above and beyond all the points of disagreement and to run it up; but I understand from the explanation of my friend from Iowa that it is to take the place of the discretionary force that the Secretary in one class was authorized to employ.

Mr. ALLISON. I will say to the Senator from Vermont that this whole question of clerical force in the Land Office was treated as one single question, and we made the adjustment as well as possible.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not mean to complain of it, but on the face of it it would appear as I stated. Let the reading proceed.

The Acting Secretary resumed the reading of the report, as follows:

Amendment numbered 95: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 95, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment insert "$417,650;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 100: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 100, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment insert "$88,620;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 105: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 105, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment insert "$37,230;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Will the Senator explain that? The text of the bill does not explain it on the face of it.

Mr. ALLISON. That amendment is a mere change of the totals to correspond with the changes made by amendments 103 and 104. The House recede from 103 and the Senate recede from 104.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is one of the footings, one of the "in alls."

Mr. ALLISON. One of the footings.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Go ahead.

The Acting Secretary resumed the reading of the report, as follows:

Amendment numbered 111: That the House recede from its disagreement to amendment of the Senate numbered 111, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Before the word "dollars" insert the words "five hundred;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 114: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 114, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert the following: "Chief of salary and allowance division and chief of appointment division, at $2,000 each; one;" and on page 70 of the bill, in line 25, strike out the word "clerks" where it first occurs in said line, and insert the word "clerk;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Will the Senator explain that?

Mr. ALLISON. We raised one of the clerks of class 4 in the paragraph above and then struck out the word "two" and inserted "one" here.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Merely a change of the number of clerks in that class?

Mr. ALLISON. Simply a transposition in the number of clerks.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Go ahead.

The Acting Secretary resumed the reading, as follows:

Amendment numbered 115: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 115, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the number proposed by said amendment insert "sixteen;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 117: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 117, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment insert "$100,060;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 122: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 122, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment insert "$230,380;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is a footing, I believe.

Mr. ALLISON. That is a footing.

The Acting Secretary resumed the reading, as follows:

Amendment numbered 126: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 126, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: In lieu of the number proposed insert "four;" and on page 72 of the bill, in line 24, strike out the word "seven" and insert "eight;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 127: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 127, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment insert "$67,120;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 147: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 147, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment insert "$9,840;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 148: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 148, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed in said amendment insert "$3,280;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 149: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 149, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out by said amendment insert:

"SEC. 2. That the Secretaries, respectively, of the Departments of State, of the Treasury, War, Navy, and of the Interior, and the Attorney-General, are authorized to make requisitions upon the Postmaster-General for the necessary amount of official postage-stamps for the use of their Departments, not exceeding the amount stated in the estimates submitted to Congress; and upon presentation of proper vouchers therefor at the Treasury the amount thereof shall be credited to the appropriation for the service of the Post-Office Department for the same fiscal year. And it shall be the duty of the respective Departments to inclose to Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress, in all official communications requiring answers, or to be forwarded to others, penalty envelopes addressed as far as practicable, for forwarding or answering such official correspondence."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 151: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 151, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be stricken out insert the following:

"SEC. 4. That hereafter it shall be the duty of the heads of the several Executive Departments, in the interest of the public service, to require of all clerks and other employés of whatever grade or class, in their respective Departments, not less than seven hours of labor each day, except Sundays and days declared public holidays by law or Executive order: Provided, That the heads of the Departments may by special order, stating the reason, further extend or limit the hours of service of any clerk or employé in their Departments, respectively, but in case of an extension it shall be without additional compensation; and all absence from the Departments on the part of said clerks or employés in excess of such leave of absence as may be granted by the heads thereof, which shall not exceed thirty days in any one year, except in case of sickness, shall be without pay."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That was one of the legislative sections that the Senate struck out and here it reappears again in a little different form, probably better if it were a proper law for the public interest, but still clear, decisive, and exclusive legislation. It has nothing to do with an appropriation at all. I should be glad to ask the chairman of this conference committee upon what ground it was that the Senate conferees, following the will of the Senate in resisting legislation upon appropriation bills, agreed to this proposition.

Mr. HOAR. Should not the report be read as an entirety? It is one question, and I think the reading ought to be finished before there is any debate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will conclude the reading of the whole report.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Very well; let him read it through and we can take a rest by going over it section by section.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has all been read except the signatures.

The Acting Secretary read the signatures as follows:

W. B. ALLISON,
H. L. DAWES,
F. M. COCKRELL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

J. G. CANNON,
FRANK HISCOCK,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. ALLISON. I would say that the conferees on the part of the Senate agreed to this last provision in a modified form as being the best arrangement that was practicable in order to secure the passage of this bill. The arrangement was considered a reasonable one and the provision a reasonable one regulating the hours of labor and the method of performing the duties required of the persons who are appropriated for in this bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It presents the old question. The Senate, I think, by a nearly unanimous vote, and I do not know but entirely so on this particular provision, determined, and on the score that it would not legislate on appropriation bills, struck this out. The conferees of the Senate, without asking the advice of the Senate, have agreed to put it in again in substance the same, but different and I dare say better in form, but in practice and substance exactly the same thing.

Now, then, if we are to be told that the House of Representatives will not agree to appropriate money to carry on this Government unless our conferees will agree to change existing laws relating to the duties of public officers and employés, I should like to know that, and I beg to ask my honorable friend if the House conferees set up any such pretension, because this happens to be one of the cases where we have a right to know what the pretensions of the other independent and equal branch of this Government are?

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I do not say that the House conferees set up any pretension with reference to this matter. We are now taking the advice of the Senate; the Senate conferees make this report for the purpose of ascertaining the judgment of the Senate; we did not assume to do anything without the assent of the Senate. If the Senate does not like the provision as presented by the conferees, it has an easy method, and that is to vote it down. We exercised the best judgment we could looking toward an agreement. Now, if the Senate believe that it is not right to put the provision which we after deliberation and consideration finally agreed to put in this bill, there is an easy method to get rid of it by rejecting the conference report. We are taking the advice of the Senate now with reference to the new provision which the six gentlemen who comprised the committee of conference present to the Senate and to the House.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If my friend from Iowa had been an Italian a few hundred years ago and his name had been Machiavelli, I should have understood his observations.

Here we are: the Senate having decided—no matter whether by a great or a small majority—that it would not put this regulation upon this bill, we find that it is here without the House conferees having insisted, as they could not, that their House would not pass the appropriation bill unless we agreed to this thing, for if they had asserted that pretension it would destroy entirely the independence and equality of the two Houses. Our conferees in the face of our vote, without the House conferees asserting any such pretension, have concluded that they would reverse the action of the Senate and provide for the same thing in substance but in a better form.

I do not expect at this stage of the session to make a point that will amount to anything in practical effect upon this bill, and I do not wish to do so; but I do say that it appears to me that it would have been better, in view of the judgment of the Senate, that the conferees of the Senate should have insisted upon the negative of the Senate on this proposition, and then we should have been able to ascertain whether the House of Representatives asserts the pretension that it will not pass bills to carry out existing laws unless we will agree to legislation upon those bills that we do not like either in substance or because it is on those bills.

My friend says with an adroitness that is characteristic of people who live beyond the Mississippi River, that the conference is really asking the advice of the Senate. They have gone and traded away their client's case and come back to him and ask him whether he thinks he can get a new trial! I only put in a protest. I do not expect to stop this bill in this stage of the session, but I do say in all candor that I think my friend from Iowa and his confrères are not right about this business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the report of the committee of conference.

The report was concurred in.

ORDER IN THE GALLERIES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair wishes to say a word to the galleries. Complaint is made that there is not sufficient order in the galleries; that there is too much talking and too much moving about. The Chair appeals to gentlemen and ladies occupying the galleries to preserve order. There is a great deal of important business to be done. When persons in the galleries move about or talk it interferes with the proper consideration of that business. The Chair hopes that the evening will pass away without his being compelled to make any further appeal to the galleries.

ALABAMA MINERAL LANDS.

The Senate, as in the Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4757) to exclude the public lands in Alabama from the operation of the laws relating to mineral lands.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am very sorry, Mr. President, to feel obliged to say a few words about this matter when other matters of much wider public importance are waiting for consideration; but as my friend from Alabama feels it to be his duty to insist upon the disposition of this bill, of course it is right that we should consider it, unless the Senate wishes to do something else.

The first clause of this bill is like the clause about the States of Missouri and Kansas, but only the first three lines of it. The act of 1876 respecting mineral lands in those States, Missouri and Kansas, stops where the fifth line of this bill is. All the rest is additional and different legislation. Now if my friend from Alabama had desired to put the mineral lands in the State of Alabama upon an equal footing with the other States (as the old phrase is about admissions and so on) that would have been the thing to do; and the question on that would have been whether the situation of public affairs in respect of these lands in the State of Alabama is the same as in the two States named. I am very much afraid that that situation is different. The States of Missouri and Kansas have had their lands all taken up so far as it regards covering the whole surface of those States in various parts where there are minerals, by interspersed and separated entries, so that there are no great bodies of mineral land in those States that lie together, as I believe.

Mr. MORGAN. It is the same case in Alabama precisely.

Mr. EDMUNDS. My friend from Alabama says that it is the same case in Alabama. I was under the impression that the southern part of the State of Alabama was not a very large mineral section, but that its hilly and mountain country, if it might be called a mountain country, was the one in which the chief mineral resources lay.

Mr. MORGAN. I refer to the mineral country, the country covered by this bill, what are called the mineral or coal lands.

Mr. EDMUNDS. They lie in one particular section of the State chiefly, do they not?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes; but settlers are interspersed all through that section.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is true; but this mineral region, this very heart of an enormous mineral deposit, undoubtedly lies close together. In that, to be sure, under existing law extensive operators and others have gotten possession, rightly I hope and rightly very likely in fact, in a large degree, of a very large part of the lands; and the only obstacle now is, as it appears, that whoever gets any more of these lands as mineral lands is to pay in certain cases $20 an acre and in other cases $10 an acre, depending on their distance from a railroad.

What is the difficulty, then, with the present law, stopping right there? Why should we put up all these lands and open them out as agricultural lands when they are now the property of the United States and are not agricultural lands? I can see the force of it in Missouri and particularly in Kansas, nearly every foot of which land is capable of cultivation whether a hundred feet or a thousand feet below the beautiful undulating surface there lies a coal mine or an iron mine; the corn will grow and the flocks will feed upon those places as agricultural lands; but in the State of Alabama, as we are told and as I believe, it it quite different. So the situation of the two cases is not at all alike, stopping on this first proposition, if this bill had been a bill merely to put these Alabama lands on the same footing that we put the lands in Missouri and Kansas.

Now, as I said before, what is the difficulty, stopping right there, in the disposition of these lands now? What public interest is imperiled by it? What interest of the noble State of Alabama is imperiled by it? If these be mineral lands—and if they are not they are open to pre-emption and homestead as agricultural lands now—every acre of them, instead of being worth $20, which is the minimum, and I do not know but the maximum of what anybody is obliged to pay, would be worth, many of those acres, a thousand or ten thousand dollars an acre; and they are the property of the United States. If any coal company or iron company or speculator—and I do not use the term "speculator" in the sense of reproach at all; every man has a right to be a speculator, to invest his money in real estate on the chance or probability of its rising—wishes to get these lands, let him pay his $20; but he buys it section by section separate, and everybody has an equal chance.

Now, this first clause proposes to turn all these, contrary to the fact, into agricultural lands for the purposes of the law, although in fact and in truth they are nothing but mineral lands and they are not in general suitable for agriculture at all. Why should we do that? Upon what ground is it that we should do it? Who is kept out now? Nobody except the man who is not willing to pay $20 an acre for a section of land that has a coal mine or an iron mine under it in a mountainous country not suitable for the general agricultural pursuits of a climate like that of Alabama. But this bill does not stop there. It provides next:

> That all lands which have heretofore been reported to the General Land Office as containing coal and iron shall first be offered at public sale.

All that have not been heretofore reported are turned in without any public sale; but we have been so often told to-day and on other occasions of fraudulent homestead and pre-emption and timber-culture, and all the other sorts of entries which can be made, soldiers' and bounty entries, and so on, without being offered for public sale. It is only those that the local land offices have reported. Upon what grounds do they report them? Upon the amount of information, if they are honest, that they happen to have at that moment of time, and it may turn out the next day on a geological survey or a scientific observation by some competent person that three-fourths of all the lands in this region are mineral lands but have not been reported as such. The mine that is discovered in one section is found, as in most cases it does, to run for miles and miles, sometimes hundreds of miles through other sections, and none of the other sections but No. 1 in the case, I suppose, have been heretofore reported as mineral land. There is a curious phrase in this bill. "Then they shall be first offered at public sale." How? All the lands which have heretofore been reported shall be offered at public sale. In sections and half-sections and quarter-sections? Not at all; but they are all to be offered at public sale without any limitations as to whether they are to be offered in a lump, by counties, by the hundred sections, by ten sections, or by one section, and there is no reference to the general land laws of the United States as to how they are to be offered; but it leaves a wide margin on the construction of this phrase in this bill to some Commissioner of the General Land Office who will come in after the present one—of course he would not do any such thing, but some future Commissioner may—who will assume to say that the best way for the interests of the United States is to offer fifty sections at a time at public auction in order to get the greatest sum for the United States. What is the result of that? The result is that if I happen to be possessed of a capital of even $100,000, as I wish I were, or of $50,000, on which I can raise thirty or forty thousand dollars in cash, I can attend at a sale of that kind and just outbid and drive off every purchaser who wishes to purchase one section or two sections, because he has not money enough to go the whole figure. Is that right? Of course everybody will agree that it is not right. If these lands are to be offered at public auction, they should be offered according to divisions and subdivisions, sections and half-sections and quarter-sections, one at a time, in order that the farmer of Alabama, if it be really an agricultural piece of land, or anybody in Alabama, if he be what is called a speculator, or any other citizen who has his little $100 or $200 or $500 or $1,000 may have a chance to compete for that particular quarter or half or whole section with the means that he has, and not be swamped by a great combination.

This bill is very sleazy, I must say with great respect, on that point. It was stated that it was prepared at the General Land Office. I have no doubt from what has been stated by my friend from Alabama that it was, because we all know that he would be the last man in the world who would either misrepresent or conceal any truth about this matter. The Commissioner of the General Land Office has not time with all his affairs to prepare every bill himself, and as things go in these Departments, and must of necessity, I agree, the probability is—and that is all I know about it—that some one clerk made a draft of this bill. Whether he did it with the eye of some attorney of an iron or a coal corporation looking over his shoulder at the same time I do not know; such things have happened a great many times, and I suppose they will happen a great many times more; but here it is, and the fact that it is said that it comes from the General Land Office does not to my mind create any weight in its favor under the circumstances that we know to exist.

In the next place, as my friend from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] stated a little while ago so well, when you look at the report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office on this subject he does not recommend the inauguration of this policy at all. He says, "If you are going to do it"—signing one of the official letters that is laid before him of the hundred that he signs a day—"this may be a good way to do it," and that is all. The result of that performance therefore is that it will be possible for some Commissioner of the General Land Office, some Secretary of the Interior, in a moment of inadvertence to be misled into signing an order to sell these lands in large lumps that nobody could bid for except the strong combination of capital, and all the small bidders would be "frozen out," as the phrase is.

My friend I know can turn to the general land laws about sales, &c., and find specific regulations that they shall be offered quarter-section by quarter-section, section by section, and so on, so that everybody, the small as well as the great, the poor as well as the rich, may have a fair chance; but this bill for some reason or other has forgotten to provide that the public sale shall be under the provisions and regulations relating to the public sales of other agricultural lands. There is nothing of that kind in it.

Then we come to the last part of the bill, which on the face says what to the unsophisticated mind of an honest man like my friend from Alabama would seem to be a very handsome and proper security for bona fide entries, "that any bona fide entry under the provisions of the homestead law of lands within said State heretofore made may be patented without reference to" the act of 1872 providing for the mining lands of the United States in cases where persons making application have complied with the laws in relation thereto.

We find, from what the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] has read about the state of things down there now, that a vast number of entries have been made by contrivance which are now under dispute. The bill provides that all these entries shall be held valid if the Secretary of the Interior, not the courts of justice, thinks they are bona fide. If the Commissioner of the General Land Office, to whom the Secretary of the Interior would refer such a question, or the clerk in the General Land Office to whom the Commissioner refers such questions, charged with that particular branch of the business, says that all this mass of disputed entries are bona fide, then all these homesteads, &c., shall be considered as settled. What then? All a great coal or iron combination there, or a speculating combination or a railroad combination, has to do to get these lands is to have their employés, the men who dig in the mines, the men who run the trains, the men who keep up the road-bed, go out within these fifteen or twenty miles along the line of the railroad and establish their homestead cabins, which in that climate could be done by a good woodsman, as from experience I happen to know, in about an hour, and each one sets up his establishment as his homestead for the benefit of the corporation or whoever it may be who has employed him to do this thing at $2 a day or less. Here is the opportunity to consolidate and perfect all those entries.

I do hope (because I do not wish to spend the time of the Senate in going into this at length) that my friend from Alabama will consent to let this matter be postponed until the December session—this one summer will not do any harm—until we can more completely and thoroughly find out the true inwardness of this subject, because there is a great deal to be said, and a great deal of objection and complaint against the proposition, which I know perfectly well he is urging with perfect good faith, but which I fear if carried out will prove injurious to his State and its interests, as well as to those of the United States.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HALE. I present a privileged report, a conference report on the naval appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report?

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7314) "making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 2, 3, 20, 30, 35, 42, and 68.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 4, 5, 6, 8, 9, 10, 11, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 29, 31, 33, 34, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 43, 45, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, 53, 54, 55, 56, 57, 58, 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, 64, 65, 66, 67, 69, 70, 71, 73, and 75, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 7: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 7, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be stricken out by said amendment insert the following:

"Hereafter only one-half of the vacancies in the various grades in the staff corps of the Navy shall be filled by promotion until such grades shall be reduced to the numbers fixed for the several grades of the staff corps of the Navy by the act of August 5, 1882, making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 12: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 12, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter proposed to be stricken out by said amendment, and at the end of the amended paragraph insert the following:

"And provided further, That nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to give any additional pay to any such officer during the time of his service in the volunteer army or navy."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendments numbered 26, 27, and 28: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 26, 27, and 28, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: In lieu of the amended paragraph insert the following:

"For the purchase and manufacture, after full investigation and test, in the United States, under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy, of torpedoes adapted to naval warfare, or of the right to manufacture the same, and for the fixtures and machinery necessary for operating the same, $100,000: Provided, That no part of said money shall be expended for the purchase or manufacture of any torpedo or of the right to manufacture the same until the same shall have been approved by the Secretary of the Navy after a favorable report to be made to him by a board of naval officers to be created by him to examine and test said torpedoes and inventions."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 32: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 32, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 12 of the bill, in line 12, after the word "dollars," insert the words "of which sum $64,000 shall be immediately available;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 44: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 44, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: At the end of the amended paragraph insert the following:

"But nothing herein contained shall prevent the repair or building of boilers for wooden ships, the hulls of which can be fully repaired for 20 per cent. of the estimated cost of a new ship of the same size and material."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 46: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 46, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After the word "dollars" insert the following:

"The execution of no contract shall be entered upon for the completion of the engines and machinery of either of these vessels until the terms thereof shall be approved by said board, who shall approve all contracts which may be to the best advantage of the Government, and fair and reasonable according to the lowest market price for similar work."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 52: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 52, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 18, strike out all after the word "report," in line 9, down to and including the word "under," in line 10 of the bill; and in lieu thereof insert the following:

"And in the event that such vessels or any of them shall be built by contract, such building shall be under."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 72: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 72, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: On page 26, in line 12, before the word "ranges," insert the word "and;" and in the same line strike out the words "and so forth;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 74: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 74, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 27, in line 22 of the bill, after the word "and," insert the word "he;" and the Senate agree to the same.

EUGENE HALE,
JOHN A. LOGAN,
H. E. DAVIS,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

GEO. M. ROBESON,
J. H. KETCHAM,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. McPHERSON. I should like to have again read that clause of the report referring to the repair of wooden ships. I did not correctly understand the Secretary.

The ACTING SECRETARY. At the end of the amended paragraph insert:

But nothing herein contained shall prevent the repair or building of boilers for wooden ships, the hulls of which can be fully repaired for 20 per cent. of the estimated cost of a new ship of the same size and material.

Mr. McPHERSON. May I now inquire of the Senator having the bill in charge whether there is anything in the bill that disturbs the status of navy officers as left by the bill as it passed the Senate?

Mr. HALE. The report of the conference committee is a substantial agreement with the provisions of the bill as amended by the Senate. To what particular point does the Senator direct his inquiry.

Mr. McPHERSON. I speak of all those points that referred to changing the status of naval officers. I believe that they were all struck out of the bill by a vote of the Senate. I desire to know whether any of them have been restored by the conference report.

Mr. HALE. Not one of them. All of those are left as the Senate amendments provided. The only change that is made is the provision, which is not a change so far as rank or pay goes, providing that hereafter masters in the Navy shall constitute a class of sub-lieutenants, with no change as to pay, and that midshipmen after certain service shall be reckoned and ranked as ensigns, with no additional pay. That is all.

Mr. INGALLS. The Senate differed with the House as to the amount that was to be appropriated for the completion and equipment of the Miantonomoh and its companions. The House, I believe, appropriated $450,000, and the Senate $1,000,000. May I ask the Senator to state how that amendment was left by the conferees?

Mr. HALE. The report of the conference leaves the sum and its application to the different ships, the ironclads, precisely as the Senate left it.

Mr. INGALLS. I inquired as to the amount.

Mr. HALE. The amount is the same as the Senate left it.

Mr. INGALLS. One million dollars?

Mr. HALE. One million dollars. No names of the ironclads are inserted, but it is left applicable to all. I think the only issue between the Senator and myself in that regard would be one of pronunciation as to the names.

Mr. BAYARD. I understand the Senator from Maine to say that the amendment of the Senate appropriating $1,000,000 to put the engines in the four unfinished monitors has been retained by the conference?

Mr. HALE. In the bill as reported by the conference committee we provide $1,000,000 for all the ironclads, not naming either, for the boilers and machinery, as inserted by the Senate amendments.

Mr. BAYARD. That had reference to the unfinished monitors we discussed the other day?

Mr. HALE. Certainly.

Mr. BAYARD. The amount to be appropriated to each is not specified?

Mr. HALE. By no means.

Mr. BAYARD. But $1,000,000 is the amount for them all, the four?

Mr. HALE. Yes.

Mr. BAYARD. There are but four, I believe, in an unfinished condition.

Mr. HALE. Let us have a vote, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the conference report.

The report was concurred in.

CONDITION OF SIOUX INDIANS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. DAWES, Mr. LOGAN, Mr. CAMERON of Wisconsin, Mr. MORGAN, and Mr. VEST the committee to inquire into the condition of the Sioux Indians on their reservation, authorized to be appointed by resolution of the 2d instant.

INTERNAL REVENUE AND TARIFF DUTIES.

Mr. MORRILL. I present the conference report on the revenue bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report on the revenue bill?

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President, I am not about to make a speech, but as brief a statement as I can to explain each and every, or nearly every, important amendment that has been made by the conference committee.

I will say that in relation to the internal-revenue part of the bill it provides for the repeal of taxes on banks and bankers, whether State or national, except on the circulation of national banks. That remains as heretofore. The stamp tax on bank checks, drafts, and on matches, perfumery, and patent medicines, is also to be abolished. The tax on dealers in tobacco is largely reduced, and no change has been made in the provision that purchasers may sell tobacco at retail to an amount not exceeding $100 annually. The rates on tobacco it is proposed to reduce from 16 cents to 8 cents per pound, or one-half, and the same or one-half of the present tax on cigars and cigarettes. A change has been made providing that the act so far as tobacco is concerned shall go into effect on the 1st of May instead of July 1.

When we reach the amendments touching the tariff bill I may say that in Schedule A, on chemicals, there has been no essential change whatever. Upon earthen-ware the conferees on the part of the Senate accepted the proposition presented by the members of the House, and these are slightly raised.

Mr. BAYARD. Will the Senator state the amount of the advance on common earthen-ware?

Mr. MORRILL. The Senator has the bill before him. It is raised to 55 per cent. It stood in the bill when it left the Senate at 50 per cent., and it is raised 5 per cent more. We have also changed the classification so as to allow painted and gilded ware to pay the same rate of duty as China-ware. On green-glass bottles the rate has been changed from 30 per cent. ad valorem to 1 cent per pound. There was one class of window-glass that was not included at all in the Senate bill, or polished cylinder and crown glass and common window-glass, and that has been inserted precisely as the law stands now.

On Schedule C, metals, iron-ore has been placed at 75 cents per ton, pig-iron at three-tenths of 1 cent per pound, steel railway-bars at $17 per ton. Bar-iron in the first class is made to be a little less than the rate proposed by the Senate, and the second class 1 cent a pound instead of $20 per ton. Charcoal-iron was changed, instead of $3 per ton additional to the rates on other iron, to a specific rate of 1 cent per pound. Iron or steel T-rails are placed at nine-tenths of 1 cent per pound, and such rails when punched at eight-tenths, as they are now in the bill. Round iron in coils less than seven-sixteenths of an inch in diameter are to be 1.2 instead of 1.1 cents per pound. Armor plate-iron was struck out entirely, believing that none of it would be used except by the United States, and if used by the United States it would likely be imported free for the use of the Government. Sheet-iron thinner than No. 20 wire gauge is increased one-tenth of 1 cent per pound. Iron and steel plates galvanized is reduced from 1 cent per pound to three-fourths of a cent per pound. On polished sheet-iron the House conferees insisted upon 3 cents per pound, while the bill as it passed the Senate fixed it at 2 cents, and a compromise was finally made at 2½ cents a pound. Iron and steel cotton-ties are left precisely as fixed by the Senate.

In Schedule I, on cotton goods, no essential change was made, except that a proviso was added to the class of goods less than two hundred threads to the square inch, placing a similar proviso upon those below that rate, as already provided upon those above that rate.

In Schedule J, the list of jute goods, flax, and so on, jute butts was taken from the free-list and placed upon the dutiable list at $5 per ton. No other material change was made in that schedule.

In Schedule K, on wool and woolens, no change whatever was made except a provision is inserted that for ladies' cloaks, dolmans, and other outside garments of ladies that are often expensively trimmed with silk fringe, gimps, silk velvet, and so on, it is proposed that they shall be subject when imported to a higher duty than that which has been placed on cloth.

In Schedule L, silk and silk goods, no change has been made.

In Schedule M, books, papers, &c., the only material change made is on printed books, and on these the present duty is retained of 25 per cent. I think if the Senate committee had not consented to that we should hardly have been able to make a conference report.

In Schedule N no changes are made of any importance except that 2 cents per one hundred pounds have been added to the rates on salt. The proviso remains as to meats cured with imported salt. Gold watches are to remain subject to the present duty of 25 per cent.

In the free-list no change of importance beyond what I have already noticed has been made.

I omitted to say that on iron and steel railway fish-plates the duties were reduced from 1½ to 1¼ cents. On steel valued at 4 cents a pound or less 45 per cent. is placed, and valued above that rate the duties are made considerably below the amount of duties by the existing tariff. Steel wheels for railway purposes and parts thereof partly manufactured were separated, and instead of the whole being at 2½ cents the finished article was placed at 2½ cents and the partly finished article was placed at 2 cents a pound. Articles not enumerated composed of iron, steel, copper, gold, silver, or other metals, were placed at 45 per cent. instead of 35 per cent. ad valorem.

In Schedule D, wood and wooden-ware, no changes were made in the bill as it passed the Senate.

In Schedule E, sugar, the only change made was in relation to sugars between 13 and 16 Dutch standard, which have been placed at 2.75 instead of 2.50. This was done for the reason that this class, in value and saccharine strength, was found to be at a much lower proportionate rate than the lowest or cheapest grades of sugar, and even a much higher rate was asked for by the House conferees than ⅛ of a cent per pound.

In Schedule F, tobacco, no change was made.

Schedule G, provisions, is unchanged, except merely verbal amendments.

In Schedule H, liquors, there has been no change, except an addition of 20 per cent. duty, or something like that, on ginger ale, whether in bottles or casks.

As the time is very short for the consideration of this report I do not deem it proper for me to occupy longer the time of the Senate, as time is becoming precious. Every Senator will find the report upon his desk, and can see for himself exactly what has been done. I have endeavored to state it accurately so far as I know.

Mr. BROWN. Will the chairman of the committee permit me to ask him a question? Has the conference committee made any estimate as to the entire amount of the reduction of revenue that would result from the passage of the bill as modified by the conferees?

Mr. MORRILL. I may say that since the conclusion of the report there has been no time for any accurate calculation, but a rough estimate has been made that it is about $75,000,000. Of course on some of these articles where the duties have been reduced, as on woolen goods, there will be very likely an increase of importations, which may swell our revenue to some extent, but if there should be no greater importations than there were last year the reductions would probably exceed $75,000,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the report.

Mr. BECK. I call for the yeas and nays. I want a little further time to look at it. I have had no chance to look at it. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If no Senator rises to address the Senate the roll will be called.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. 7482) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. 719) for the relief of the representatives of Sterling T. Austin, deceased;

A bill (S. 826) for the relief of Powers & Newman and D. & B. Powers;

A bill (S. 1829) to amend an act donating public lands to the several States and Territories which may provide colleges for the benefit of agriculture and the mechanic arts.

A bill (H. R. 1410) to amend the pension laws by increasing the pensions of soldiers and sailors who have lost an arm or a leg in the service, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. 1443) granting a pension to Edgar B. Lamphier;

A bill (H. R. 1860) granting a pension to Daniel M. Morley;

A bill (H. R. 2156) for the relief of certain owners of the steamer Jackson;

A bill (H. R. 3743) granting a pension to Miss Amanda Stokes;

A bill (H. R. 5103) granting a pension to Margery Nightengale;

A bill (H. R. 5558) granting a pension to Mrs. Susan Bayard;
A bill (H. R. 6923) granting a pension to Mrs. Helen M. Thayer;
A bill (H. R. 7049) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes;
A bill (H. R. 7623) relative to the Southern exposition to be held in the city of Louisville, State of Kentucky, in the year 1883;
A bill (H. R. 7597) to admit free of duty articles intended for the national mining and industrial exposition to be held at Denver, in the State of Colorado, during the year 1883;
Joint resolution (H. Res. 324) to provide for the deficiencies in the appropriations for salaries of officers, clerks, messengers, and others in the service of the House of Representatives for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883; and Joint resolution (H. Res. 359) to print 5,000 copies of the report of the board in behalf of the United States Executive Departments at the international exhibition of 1876.

INTERNAL-REVENUE AND TARIFF DUTIES.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the the conference report on the bill (H. R. 5538) to reduce internal-revenue taxation.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, if this important report is to pass by default in this way I wish to say a few words in opposition to it if I can. For the first time during this session I am suffering with such a cold that I can hardly speak above my breath. Indeed this morning I could not. But as the yeas and nays have been called for, if nobody desires to oppose it, while I am not able to do myself or the subject justice, I will do the best I can to furnish what I consider good reasons why it ought not to be concurred in.

With the slight examination I have been able to make of it, the report provides for large increases in taxation wherever they have attempted to touch it, in every paragraph, in every schedule, except one or two very unimportant ones, on the bill as it passed the Senate, and in many instances above what was even proposed by the most ultra protectionists in the House of Representatives.

I knew from the first that we would at last have a worse bill imposed upon the country than either the House or the Senate desired. I knew it would go by hook or crook, and it has gone by both, to a conference committee that would impose upon us just such class legislation as they pleased, in defiance of the will of both Houses, and make a tariff to suit themselves and their friends and force it upon the American people.

I will take up one item to illustrate what I mean. I select it from the few items I have been able to examine in the last few minutes. Iron ore, the base of all the iron industries, was reported by the Tariff Commission at 50 cents per ton, in these words:

> The commission recommends a specific rate of 50 cents per ton, instead of the present rate of 20 per cent. ad valorem. The reasons that have led to this conclusion are that there has been great difficulty in ascertaining the exact value of ores, particulary those exported from Spain and the Mediterranean.
> The importation of iron ores in large quantities commenced in the last half of the year 1879. The ad valorem rate of 20 per cent. during the past three years has on the average equaled a specific rate of 54 cents per ton.

They then proceeded to state the difficulty they had in getting the exact ad valorem, which was about 54 cents a ton. They assumed that 50 cents specific afforded better protection than that. I have read their professions to the Senate several times during this debate, and I thought I would not take time now to do so; but my voice may improve after a little, and I will venture to read again a portion of the report. The commission say:

> Excessive duties generally, or exceptionally high duties in particular cases, discredit our whole national economic system and furnish plausible arguments for its complete subversion. They serve to increase uncertainty on the part of industrial enterprise, whether it shall enlarge or contract its operations, and take from commerce, as well as production, the sense of stability required for extended undertakings. It would seem that the rates of duties under the existing tariff—fixed, for the most part, during the war under the evident necessity at that time of stimulating to its utmost extent all domestic production—might be adapted, through reduction, to the present condition of peace requiring no such extraordinary stimulus. And in the mechanical and manufacturing industries, especially those which have been long established, it would seem that the improvements in machinery and processes made within the last twenty years, and the high scale of productiveness which has become a characteristic of their establishments, would permit our manufacturers to compete with their foreign rivals under a substantial reduction of existing duties.
> Entertaining these views, the commission has sought to present a scheme of tariff duties in which substantial reduction should be the distinguishing feature. The average reduction in rates, including that from the enlargement of the free-list and the abolition of the duties on charges and commissions, at which the commission has aimed is not less on the average than 20 per cent., and it is the opinion of the commission that the reduction will reach 25 per cent. The reduction, slight in some cases, in others not attempted, is in many cases from 40 to 50 per cent.

I need not read more. As I said, I will speak of iron ore first, because it illustrates more prominently and plainly than anything else what I desire to prove as to the outrageous character of this report. When the Senate of the United States—I will begin with our own action—had this question under discussion, many of the most intelligent men of the country, notably Hon. ABRAM S. HEWITT, laid facts before the country and before Congress to show that it was indispensable to the great iron industries of this country, as imported iron ore had many qualities that iron ore found in this country does not possess, that it should be imported free of duty, as when so imported it is used for the purpose of mixing with our own native ore, the foreign ore being low in phosphorus and there being a great deal of phosphorus in our own. He proved to my satisfaction that it would extend and cheapen the manufacture of our iron products and increase the uses to which our native ores could be applied.

Earnest efforts were made on the part of some Senators, notably the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MAHONE], to increase the duty on ore above 50 cents, which the commission said was the true rate, which the Senate committee said was the true rate, which the Senate as in Committee of the Whole determined was the true rate, and voted down upon the yeas and nays by overwhelming majorities every effort to increase it. The House of Representatives, with Mr. KELLEY at its head, I suppose I may now speak of the action of the House, as their acts are freely discussed, and I suppose their action is under review, said 50 cents per ton was the true rate of taxation on iron ore. There was no disagreement between the House of Representatives and the Senate as to iron ore.

No committee of conference, dealing justly with both Houses and representing the expressed will of both Houses of Congress, could decently assume, when the two Houses had disagreed or had agreed, to change the rate of taxation upon which they had agreed. Yet this conference committee so called, acting, as I think, in defiance of the order of the Senate and in plain violation of their known duty, increased the duty on iron-ore, that both Houses had agreed should not be taxed more than 50 cents a ton to 75 cents a ton, or 50 per cent. increase on the tax agreed on; and what is the effect of that usurpation of unwarranted authority? One case illustrates the whole—577,118 tons of iron-ore were imported last year; by adding 25 cents a ton to the cost of it the conference have added to the tax on that raw material $144,279.50, assuming that the same quantity will be imported.

Why was this done? By what authority? Obeying whose orders? What disagreeing vote did they adjust? The House had voted 50 cents; the Senate had voted 50 cents; they had agreed. The conferees arbitrarily overthrew what both Houses had agreed upon, and added a tax upon the importations of this raw material of $144,279.50, and we are to be told that we must hurry this report through because of the late hour of the session and allow that outrage to be perpetrated without question, and without being even told by the chairman of the committee why it was done; indeed, he carefully concealed the fact, merely saying that there was no material increase of taxation in any of the changes they had made, when there is 50 per cent. increase of duty upon the leading article out of which the iron of this country is made, and that was done by him and his associates in defiance of the deliberate action of the House and of the still more deliberate action of the Senate, all of which was well known to the conferees.

I have the debate upon that subject before me. I turned to it when I saw the outrage sought to be imposed on the country. I may be a little tedious, but I propose to expose this. The motion was made in this body by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MAHONE], one of the conferees, by the way, placed there at a late hour, to increase the duty upon iron ore to $2 instead of 50 cents a ton. That motion received one vote; that was the vote of the Senator from Virginia, I presume, because when the question was taken as to whether a division was necessary the following occurred:

> Mr. HOAR. May I inform my friend that the Chair has called for the ayes and one "ay" only responded? Is it worth while to have the yeas and nays?

An effort was next made to make the tax a dollar a ton. That was voted down; 85 cents was tried; 75 cents was tried; 60 cents was tried. At a dollar, if I mistake not, the vote was 11 in favor to 37 against it. Then the motion was made to make it 75 cents, and 15 voted in the affirmative and 34 in the negative upon a call of the yeas and nays. Sixty cents was tried, and the Senate persistently refused to increase it above 50 cents, and the House upon a vote refused to increase it above 50 cents a ton. The proposition to increase the tax was tried again on the 16th day of February in the Senate, on the motion of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. CONGER]; he sought to make the duty 85 cents. The propriety of the increase was reargued and every effort was made upon a call of the yeas and nays to tax iron ore higher than 50 cents a ton. It was again voted down by an overwhelming majority.

In view of all these undoubted facts I ask the Senate, and I intend to appeal to the country even from the Senate, what right had that body of men who were sitting in secret council, authorized only to act upon disagreeing votes between the two Houses and to sustain the action of the Senate by all honorable means, to consider the tax on iron ore, on which the House and Senate had agreed, and raise the duty on it 50 per cent. and then come here without even deigning to state the facts and tell us that we must adopt the report they have made, right or wrong—fas et nefas—or we are obstructors of public business?

Mr. HARRIS. Do I understand the Senator from Kentucky to state that the conference report proposes to impose a duty on iron ore greater than either the House or Senate has voted to impose on it?

Mr. BECK. I do, and I appeal to the members of the conference committee themselves now on this floor, or any one of them, to deny it or to contradict what I say if they can. They have wrongfully increased this tax 50 per cent. I ask the chairman of the Finance Committee if that is not true? I wait for an answer now. I have the House bill, I have the report of the House committee, I have the action of the House, I have the double action of the Senate; and I aver that the conference committee has placed a tax on iron ore 50 per cent. higher than either the House or the Senate, and that the House and the Senate had agreed upon the same rate before the bill was sent to the conference committee.

Mr. MORRILL. The House had not acted on this bill but rejected our amendments in gross.

Mr. HARRIS. Did not the House have a bill upon which they acted on the iron schedule?

Mr. BECK. Yes, and voted upon it. Here is their bill fixing the rate at 50 cents per ton. If they had no bill, if they had no schedule to present to our conferees, where was the disagreeing vote between the House and the Senate, if this bill is not to be referred to as the proposition on which the House acted? If there was no bill of the House then where was the disagreement? What could any conferee on the part of the House say to the Senate that the House required, or that our conferees ought to abandon the vote of the Senate on any schedule and give it up unless there was something that the House had done?

I aver, and the silence of the four or the five or whatever the number who agreed to this report gives consent to the truth of my statement, that they have imposed an increased tax of 50 per cent. on all the iron ore that comes into the country beyond what either the House or the Senate had imposed, and when the House and Senate were agreed.

If these admitted facts do not condemn this whole report and stamp it as a thing absolutely unfit for the Senate to indorse I do not think any argument of mine will. There is not a Senate conferee who will venture to rise in his place and either justify it or excuse it. It stands confessed as a plain violation of their known duty.

Passing from that, though one illustrates all, look at the action of the conference committee relative to glass-ware, one of the first important things touched in the report. Let me examine their action in that regard.

This is the language of the present law:

Earthen, stone, or crockery ware, white, glazed, edged, printed, painted, dipped, or cream-colored, not otherwise provided for, 40 per cent.

That of course relates to earthen, stone, and crockery ware. The plainest character of designs on paper can be painted and pasted on plain crockery, and when placed in the furnace the paper is burnt out and the paint or print remains. That is the whole process; there is no skill or intellect involved; it is done by the plainest, simplest process; the designs are painted by the hundred or thousand on pieces of paper and burnt in; the paper, as I said, burns off and leaves the paint or print. Yet the conference committee without any reason in the world that I can see, have taken that class of cheap goods out of the schedule where the Senate placed them at 50 per cent., which is 25 per cent. increase on the duty under the present law, because it was said we had given importers the benefit of a reduction of taxes, by taking the duty off the packages, which on the cheapest classes of goods amount to, say, 10 per cent. Our conferees have taken these goods from the schedule of 50 per cent. and placed them in the schedule of 60 per cent., an increase of 50 per cent. on the present rate, along with china, porcelain, parian, and bisque ware, and the other decorations that ornament the mantel-pieces of the rich.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to give the Senator from Kentucky a further fact, so that he can make out the case as bad as he can.

Mr. BECK. What is it.

Mr. MORRILL. It is a little worse than he states it, because, as I have said, the conferees have accepted the House provision.

Mr. BECK. I thought the Senator said a while ago that there was no House provision—when I was speaking in reference to the action of the House in regard to iron ore.

Mr. MORRILL. I mean to say the provision presented by the House conferees. We have inserted that, and this is therefore not a correct print in the bill on the desks of Senators.

Mr. BECK. The earthen, stone, and crockery ware, painted and gilded, is taken out of the 50 per cent. schedule of the Senate by its conferees and placed in the 60 per cent. schedule, or else they have printed it wrong.

Mr. MORRILL. The Senator does not understand me now. I wish to notify him that we have made it even worse than that; that we have placed this other earthen and stone ware at 55 per cent., instead of 50 per cent. as it stands in the print on the table here.

Mr. BECK. I do not know how bad they have made it. I have no doubt they have made it as bad as they could for the people and as good as they could for the men who are here demanding still more excessive bounties. I have never heard the revenues of the Government spoken of as being worthy of consideration by any gentleman on the other side during this whole discussion. I have never heard the rights of the consumers of this country spoken of as being worthy of consideration while extravagant taxes were being imposed. The whole question has been, how much can the iron-men afford to take off; how much will the cotton schedule, how much will the woolen schedule bear reduction, or shall they be increased above present rates? And when Senators examine into the pretended reductions they will prove to be increases in nine cases out of ten, all assertions to the contrary notwithstanding. The swarms of lobbyists who are now here and have been for weeks are all begging for more bounty, more protection, or rather more taxation on the people to enrich themselves. These are the plates [exhibiting] that the conference committee have put up to a 60 per cent. tax after the Senate had peremptorily refused to consider all the propositions urged when we had these matters under consideration.

Yet the chairman tells us that they are making this increase of taxation in the interest of economy, carefully refraining from stating the facts, and frowning upon any attempt to expose their acts as improper and factious opposition. Of that plain crockery-ware, as you will observe by looking over the schedule that we have before us furnished by the Treasury Department, there were goods imported last year to the value of $4,400,000, at 40 per cent. The duty which the people paid on them was $1,775,294. By the provision now proposed on the same amount of importation at 60 per cent. they will have to pay $2,662,941, or an increase of $887,648 over the present high war tariff that everybody says ought to be reduced, and they will have to pay $443,824 by this change of rate on the same importations more than they would have to pay under the bill as it passed the Senate at 50 per cent. That is called a slight modification, a very slight increase, so insignificant that the chairman seemed to think that the report should be concurred in without a word. He did not even think that it was worth while to tell us what he and his co-conferees had done.

Turn to another change in the glass schedule and see what the autocrats of the conference have done. We struggled over the question of taxing bottles time and again, first in Committee of the Whole and next in the Senate; that question was brought up in season and out of season. We settled it at 30 per cent., and provided that bottles in which apollinaris and other natural mineral waters came should be free. No man ventured to make an argument worth calling such against that provision. It was admitted that when a bottle once reaches this country, whether it has apollinaris water in it or anything else, it competes when it reaches here with the domestic manufacture of bottles precisely to the same extent whether it comes free or pays a tax. We all agreed that if the people wanted these waters they had a right to have them.

We thought there were some things the people ought to have without being taxed to death, and that the water of the springs of the world that they might prefer as conducive to their health or their pleasure ought not to be taxed; all agreed that was right. Yet this conference committee, this secret conclave—they were in no proper sense conferees, yet I shall speak of them as such—not only imposed a heavy tax upon all the bottles in which apollinaris and other waters come, as you will see by turning over to the free-list, but they increased the tax upon all the other bottles used in this country from the present tax of 30 per cent. to about 100 per cent., although we had voted the proposition to do so down, as I have stated, every time it was offered, both in committee and in the Senate, until every advocate of the increased tax had given it up. Yet these gentlemen secretly and wrongfully bring it back with the tax of 100 per cent. on these things.

I regard their action as an outrage, in flagrant disregard of the known will of Congress. I read the other day (see page 91 of the RECORD for February 21), as Senators will recollect when I restate it, that we are only importing bottles valued at about $272,000 annually, even at 30 per cent. I showed then that the Representative from Milwaukee and the Representative from Saint Louis argued this question with great ability on the floor of the House. I read from their speeches; I will read from them again to show what an outrage has been perpetrated by the reimposition of this enormous and unnecessary tax. Mr. DEUSTER, from Milwaukee, said that he had talked to Mr. Bodine, the president of the National Glass Manufacturers' Association, and that Mr. Bodine told him that—

There were manufactured in the United States last year of quart bottles alone, used—horribile dictu—for bottling beer, 25,000 gross. I am informed that the quantity of pints is ten times as great, which would be 2,500,000 gross. Besides, there were many other kinds and sizes of green and colored bottles, vials, demijohns, carboys, pickle or preserve jars, and other plain, molded, or pressed green and colored bottles.

The importation of the very small amount, $220,000 worth, of glass-ware, embracing all these articles just enumerated, served to keep prices made by our manufacturers in somewhat reasonable bounds.

Even at 30 per cent. they manufactured all but that small quantity. Impose a duty of 100 per cent., and their prices will no longer be kept within reasonable bounds; it is not intended by the conferees that they shall be. The Senator from Vermont and his friends on the conference committee, in spite of the Senate, propose to give them a monopoly of this business. There will be no more importations of any sort, and the prices will be just whatever their protected pets see fit to ask; that is their favorite mode of reducing revenue, by trebling the burdens of taxation and putting the money of the people into the pockets of their friends instead of into the Treasury of the United States.

The Representative from whom I read put it well when he said:

That is exactly what these gentlemen of the National Glass Manufacturers' Association object to. They want the field all for themselves, so that their combination can dictate prices ad libitum. Of course they profess to have solely the interests of the poor workingman at heart; he is always pushed to the front when the interests of the capitalists require it. But these gentlemen knew that Congress would not consent to have the tariff increased.

True Congress would not, but this Representative had no idea of the power, no idea of the audacity or mendacity of a conference committee. He said further:

So some sleight-of-hand performance, some hocus-pocus must be resorted to. The world wants to be deceived; ergo, decipitur. A change from an ad valorem to a specific duty in this case might accomplish the purpose. "Eureka!" cries the poor, down-trodden glass-king. Now, what will be the result of this change? A specific duty of 1¼ cents amounts to over 100 per cent. ad valorem. I could show it to the satisfaction of every gentleman on this floor had I the time. As I have not, you will have to take my word for it. I can assure you that I have investigated this subject fully, accurately, and dispassionately. This proposed specific whould raise the price of preserve-jars per dozen, costing the consumer now $1.50, to at least $1.75. A dozen of "Protector" preserve-jars weighs about nineteen pounds. The additional duty being 1 cent per pound, these jars would cost the dealer 19 cents more. He of course would charge the consumer at least 25 cents over present prices.

Again he adds:

The bottles which our brewers use weigh 1½ pounds each, or 216 pounds per gross. That makes the duty on the gross $3.24, instead of $1.11, as now, or 2½ cents per bottle instead of .77 cent. Add the $3.24 to the New York value of $3.17 per gross and we obtain $6.41 per gross instead of the present price of $4.28, a difference of $2.13 per gross. A brewer wants for every 6,000 barrels of beer bottled exactly 1,000,000 bottles, or 6,952 gross. Add to the price of the gross by putting to it the new proposed rate of increase of duty of $2.13 per gross, and we increase the expense of bottling for every 6,000 barrels $14,807.86. There are brewers who bottle over 100,000 barrels annually.

The Milwaukee brewer who bottles 100,000 barrels annually consumes almost as many bottles as are imported into the United States in a year. The Senate of the United States refused to increase the tax above 30 per cent. But our would-be masters, disregarding our will, have increased it to a cent a pound, or 100 per cent. upon all that class of bottles in the interest of the bottle-makers, adding to the tax paid by a single brewer who bottles 100,000 barrels of beer annually over $200,000, in order to put the money into the pockets of some of their friends. They have, I repeat, in plain violation of the orders of the Senate, placed the bottles in which apollinaris, vichy, and other natural waters are imported on the taxable list, and whether they will impose a charge on them of 1 cent a pound or whether they will be taxed at 30 per cent. ad valorem will depend upon a careful construction of the conflicting clauses contained in the conference report, which, if Senators will read, they will see were inserted, if not for the purpose, certainly with the effect of deceiving and of requiring the Treasury Department to give the manufacturer here the benefit of the doubt and thus force the officials to decide that they shall pay 100 per cent.; because after the long and apparently successful struggle that we made not to allow the highest duty to be imposed in doubtful cases, the conferees provide—and I believe that was the point at which the Senator from Delaware and myself left the conference, it being the first important change in our tariff amendment, as there was no question in regard to the internal-revenue taxes which both Houses had acted on, and as to which no difference of opinion was developed, I suppose the relief given there is relied on to carry through on the single vote to which we are now confined all the atrocities of the tariff amendments:

If two or more rates of duty should be applicable to any imported article, it shall be classified for duty under the highest of such rates.

They have one rate of 30 per cent. for bottles filled; that is, they shall pay 30 per cent. ad valorem in addition to the duties on the contents. Yet the conference committee insert another amendment in these words:

All glass bottles and decanters, and other like vessels of glass, shall, if filled, pay the same rates of duty, in addition to any duty chargeable on the contents, as if not filled, except as in this act otherwise specially provided for.

That is 1 cent a pound, or 100 per cent. ad valorem on common bottles. One of these conflicting provisions in regard to bottles makes them pay 30 per cent. if filled, and another provision makes them pay the same duty whether filled or not. By the general clause as to the highest rate in doubtful cases they will be required to pay 100 per cent., in my opinion. If that is not a trick I do not know what to call it. I do not intend to charge any Senator with trickery, but the provision they have made that whenever there is a doubt, or it can be construed that there are two or more rates applicable to the article it shall pay the highest, these two conflicting provisions will give the officials a chance to tax it at the highest rate.

Mr. MORRILL. I know the Senator from Kentucky does not wish to misinform the Senate. The glass bottles to which he referred last are of a very different kind from green-glass bottles. These are flint and lime glass bottles which are imported, a very different article.

Mr. BECK. It may be that the last provision as to glass bottles does not cover apollinaris bottles. I do not know how these provisions will be construed. I do not want to make any mistake as to the facts, and I feel that my voice will fail me if I dwell at any length on details. I have looked at some other things in this report during the short time I have had it. I will call attention to them.

I will speak next of pig-iron. The Senate of the United States had a long and earnest discussion as to the propriety of a general reduction of tax in the iron schedule, as all agreed that reasonably cheap pig-iron was indispensable to enable the people to obtain cheap finished products. We agreed upon $6 per ton as being the proper rate to charge on pig-iron, with a like rate on scrap-iron, both steel and cast. It was debated long and ably in all its aspects. I have the debate before me. I had expected to read part of it, but I find that I can not. We agreed upon a duty of $6 a ton. After a while, when we had gone through the bill in Committee of the Whole, the Senator from Ohio threatened to vote against the bill, and to defeat all our efforts at giving the people any relief in internal or tariff taxation unless we increased the tax on pig-iron and upon such articles in the iron schedule as he demanded. I will read from his speech before I close. He read telegrams from Hon. Henry B. Payne, of Cleveland, and others, telling him to vote against the bill, and he said he would obey their orders unless we obeyed his.

I repeat that the Senator from Ohio threatened the Senate with the defeat of the whole bill. After all sorts of efforts, and when he had drawn the party whip over the heads of his followers with an audacity I had never seen equaled in any public assembly, by threats and every other means that a great, bold parliamentary leader can assert over the men who look up to him, he finally succeeded in having $6.50 imposed as the tax upon pig-iron.

That was the last cent he could obtain by promises, flattery, or threats, but his resources were not exhausted. The conference committee met, and under the lead of the Senator from Ohio, I may safely assume, at his dictation, they have imposed a tax upon pig-iron of $6.72 per ton and insist that we must accept it. What is the effect of that? Of scrap and pig iron 763,761 tons were imported last year. Seventy-two cents increase over the $6 that the Senate had agreed upon until the Senator from Ohio drove his party up to an increase would be $549,905. Twenty-two cents per ton—being the difference between this report and $6.50, the highest point to which the Senator could induce the Senate to advance after all the coercion he could impose upon his followers—22 cents per ton on 763,761 tons is $169,027 additional tax that this conference committee has placed upon pig-iron; and we all know that we have to accept that report as a whole or reject it.

What next? Take railway-bars. I want the conferees on the part of the Senate to tell the Senate why they have imposed the tax they have in the report they present for our acceptance. Let me show what they have done. This is another undoubted usurpation of power by the conference committee. Steel railway-bars were put by the Senate at seven-tenths of 1 cent a pound when weighing more than twenty-five pounds to the yard. That is $15.68 per ton. The House voted on that question also; if we are to look to the House, it imposed a tax of $15 per ton on rails. The House voted for a tax of 68 cents a ton lower than the Senate on steel railway-bars, the House bill providing for a duty of $15 and the Senate bill $15.68 a ton. Bear these facts in mind.

What did the conferees do? They have imposed a tax upon steel railway-bars of $17 per ton. The Senate had imposed a tax of $15.68, the House $15. The conferees, purporting to meet for the purpose of reconciling the disagreeing votes between the two Houses, imposed a tax on that article of $17 per ton, or $2 more than the House had imposed upon it and $1.32 more than the Senate had imposed upon it. I again ask any of them to rise now and tell the Senate by what authority they seek to impose a higher tax on this important article than either House imposed. I charge them with a gross violation of their power and a usurpation of authority not granted to them in doing so.

The amount of importation of that class of steel rails during the last year was about 200,000 tons. The report of the conference as to the tax upon that article is an increase of $400,000 on last year's imports over what the House had agreed to impose upon it, and of $264,000 over what the Senate had imposed upon it; and yet under pretense of reconciling the disagreeing votes of the two Houses they imposed an additional tax upon the people of $400,000 more than the House of Representatives had demanded and $264,000 more than the Senate had said ought to be imposed. If that is not an outrage upon the rights of this people, if it is not a violation of the known duty of the committee, while pretending to reconcile the disagreeing or conflicting votes between the two Houses, by placing a tax higher than either House had suggested, then I do not understand what it is, and can hardly characterize it as I ought in parliamentary language.

Mr. HARRIS. I want to ask the Senator from Kentucky if, in respect to the matter that he is now referring to, this conference committee has exceeded the vote of each of the Houses in regard to the tax imposed?

Mr. BECK. It has increased it $2 per ton over what the House had imposed and $1.32 over what the Senate had imposed.

Mr. HARRIS. More than either House proposed.

Mr. BECK. More than either House, to the amount of $400,000 more than the House of Representatives proposed and $264,000 more than the Senate proposed, based upon the importations of last year.

Mr. MAXEY. I should like to ask the Senator from Kentucky a question on the point he is discussing. The Senate fixed the rate of tariff on iron or steel rails at $15.68 a ton and the House fixed it at $15. Now I ask the Senator from Kentucky, in his experience in the House and in the Senate and in conferences, whether there has ever fallen under his knowledge or experience one case where a conference committee have inserted provisions in the bill against the vote of the Senate and the House.

Mr. BECK. I never heard of such an instance, and I do not believe any other Senator ever heard of it before; but there never was a measure like this before; it was conceived in sin and is now brought forth in iniquity; everything that has been done in regard to it has been done without the slightest regard to the interest of the people or the revenues of the country. Of course there is no parallel. I want some Senator to ask some one of these conferees, as none of them venture to answer my questions, why it was and by whose authority he imposed a tax of $2 per ton on all the steel rails for the railroads of this country above what the House had taxed them, and $1.32 a ton above what the Senate had imposed, unless it was to enrich some of the great monopolists of the country whose support and aid they look to as being worth more to them in their political ambitions than the welfare of the great mass of the tax-payers of America.

Mr. MAXEY. The object I had in view in asking the question was this: As the representatives of the people had fixed the tax at $15 a ton and the Senate at $15.68, these conferees, whoever they represent, fixed it higher than the representatives of the people or of the States fixed it. I want that fact placed before the people of the country.
